The first consignment of pictures taken by the Melies Company in the South Sea Islands has already been shipped to America and will probably have arrived in New York by the time this article appears in print. They will most likely be released during January, at which time we shall see something entirely new in the moving picture line, after which let us hope we may say to Mr. Melies in all sincerity, "Long may you continue to give us such productions."

GOING IN FOR RACING.

Motor boat racing is the newest fad of Miss Mae Hotely, the Lubin comedienne. The comedy section of the Lubin company is installed in Jacksonville for the winter, occupying the quarters formerly belonging to a boat club. Several motor boats form a part of the equipment of the winter plant and one of them, renamed the Leola May, in honor of Director A. D. Hotaling's little daughter, can show her propeller to any motor craft on the St. John's River, or at least so Miss Hotely maintains. So far she has proven herself correct for she has passed every boat tackled, but to make certain, the Lubinites are agitating a motor boat regatta and Miss Hotely will enter the Leola May against all comers among the local boats, for she has developed into a splendid captain and has the motor completely tamed. The Leola May is not primarily a racing craft, but she will meet in competition only boats of her class.

JOHN HARDIN AT EDISON STUDIO.

John Hardin, formerly connected with the Chicago office of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and recently associated with John Pelzer at the Orange office is now assistant manager of the Edison Studio in New York. Horace G. Plimpton, manager of negative production, found that the increasing amount of detail work incidental to the releasing of five reels weekly made the appointment of an assistant imperative. Mr. Hardin's thorough knowledge of the film business singled him out as being ideally suited to the position, and he accordingly took up his new duties on November 25th.

"Aurora Floyd"

Two-Reel Thanhouser Release.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE strongest quality of interest in this society photo-drama is the admirably-sustained suspense, but there is a delightful factor in the presentation of social gatherings that will be felt rather than perceived. The exteriors are chosen with clear understanding of what is appropriate. The interiors are a delight to the eye, and so is Flo La Badie. This young beauty plays the title role and has at last struck her true gait. I do not mean to say that she has ever limped. Au contraire, her breaks have been of exuberant spirits, like those of a happy child jumping rope.

Foreigners who have come here to receive impressions of America and make a commodity of them on the other side of the water usually live in hotels and complain that we have no social life. I have lived a great many years in Europe and have failed to discover any essential differences in this respect among civilized people. Wherever there is leisure and culture there is organized society. Social entertainments are very much alike the world over. They are formal or informal, according to the occasion, but there is a subtle grace and charm about American affairs of the better class that is rarely pictured on the screen.

Scene from "Aurora Floyd" (Thanhouser).

Whoever directed the production of "Aurora Floyd" caught the spirit of our functions in the beautiful ensembles presented. The men and women act and dance as they do in home entertainments, rather than in the strained and artificial manner of the stage—there is life and movement with no lack of refinement in the functions portrayed. Whether the play itself is located in England or America is of minor importance—it is produced here and is more or less representative of our ideals.

Flo La Badie has grasped the value of self-repression in her impersonation of the title role, has curbed the restless smile always trembling on her lips and has made a creditable effort to simulate the sentiments she is supposed to express. She is nearing the absolute necessity of being the character she is called upon to depict. Only then is an actress convincing. It is probably the director's fault that she does not give time to the consideration of taking her life at the crisis—to be or not to be is a question not to be debated and decided in a few seconds.

Those who have only half-formed ideas of what dramatic criticism means often wonder why I lay any stress on the quality of settings, but they possibly regard a photoplay as something to see and forget. I look at it as something to see, feel, think about and remember. It must make a visible impression of some phase of life to be of any real value, and one of the prices paid for success is taking infinite pains with small details that it may charm our senses with beauty of form. I accord high praise to the settings of "Aurora Floyd," to the refined acting in all roles and to the craftsmanship that delivers a production with the minimum of defects.

The play is an adaptation and deals with the situation of a young lady of wealth after contracting an unfortunate marriage with her father's groom. She elopes with the servant when a mere school girl, only to discover his drunken vulgarity when it is too late. Her father comes to her rescue after a year of misery by paying the groom an incredibly large sum in cash to leave the country. All this is very artificial and stagey, this handing an enormous fortune over to a servant on the strength of the latter's bare assertion that he will leave the country. This impossible act is barely covered by the sensational events following it.

On the strength of report that the groom is dead—the misalliance has been kept secret—Aurora is united in marriage to a wealthy young squire named Mellish. She is taken to his home and is there opposed by a domineering old housekeeper named Powell. Mrs. Powell evinces animosity for the bride from the outset and is constantly on the watch for some means to destroy her in the confidence of the young squire. The housekeeper's opportunity arrives when the real husband, the groom who was supposed to be dead, comes to apply for a situation and gets it.

By artificial means a strong situation is now set up, where natural ones would have done quite as well. Aurora's real husband becomes a servant in the household of the one socially recognized as her lord and master, and the groom begins at once to blackmail his wife, threatening to imprison her for bigamy unless she yields to his extortionate demands. Suspense runs high. She almost gives way to an impulse of self-destruction, but decides weakly to prolong her intolerable situation. She gathers all the jewels and money within her command and hands these over to the groom, though this act purchases only temporary immunity from the consequences of having two husbands at the same time.

Interest in the play runs high at this point, but tension is strained to the breaking point when it becomes apparent that the problem's solution involves the death of the first husband. This is merely an easy way out of a difficulty. A half-witted stable boy becomes the instrument. His curiosity becomes aroused; he becomes a messenger between groom and wife, and he is incited by greed. He witnesses the delivery of property by Aurora to her servant-husband and insists upon sharing the spoils. In an ensuing quarrel the boy shoots the groom, makes off with the plunder and leaves the revolver by the side of his victim.

Scene from "Aurora Floyd" (Thanhouser).

In a very large proportion of Western photoplays a weapon is left beside the murdered man and some innocent party identified as the criminal. Aurora Floyd is first on the scene, picks up the pistol and is accused of committing murder. In the trial that follows she is convicted and about to be sentenced. At this acute moment the real murderer is dragged in and makes a confession. He has been haunted by the victim and driven to confession in a state of mental collapse. All constraint is now over, and the innocent, wrongly-suspected one is clasped in the hands of Squire Mellish.

Question that instantly arises is that of her status at the end of the play. The first man was undoubtedly her husband. The second marriage was, therefore, illegal. As she is the groom's widow, not the wife of Squire Mellish, a second ceremony might have been more consistent if not appropriate. My criticisms are only given to perfect the present product and never in an unkind spirit. I have great faith in Mr. Thanhouser as a man and as an artist, but I have equally great faith that his company is going to improve on what has been done.

"The Red Man's Honor," Eclipse

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE reader will be rather surprised at first sight of the title given above to find that it is linked with the name of Eclipse. It is not often that a foreign company has the temerity to undertake a production of this nature, and it is still less seldom that a real success, such as has been accomplished in this instance, has resulted under the circumstances. Monsieur Gaston Roudes, the producer, is to be congratulated on having succeeded in giving us the atmosphere of Indian life and customs in years gone by, and he is also to be congratulated on having as his chief actor in the stirring scenes such an accomplished horseman and daredevil rider as Joe Hamman. Mr. Hamman has all the earmarks of a man who is familiar with life in the far Northwest, including close association with Indians of that territory, or of our own Northwest. Though he will deceive no one in his make-up as Red Hawk, the pronounced Indian facial type being lacking, he simulates well the stoicism and dignity of that picturesque warrior.

No one who sees this film can easily forget that awful ride in an ammunition wagon, over rough hills and through deep ravines, the vehicle sometimes tipping on one wheel or skidding on both, as the mad gallop continues. Joe Hamman will always be remembered as Red Hawk by this feat, and by dashing horsemanship in other incidents of the story. He reminds one of that champion of all rough riders, Tom Mix, and must have punched cows and burned the plains with horse hoofs at some time in his career. His Canadian ancestry makes this very probable. Mrs. Hamman, as the Indian maiden June Dew, gives a studious and pleasing characterization.

It is only natural that, in such a subject, produced on foreign soil, there should be, here and there, incongruities, and these will be discovered easily by observant American picture lovers; but they are lost sight of in the fine tout ensemble. In passing, however, the producer must be reminded, among other errors, that there is no excuse for using dynamite sticks, at a time when that explosive was undiscovered.

The photography of this two-reel subject is uniformly good. One much take his hat off to the Eclipse camera men for excellent field work. They have always been in good range and focus. It was not an easy task to preserve these conditions in the wild ride of Red Hawk.

Praise must also be given the correct costuming of the characters and the perfect setting of an Indian village. The sentencing of Red Hawk by White Eagle is a solemn and imposing spectacle.

Red Hawk, loves June Dew, the prettiest maiden of his tribe. She returns his affections and they spend many happy moments together.

Seated Bear, a rival suitor, also desires the girl for his squaw, and his heart is filled with jealousy. One day he surprises June Dew, down by the river bank, and carries her off in his canoe. Red Hawk chances upon the scene in time to witness the abduction, and follows in pursuit. He is wounded by Seated Bear in the first struggle, but recovers quickly and again overtakes his rival and mortally wounds him. Leaving his victim apparently lifeless in the water, Red Hawk starts in pursuit of the drifting canoe, rescues June Dew and returns with her to the village.

Meanwhile Seated Bear painfully makes his way to the shore and tells a false story of the encounter, charging Red Hawk with a crime. He then breathes his last. Red Hawk is summoned before the tribal chief, White Eagle, and the council. After hearing the evidence and consulting with his advisors, White Eagle pronounced the sentence, "Twelve moons hence thy spirit shall join that of Seated Bear."

The next day, filled with bitterness, Red Hawk leaves the village and rides away to join the army of the pale faces, where he is enlisted as a scout. The white men are at war with their brothers and are only too eager to secure his services, because of his knowledge of the country and of the forest trails. Soon after Red Hawk's arrival in camp, the commander calls for volunteers to destroy a bridge in the mountains and thus check the advance of the enemy. The attempt means almost certain death, but Red Hawk bravely undertakes the task, and immediately sets out with a wagon loaded with powder.

After a wild and perilous ride, the fearless Indian reaches the canyon directly beneath the bridge. Fastening the packages of powder to his shoulders, he begins the perilous ascent of the cliff. Step by step, clinging to roots and crags, he finally reaches the base of the bridge. He soon succeeds in placing the powder in position and, after lighting the fuse, makes his escape to safety, just as the whole side of the cliff is rent asunder and the bridge is blown to fragments.

Red Hawk does not waste a moment, but whips up his horses and starts back. He soon encounters scouts of the enemy, who pour a hail of bullets at him; but he escapes, and arrives at the camp severely wounded.

Red Hawk's bravery wins for him high regard among his white companions, and he is happy in the new life; but one night he dreams about the sentence passed upon him by White Eagle, and he realizes that his year of respite has come to an end. The struggle in his heart between love of life and dishonor is of short duration, and he sets out immediately for the village of his brothers, where he presents himself for execution. June Dew vainly begs him to flee, but he refuses. She then determines to die with him.

The date of release is December 16.

BEVERLY BAYNE HURT.

Miss Beverly Bayne was thrown from her horse last week on the Lake Shore drive suffering a fractured knee cap. Her physician hopes to see her out in a week or ten days. The accident occured when a passing motorcycle spun past right under the horse's head. Miss Bayne was thrown headforemost and landed on her knees in the street. A passing pedestrian picked her up and carried her to a nearby drug store where she was attended by a physician.

"The Shaughraun"

Boucicault's Famous Play Pictured by Kalem in Three Parts.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

IN the galaxy of features known as the O'Kalem plays, this production shines out with especial lustre. It embodies all the profits of previous experience. When this company began filming Irish plays on Irish soil it entered a new field of cinematographic endeavor. It demonstrated beyond all cavil that the motion picture is vastly more than a mere vehicle of cheap dramatic composition. Because of its efforts we can challenge the novelist, the historian and the dramatist to a combat of portrayal and description with no fear of the result for the prestige and superiority of the motion picture.

"The Shaughraun" shows an unwearied ambition on the part of the Kalems. They have in this production striven even more earnestly and have aimed even more skillfully and conscientiously than in any of their other Irish subjects, splendid as they all are. In "The Shaughraun," it seems to me, they have well-nigh touched perfection in the use they made of outdoor scenery. Nothing in art or literature can approach the ability of the gifted and painstaking producer in creating atmosphere. After we have seen the weird and rugged beauty of the stern and cliff-bound Irish coast, much of the temperament and much in the history of the Celtic race becomes as clear as crystal. We enjoy the sensation. We thrill with delight at this new way of learning things by the roots. If these three magnificent reels had not a single point of merit but the choice they made of characteristic stretches of this wild and romantic coast, they would be well worth seeing. Imposing, however, as all these scenes are, they form but a part of the true story and the true atmosphere, and we feel constantly that they have been selected for that purpose only. The selection does high credit to the director. I have seen splendid outdoor scenery in motion picture plays, but my enjoyment was greatly lessened by the fact that the producer evidently counted on the scenery to "pull through" a time-worn plot or a lot of amateurish actors and actresses. "The Shaughraun" gives us its scenic splendors as merely one item in its program of uniform excellence.

There are few families, even of this present generation, where "The Shaughraun" is entirely unkown. "The Shaughraun," it will be remembered, was one of the favorite plays and one of the favorite characters of Dion Boucicault, who died less than a quarter of a century ago. "The Shaughraun" appealed especially to its author, because it suited his own special artistic bent and abilities. It may justly be regarded as an Irish classic. There are few theaters in this country where "The Shaughraun" has not at some time or other had its inning. It has always been and is to this day a prime favorite with amateurs. It was, if we mistake not, on the strength of his success with "The Shaughraun" that Boucicault started his admirable American career. He himself tells us in his own vivid and charming way how he came to write this play. It was a "Shaughraun, a cantering Jack," as he defines him, who helped the great actor-playwright to keep a memorable engagement to play his part in "Colleen Bawn" when all Dublin was waiting for him and he "forty miles away."

The plot of "The Shaughraun"? It is mostly "The Shaughraun" himself. Here are the last two sentences of the synopsis: "Conn, through a subterfuge, comes to the rescue once more and the villainy of the plotters is exposed. The girls are happily united with their sweethearts and Kinchela and his accomplices are brought to justice." Conn is the shaugraun and Kinchela is the villain. Not such a bad idea after all to draw your conclusion from the end of the last chapter; it is easy then to imagine all the trouble that went before. A further detailing of the story seems like spoiling the anticipations of the spectators, especially when these anticipations of the spectator are realized to his eye by such an exceedingly clever company of artists as the players in this cast. I think the hardest part by all odds was that of the shaughraun. I cannot pretend to know just what the shaughraun means to the Irish fellow-citizens, but as I have seen the character portrayed on the stage, he seems to be a wandering minstrel, a tramp, a lazzarone and a daredevil rolled into one. He is an inveterate rescuer. Beauty or honesty in distress finds him on hand working overtime. He is shrewd, mischievous, quixotic and possesses all that strange mixture of impulsiveness and deliberation which the Saxon mind finds it so hard to understand and cope with. How was such a character to be portrayed in absolute silence? How was all his roguery and drollery to be made plain and full of enjoyment for the spectator without a single spoken word? Happily, Sidney Olcott is an Irishman. He did wonders with his eyes and his face generally. The shaughraun's good humor, his indestructible optimism and resourcefulness were brought out with rare artistic skill. The scene at the wake may have been a trifle overdone, but it will get innumerable laughs. Jack J. Clark gave a splendid impersonation of Capt. Molineux, Robert Melville showed a sympathetic rendering of the young Irish gentleman and hero, J. P. McGowan made a most acceptable Corry Kinchela, A. Lester excelled in the part of Father Dolan, Miss Gauntier upheld her great reputation as Claire, and thus it goes down to the most insignificant part in the play. I must not forget the fine bit of character acting done by Mrs. Brokaw as Mrs. O'Kelly, the mother of Conn, the shaughraun.

It would be easy to fill page after page with the peculiar merits of this production. I might dwell on the wonderfully realistic portrayal of man's struggle with the hostile forces of nature; I might speak of the advantage of the moving studio, which is set up amidst the real scenery and gives a perspective of real nature whenever a door or window is opened; I might allude to the startlingly accurate interiors, with which this company has taken such extraordinary pains. Plates were made for the ensuring of real interiors of Irish huts and cottages and from these plates the artist and director arranged the interior settings. I might mention, too, the excellent judgment which spared the splendid diction of Boucicault and goes for its subtitles to the text of the play whenever possible. It seems to me that such features showing so plainly and pleasingly the real progress and the vaunted possibilities of the motion picture ought to go a long ways toward lightening the burden of the exhibitor and toward a decent, substantial profit. To chase three such reels through the machine like so many ordinary releases would be a mortal sin in the catechism of motion pictures. If an exhibitor cannot make money with such a feature and please and hold his audience, he has no one but himself to blame.

Splendid, special music has been arranged for this feature.

VITAGRAPH PLAYERS ON A WORLD TOUR.

On December 7 a party of Vitagraph players left New York for a tour of the world. The group sails from San Francisco on the 13th. Among the places to be visited are Japan, Hongkong, Rangoon, Burmah, Singapore, Calcutta, Bombay, Port Said and Cairo. Then, as fancy may dictate, the party will visit Italy, France, England, Scotland and Ireland. Those who represent the Vitagraph company on the trip are Mr. and Mrs. W. V. Ranous, Mr. and Mrs. James Young, Harry Keiffer, cameraman; Gene F. Mullin, editor and photoplaywright. W. S. Smith will be in charge of the players. At Chicago Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Costello, together with their daughters, Helen and Dolores, after visiting relatives in Pittsburgh, will join the party. There is no date set for the return; it may be six or eight months hence.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

RECENT cable advices from London regarding film censorship as published in the great dailies of this country have created widespread comment in film circles, especially among American manufacturers, whose products are in great demand throughout the United Kingdom. These advices convey the information that G. A. Redford, who resigned his appointment as censor of plays not long ago, because of charges of inconsistency, has been made public censor of moving pictures. His first pronouncement, in his new official capacity, has placed under ban films showing prize fights, dog fights, mixed bathing, crimes, incriminating love situations, and biblical subjects.

American manufacturers need not feel concern about any of the prohibitions enumeraaed, except the fifth and the last. Some Western films can well be shorn of deeds of violence that have only a primitive appeal. Shooting at close range, without killing anything or anybody, is even worse on the nerves than bringing down an enemy—that is, in pictures.

Just why biblical subjects are on the proscribed list is not clear. It may be, in Mr. Redford's opinion, that some sacred subjects have not received that reverential treatment in production which is in accord with the veneration in which the subjects are held by Christendom. But granting, for the sake of argument, that one or two producers may have so erred: is it wisdom, or is it just, to prevent all others, who have a clearer insight of, and closer spiritual attunement with, sacred subjects, from engaging in such productions?

All progress made by man has been made at the expense of innumerable mistakes. Even Mr. Redford's progress, from what can be learned, has been subject to mistakes; and that he failed as a censor of plays has not barred him from becoming a censor of films. Let us hope that he will be most successful in his new official capacity, and that he will be wisely guided, so as not to retard the advancement of knowledge by depriving the moving picture of any part of its rightful domain.

A mistake, discovered and corrected at the outset, is a safeguard against committing further mistakes. Mr. Redford's change of front, on the matter of film productions of biblical subjects, will save him many heart aches; for he is bound to discover his error in the end.

Miss Russell's Lecture Tour.

Miss Martha Russell is scoring a big success down in Texas, where she is engaged in lecturing on moving pictures in which she herself has appeared as leading woman. The press is devoting much space to Miss Russell's work, and she is praised for her ability to interest people as a lecturer as well as for clever pantomimic work in pictures.

In a letter dated November 18, Miss Russell writes that, in Texas, excepting a few places, the moving picture business is far behind what it is in the North, the majority of the picture theaters being store shows with small capacities and unattractive fronts. The only music in the theaters, in the main, is a mechanical organ. Some exhibitors are waking up and are becoming convinced that, in order to be successful, they must build larger houses. Within two years, it is expected that the picture business will be transformed in the Lone Star State.

Miss Russell's tour through Texas will last 30 days, and the first 12 days of this time was spent in filling contracts with six licensed exhibitors, who guaranteed Miss Russell $100 per day. Wherever Miss Russell has appeared, business has been phenomenal. Her manager, Mr. Chas. C. Pyle, announces her coming attractively and effectively by means of one-sheet lithographs, heralds, photographs, etc. In addition, the press is well supplied with reading matter and cuts. Miss Russell carries four reels of licensed films of the Essanay brand, and shows two of them each day. She appears on the stage between the reels and explains how moving pictures are made, dwelling on studio work, trick pictures, etc., and on incidents which happen during the taking of pictures. Her hardest work at these appearances is to answer a continuous volley of questions. People want to know the names of their favorites in pictures, and if they are married or single. A great number also seek information on the writing of scenarios.

MISS MARTHA RUSSELL.

Since leaving Chicago, Miss Russell has appeared in the following cities: two days at the Princess Theater, Ottumwa, Ia.; three days, St. Joseph, Mo.; Sanger Theatre, Shreveport, Ia.; two days at the Dixie Theater, Dallas; two days, Greenville; two days, Paris; one day, Sherman; one day, Denton; two days, Corsicana; two days, Clebourne; two days, Bryan; two days, Hillsboro; two days, Waxahachie; two days, Austin; two days, Taylor, and two days, Temple,—all in Texas. After a return date in Austin, Miss Russell will appear two days at the Star Theater, Houston, Tex., owned by Mr. Xydias, who inspired the present lecture tour. Mr. Hulsey, of the Queen Theater, Galveston, has contracted for the two following days, after which the following cities will be visited: Beaumont and Port Arthur, Tex.; Lake Charles and Alexander, La.; Little Rock and Hot Springs, Ark.; Memphis, Tenn., and thence to Chicago, about Jan. 1, by way of Springfield, Mo. Miss Russell will then resume her work as leading lady.

Miss Russell writes in part: "Of all the theaters I have visited, I have found only one that is not taking the Moving Picture World. It is really their Bible. They not only read the news, but they are forever looking at the advertisements to find the new articles that are being introduced. In Dallas they are building three new beautiful houses, costing as much as $100,000 each. Mr. Hulsey, who is building the Queen, is one of our livest exhibitors. In my estimation, he is the Montgomery of this territory. I find that the licensed films predominate here."

A Second American Stock Company in California.

S. S. Hutchinson returned from California, Monday, Nov. 25, after an absence of four weeks. During his stay, Mr. Hutchinson organized a new stock company, with headquarters at Santa Barbara. This makes the second American company now in California, and it in no way interferes with the former Western company.

The new company will be engaged in producing subjects of a general character, such as dramas, comedies, etc., leaving the former Western company uninterrupted in its special field of Western subjects. This new company takes the place of the Eastern company, which has been disbanded. It is the intention to close the Chicago studio during the winter months. A new studio has already been completed at Santa Barbara, also a plant in which negatives can be developed.

W. Wallace Reed is the director of the new company in the West.

More About Cut-throat Competition.

The following letter, bearing the date of Nov. 21, has been received from E. F. Clipson, owner and manager of the Banner Theater, one of the competitors of the Star Theater, on Milwaukee Ave., which is offering matinee programs of five reels and four acts of vaudeville for five cents:

"I wish to thank you and The World for the editorial entitled 'Cutthroat Competition Exposed,' in the issue of Nov. 23. Permit me to call your attention to some inaccuracies in the figures quoted, and to point out that the Star Theater is an even worse offender than your article reveals.

"Instead of 900 seats, the Star has a normal capacity of nearly 1500. I am told by a former manager of the place that under rush conditions, by utilizing benches in the balcony, the house can seat 1600 people. Instead of four reels of pictures and five acts of vaudeville, as you state, they run five reels and four acts at matinees for five cents. In addition to this, they have souvenir days every day and give away silverware, etc.

"The Schaefer Bros. are the active lessees and managers of the Star, and one of them is a member of the executive committee of the Local League of exhibitors. Do you suppose that accounts for the fact that protests to the League have so far produced no action?"

Startling and Pleasant Surprise for Wm. N. Selig.

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Co., had one of the most startling, and at the same time one of the most pleasant, surprises of his life, on Monday afternoon, Nov. 25. Mr. Selig had just settled down to work after lunch, when his office doors are hermetically sealed to all callers. At that time of day even his office staff must not interrupt him by entering, all consultations being carried on by telephone.

In the midst of his seclusion, a tremendous volume of sound, created by numerous brass instruments, thundered into his sanctum from the outside offices, through the closed doors. Before he could get to the door, to ascertain the cause of the musical reverberations, a resounding Indian war-whoop filled in a momentary lull in the crash of music. Then he discovered that Lewis Hill and his Cowboy Band, accompanied by a score of Blackfoot braves, in full war costume and paint, had taken possession of the premises. The office force had surrendered without striking a blow, and were evidently enjoying the situation and the surprise of their chief.

Then the visitors were shaken warmly by the hand, in turn, for Conductor Hill and his band and the Indians are old friends of Mr. Selig. They are just now one of the features of the United States Land Show, at the Coliseum, this city. They hail from Montana, and from the Glacial National Park in that state. Among the Blackfoot braves were chiefs John White Calf, Long Tim Sleep, Lazy Boy, Fish Wolf Robe and Jim Big Top.

A regular serenade by the Cowboy Band was in order, and, during the intervals, Fish Wolf Robe performed a heap big Indian dance, and Caruso, the sweet-throated tenor of the Lewis aggregation, warbled so effectively and strenuously that a large crowd gathered on Randolph Street, four stories below.

The cowboys and Indians appeared in one of Selig's great Western productions some time ago, and they availed themselves of the first opportunity, while in Chicago, to call and pay their respects to the big chief of Indian war pictures.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Don Meaney, who formerly conducted the vaudeville department of the Chicago Examiner, has been appointed to take charge of the publicity department of the Essanay Film Co. Mr. Meaney has been in the newspaper game for years, and has the reputation of being clever and popular.

Wm. H. Swanson, was in the city Friday and Saturday, Nov. 22 and 23, attending the funeral of one of his married sisters, who recently died in Colorado. The remains were brought on to Chicago, and the funeral took place from the residence of Mr. Pelisle, on W. Van Buren St. Mr. Pelisle is a brother-in-law of Mr. Swanson's and of the deceased. The remains were interred at Roseville Cemetery, this city. Mr. Swanson returned to New York November 24.

F. B. von Teuber, official photographer for the Maderia and Matmore Ry., the state railway of Amazonas, Brazil, spent a few days in the city last week. The offices of the Madeira and Matmore Ry. are situated 1,400 miles up the Amazon River. This railroad is 160 miles long and cost $60,000,000. It was built in order to make a way for the transportation of rubber around the dangerous falls of the Amazon at this point. Millions of dollars worth of rubber and many valuable human lives were lost in the effort to transport the rubber in vessels, over the falls. Mr. von Teuber states that the moving pictures and still pictures of the scenes along the Madeira and Matmore road, taken by him, are sent to Europe for advertising purposes. Mr. von Teuber had with him here a remarkable collection of still pictures. Some of these show the Indians of the far away region in Brazil, and are the first of this kind ever seen in the United States. Mr. von Teuber had charge of the burial rites of Emmett O'Neill, an expert camera man, whom Wm. N. Selig sent down to the Amazon to get negatives of the remarkable scenery along that great river. Mr. O'Neill was a victim of yellow fever. Mr. von Teuber brought with him to Chicago, the personal effects left by Mr. O'Neill in Brazil. Mr. von Teuber left for New York at the close of the week, where he will remain until Nov. 30. Thence he will proceed to Paris, and will next visit his home people in Vienna. He will return to Amazonas, Brazil, in February.

$55,000 PICTURE AND VAUDEVILLE HOUSE.

It is reported that Mr. Robert Rath, a capitalist of Dodge City, Kansas, is behind the project of a $55,000 moving picture and vaudeville house in course of construction in that city. Mr. J. Abbott, one of the pioneer motion picture men of the West, and who was at one time connected with the Fitchenberg Enterprises in New Orleans and who also managed several picture houses, has been secured as manager of the new theater.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

A LOCAL newspaper has been gleaning the opinions of leading members of the theatrical profession on dramatic criticism, the test questions being: "Does good criticism help a bad play? Does bad criticism hurt a good play?" As the same questions apply to motion pictures they are of interest here. Some of the actors interviewed have replied in a sort of a critics be ——— tone; others are noncommittal; some say views of critics only receive passive attention from the public; some believe much time and money must be expended to counteract an adverse press critic, even if it be unjustifiable. Taking the answers as a whole, they leave the two questions very much debatable. If the questions were put to motion picture exhibitors, their answers would be of a far more decisive character. The columns of motion picture trade journals devoted to the review of film productions are among the most valuable of the publications. It cannot be denied that they attract and hold the interest of the more intelligent and better class of exhibitors. They are certainly carefully read. Whether or not all who read are guided by them is an open question, but it is known that a great many of the exhibitors read them when searching for good films. One exhibitor says he does not rely entirely upon the reviews, but considers them of great value as a safety valve, in that they serve as a check upon the claims of producers at times when they may be too zealous. If it were not for the reviews, in the opinion of this particular exhibitor, there would be unlimited imposition by false and exaggerated claims. The warning frequently sounded by reviews given fairly and honestly spares many an exhibitor an outburst of indignation, not to mention frenzy of a torrid degree.

An instance cited by the exhibitor in support of the value of film reviews was one in which a film exchange man had induced him to take a subject against his wishes. The subject had been extensively advertised as a hit and a money maker, but a criticism upon it gave the exhibitor an impression that the claim was not sustained by the subject itself. Yielding to the arguments of the exchange man, the exhibitor took a lemon. He was severely criticised by his patrons for failing to make good on his elaborate announcements. "The producers make claims which self-pride and self-interest will many times make them feel they are honest in their announcements, and the exchange men will back up the claims on the assumption that the producers would not make them if they were not well founded. Both are apparently working with honest motives, but the exhibitor who relies upon them without exercising his own judgment gets a frost bite sometimes that puts a bad crimp in his self-possession, and the sting is increased in severity, when the confiding exhibitor sometimes learns, when taking the exchange man to task, that the exchange must get returns for the investments made in films and the customers must take their chance as the consumer does with eggs. "All of which, after all, is quite true," said the exhibitor, "and that is why I consider the review columns of great value. They are like the lighthouses or the block signals. They help us to steer clear of the bad things at times when we have no other disinterested sources of information to guide us. The rotten egg argument is all right, so far as it goes, but it does not go far, from the exhibitor's point of view. The housewife who gets stung loses only a few cents. The exhibitor who stings his patrons, no matter how innocently, is liable to lose from his box office—I was about to say—an amount that would start him in the egg business."

The arguments offered seem to sustain the review columns to an almost indisputable point. There are some people who maintain that their main purpose is to fill space and cater to the manufacturers. Anyone who knows anything about the publishing business, must know that reviews, whether they be of books, theatrical productions, or photoplays, are losing propositions, especially where they are lengthy. It costs money to set up every line of them and the publisher foots the bill, so that to say they are intended as space fillers, sounds, to say the least, illogical. The same may be said of the statement that they are mainly intended to cater to the manufacturers, especially when it is known that exhibitors value them. An exhibitor was heard to say: "If the reviews of films were discontinued, the exhibitors would be among the first to ask for their reinstatement.

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, has arrived in this country for a tour of the vaudeville theaters. One of the first announcements made, is that the great actress was induced to make a tour of the vaudeville theaters, only on the plea that the masses wanted to see her. This sounds like "press talk," but it carries weight with it. The only exception taken to it is that much credit for the origination of the tour is due to the motion pictures. They blazed the trail. On all her previous visits to this country, the masses were unable to get in touch with Mme. Bernhardt, on account of the prohibitive prices charged for tickets. When it was announced several months ago, that the great actress had consented to appear in motion pictures a sensation was created. Many declared it was a suicidal step—the blotting of a glorious career. The pictures were made, and packed all the houses at which they were booked, night after night. An astute manager was quick at seeing the point and at once made to the actress a proposition which, in its turn, was looked upon as nothing short of audacious. Think of "the great Sarah" going into vaudeville! Hundreds of thousands of the masses had heard of her great histrionic career, but the same number never had an opportunity to see that upon which her fame is based until the motion pictures brought her before them. Then they wanted to see the actress herself. The wish they had so often expressed in years gone by was intensified to such an extent by the motion pictures, that the promoters of the tour saw a good chance for a profitable investment in presenting the actress at prices within the reach of the masses, whose keen appetite for the opportunity was created by the once despised "movies."

The Bernhardt tour confirms statements made in these columns a few weeks ago, relative to a proposition of a leading New York theatrical manager to make motion picture reproductions of plays and send them on the road in advance of tours by the regular company. It was stated at the time that the photoplays would instill a desire to see the original productions and that both would make money. In this connection the Bernhardt tour will be watched with interest by all interested in both the regular theatrical field and the motion picture industry. It is stated that Mme. Bernhardt is to receive $8,000 per week for twenty weeks. If money is made on this outlay and other large expenses, look out for future developments in the photoplay field. Of course, Mme. Bernhardt, herself, will be a great box office magnet, but that will not rob the motion pictures of the credit they will deserve as a most valuable forerunner. There will not be enough cameras and operators to keep up with the demand of stars, and managers, anxious to get in on the good money proposition, to wit: me for the "movies," them for the road.

Another view is presented. Will the Bernhardt tour prove a fulfillment of the declaration of the vaudeville managers last summer, that they would put in their houses attractions that would draw the people from the picture houses? It has something of that color, hasn't it? But there is a consoling thought. There is only one Bernhardt, and her stay in this country will be limited. Others may come, and others may go, but the "movies" will go on——— well, they will keep going for some time yet, and don't you forget it.

A recent release was most successful in including all that makes a moving picture tiresome. The same plot has been enacted regularly every month for two years; there were Indian signals, captures, escapes, hair-breadth escapes, cross country runs, a heroine on horseback, and to make the whole positively new, instead of one or two rescues, there were three thrilling rescues, either one of which would be impossible under natural conditions, unless the participants on one side were blind, deaf and dumb. For a troop of mounted soldiers to gallop right up to a lot of bandits without being noticed, is wonderfully not realistic. To "get there" at a precise half second of time seems to be the object, and all means, no matter how false, must be made to order; hence—a tiresome picture.

The Moving Picture Educator

LOOKING BACKWARD.

It is always profitable to look back over the road—especially if it be a climb—to the better appreciation of the distance covered, the heights attained, the experience gained, the improvement marked with the all-round profitable results. To-day cinematography has written its name high, and is thoroughly and universally interwoven in the arts and sciences, besides being the world-wide entertainer, illustrator and educator. What a difference between the pictures and subjects of to-day as compared with but a few years ago! The early flickering, weak films are replaced by flickerless, strong—perhaps perfect—photography. The "old store" dingy, dark, sometimes loathsome picture places, have given place to miniature palaces of much light and more luxury. The subjects have grown from the ridiculous to the sublime; in every line the one word that marks this progress is neither upward nor onward, but culture.

It is very interesting to look over the copies of the Moving Picture World of from two to four years ago, for herein is registered every step and place of this development; such a review is full of interest. While the issues of but a few years ago were full of every evidence of wise and solid beginnings, it is those of recent date which prove the nature of both the beginning and the growth. Three years ago the educational picture was little more than tolerated as a dry and necessary relief from the wholesale mimicry of the other films; to-day the educational picture is the tone given, and backbone strength of all exhibitions. It is with pride that it can be shown that the educational picture has been the "open sesame" into every greater field of good that the moving picture now enjoys. These high class pictures have lifted to higher levels the manufacturer, the exhibitor, the pictures and the houses. The "entré" has been made into every class of society and into every home and hall of learning, culture, religion and pleasure. The common reputation of the picture is rapidly following its true inward character, anything which now appears upon the screen unsuitable to the present standard and demand, is immediately self-condemned by the contrast to its surroundings, and variance with its associates; that same shudder which one experiences when the discordant note destroys the harmony of sound in music, is experienced by the now educated public when a picture does not harmonize with the required, and well known standard. A new world is open before us which is most singularly and appropriately named The Moving Picture World. A world in which the language is universal and its every effort and attribute made contributory to the advancement of its inhabitants.

Learning never stops or even pauses, for in this "world" the child and the man are in the same school, even if in grades far apart. We have surely reached the zenith of progressive powers, when in looking backward upon the old cinematographyless world from which we have come, through the chaos of early endeavors, to the perfection of present light and revelation, our backward glance, and present condition, gives us a strange and wondering ide of the future. Many wise and prophetic minds predicted the development of conditions beneficial to the general improvement and well-being of the human family, the very flying machine is only present-day energy, bent upon carrying out ideas of generations ago.

We fail to discover, however, any predicted future which would blend a mighty moral and mental illumination in such a new and marvelous degree as to seem to make an entirely new world out of an old one, so changing and overturning former conditions as to revolutionize the whole course of educational nature.

Such is the actual case, however; we are living in a new world, moving onward to a destiny beyond present comprehension, but not beyond a possible prediction. We can imagine what we may not realize, yet we know that ordinary multiplicity based upon the last five years marks a future in which progress will—unlike the past—neither be laborious nor against opposing forces; but natural, expected, and according to a logical order. The child of the new world will grow in stature, in years, in knowledge, in a competency equal to the times, by natural and normal means; interest, pleasure and knowledge will combine to the exclusion of the painfully slow progress of toil, drudgery and disappointment. The Moving Picture World will be an ideal one in which to live and grow.

SOME THOUGHTS ON "THE MIRACLE."

This picture is a new departure; it is in a class by itself; it opens a new field for scenario ideas. It does not belong to the light easy type; it is strong and heavy. From beginning to end there is no waste of thought or time; thoroughness and fullness require the concentration of the faculties of the beholder. Had it been a picture of the present times, to follow the subject might be easier, but its medieval setting demands an additional attention to what becomes a most excellent picture in carefully studied and prepared scenes, truthful and appropriate to the time it represents. If cinematography had been shown some centuries ago, this picture might readily be looked upon as a production of those feudal days, in that it appears as a veritable historic film as though taken then, so real are its masterly reproductions. Apart from the subject of the play, the pictures are very instructive in medieval architecture, manners, habits, dress and customs. To follow a picture of this kind without one single modern touch, absolutely devoid of any of those things which have taken the place of those of older usage, is most instructive and entertaining.

As an exhibition of high-class cinematography it is at once a masterpiece and an example which may be profitably studied and followed by American manufacturers. The whole workmanship is thorough and finished. The acting is wonderfully good and even throughout, with an entire absence of anything to detract. Of the moral of the play, its best apology is that it is a religious legend, otherwise we would not care for the scenario writers of to-day to be so unduly familiar with sacred things. "Honi soit qui mal y pense" must be the attitude of the mind which approaches the picture.

ABSURD ENGLISH CENSORSHIP.

Censorship has taken on new life in England; an individual censor who some time ago had retired under counter-censorship of his official duties, has returned to power. It is often dangerous to reinstate a discharged servant—public or private—as such a reinstatement too often carries with it a spurious vindication which makes the particular servant or official more overbearing and officious than before, and it is not long ere "the last state of things is worse than the first." In the censorship of photoplays there is wide range for many opinions, leaving little room for definite decisions as to which is and what is not admissible. There are subjects, however, in which there is not this wide range, and where it is possible to come to immediate, safe and sane decisions either—positively and negatively. A notoriously bad picture is readily and universally condemned; in like manner a good picture is not only immediately approved, but accepted with many demands for more of the same kind. When the English censor announces that the first pictures to receive his condemnation are religious pictures, he immediately and without further evidence of his ability proves himself absolutely unworthy of his office; he is either ignorant, incapable, or a fanatic. That such a "ban" upon religious pictures shows ignorance is conceded on this side of the Atlantic, where we are working for more of them as denoting the highest educational possibilities. As a purifier of the polluted realm of picture-making there is nothing stronger than the religious pictures, besides the uplifting effect upon every phase of public moving picture work. The only excuse for this enlightened (?) censor is that perhaps he is an atheist, if so rather than exercise his pernicious powers the sooner he is censored out of office the better. Again it may be that he is a religionist—of the most vehement kind; if so, can he not be persuaded to again put a chain and lock upon the bibles, close the art galleries and the libraries of the country, take away religious liberty and escort us back to the dark ages. It would seem that this English censor cannot distinguish between cheap moving picture work and educational cinematography. In America, from the days of Plymouth Rock—which still stands—until to-day, religious education is free and full, educational cinematography is working its onward and upward way—the religious picture will not only not be restricted, but demanded more and more. Those who have fought the battle for the present standard do not hesitate to denounce the ignorance of the English censor's proposals; he belongs to an order of growth that would die in a day in the pure fresh air of knowledge, light, religion and freedom.

The true question of religious pictures is not that they shall be censored out, but that they shall be censored in. We must and shall have them, they must be censored as they come to see that they are true to original text, that they convey the original teaching, that they become a true and literal exponent of the written word, a veritable bible of pictures. It is sacrilege to produce the wrongful; here is room for legitimate censorship; it is a species of bigoted ignorance to forbid them, and we trust the English people at large will approve our views.

THE PICTURE AND THE TEXT-BOOK.

It is certainly strange that any need prevails, calling for an explanation of the relationship between the picture and the text-book. The picture is an auxiliary to and supporter of the text-book and not by any means a supplanter; as a mighty illustrator, it may possibly abbreviate the matter of much now upon the written pages. This abbreviation, however, will not only be necessary, but welcome, as the picture comes to instantaneously clear many a labored and tedious explanation.

It positively seems that those who know least about the possibilities of the pictures are those very people who will be most greatly helped; if a fear prevails that the picture is going to lessen the labors—and consequently the laborers—let it be understood that no instrument of progress has yet been guilty of doing anything but improve conditions. There may be great changes affecting the next generation, which will accordingly grow up with the newer conditions. All true progress is positive, beneficial, and helpful, often most welcomed by those who first feared it. All classes of teachers need sound no alarm at the approach of cinematography as an educational force.

The writer knows full well that the two greatest difficulties in teaching are discipline and concentration; when these are lacking that nerve-racking energy required is sometimes unendurable. The picture eliminates these, and then in addition begins to impart such knowledge as will require text-books to supply the detail, with the teacher to act as the knowing, well trained, connecting link between the two. The teacher, the picture, and the new text-book, will work in splendid harmony in the new school.

George Ober the Original Out-Door "Rip Van Winkle."

THE theatrical press has paid due tribute at the passing of that sterling old player, George Ober, who at the time of his death was a valued member of the Vitagraph stock company, with such comic masterpieces as "An Elephant on His Hands" as well as many well-posed dramatic bits to his credit. For George Ober learned his business in the days when appropriate and effective pantomime was as important a part of the player's art as make-up or elocution, and a "bit" was interpreted just as carefully and conscientiously as a "lead." Indeed, it was his effective performance of all sorts of parts in the Holliday Street Theater stock company, in Baltimore, that brought George Ober to the attention of that splendid old actor, and trainer of actors, Frank Mayo, in the stock-starring days; and when he organized his spectacular production of "Macbeth," he took the boy to play the First Witch. Later on Charles Hoyt, expert sketcher of character types, and selector of players to fill them, picked Mr. Ober to create The Oldest Inhabitant in "A Temperance Town," and Uncle Tody in "A Contented Woman"—characters in which he was never superseded.

George Ober was also a great "Rip Van Winkle," but as the Jeffersons monopolized the "big time," he conceived the idea of condensing it for vaudeville, which he did with the able assistance of his wife, Adelaide Ober, who was a clever adapter, and his stepson, Frederick L. Power, a master of stagecraft. The playlet was first tried out at the town hall of Hastings-on-the-Hudson, the home of the Obers, and was such a success that we conceived the idea of playing the mountain scene, which is all pantomime excepting Rip's part, with the Biograph film of Mr. Jefferson. I remember that Mr. McCutcheon was not very much impressed with the idea at first, and made us put up $50 before he would let us have the film.

Fred Power then had a special transparency drop painted, with a moonlight effect on a waterfall, which served to distract the eye of the spectator for an instant while Mr. Ober, after a lightning-change from the young to the old "Rip," slipped through a vampire-cut and took his place in the same position where he had fallen asleep. The concluding picture was a stereopticon photograph of the Old Rip as he lay asleep and the substitution of the living actor for his life-sized likeness was one of the cleverest bits of stage illusion that I have ever seen.

Although I was "manager" of the company, and knew just how and when the trick was worked, time and again I have sat in front, worrying and wondering whether George had gotten through the "quick-change" in time—for no matter how closely one watched, you could not detect the transformation, and the awakening of that picture to life was really startling. The affliction and untimely death of Fred Power, then director of the Bush Temple Theater in Chicago, prevented the perfection of his patent rights in this illusion, which was lost to the stage without him. As a matter of record, however, this tabloid, "Rip Van Winkle," was first presented on March 8, 1901; and in The Mirror of March 30, 1901, appeared the following advertisement:

THE GEORGE AND ADELAIDE OBER CO.
(Five Capable People),
In a Vaudeville Version of Washington Irving's Legend,
"RIP VAN WINKLE."
Presented in 3 Scenes—35 Minutes—Introducing for the FIRST TIME IN DRAMA the BIOGRAPH MOVING PICTURES Showing Mountain Scene—Rip's meeting with Hendrik Hudson's Crew—Rip's Toast, and 20 Years' Sleep in exactly 2 Minutes.

George Ober was also the first to present "Rip Van Winkle" in the Catskills, which he did at Palenville, Green County, on August 9, 1907. C. B. Schaidner, a local photographer, and Underwood & Underwood, of New York, took some remarkable scene photographs, which attracted the attention of the moving picture people, and the following season at Hastings-on-the-Hudson the Edison Company photographed Mr. Ober's performance in action. I never saw the completed film, so do not know whether it turned out well, but I believe this was the first attempt of the kind on such a big scale.

Later Mr. Ober was engaged by the Cameraphone to pose for moving pictures of "Rip," to fit the phonograph records of Joseph Jefferson; and he did it so cleverly that, although their conceptions of the part were somewhat different, every time you heard the voice you saw the pictured Rip's lips move in exact unison. I believe this company went to pieces later, and do not know what became of the negative; but up to that time it was one of the most remarkable moving pictures ever taken—and although every "stock" has had a hack at "Rip" since then, I doubt if it has ever been excelled as an example of "suiting the action to the word—the word to the action."

WILLARD HOLCOMB.

GAUMONT IN EDUCATIONAL FIELD.

The fact that the Gaumont firm is giving special attention to educational pictures is very encouraging to the educator; these pictures are in various subjects and give promise of great help to the growth of a system in production, responsive to the demands for all kinds of instructive films. There is abroad a noticeable desire to meet the requirements of all kinds of institutions, which are now demanding substantial use and results from the cinematograph.

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH AN EDUCATOR.

Power's Cameragraph No. 6-A has been installed, through the New York Film Exchange, at the American Land & Irrigation Exposition at the 71st Regiment Armory, 34th Street and Park Avenue, New York City.

Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E. SINN

Observations and Suggestions.

AMONG the many good features of a Selig production, there is one in particular which appeals to the picture-player. They possess a directness of purpose—a clarity of motive which gives you something tangible to work upon. This company gave us special music for "Christopher Columbus," but even without that one did not need to be a particularly good improviser to put a fairly good accompaniment to its scenes of the Spanish Court, the storm at sea, tropical lands and Indians, with a religious as well as martial atmosphere running throughout. "Monte Cristo" was a big dramatic picture, which, while it no doubt would have been more satisfactory had there been music arranged for it, yet the picture followed so closely along accepted dramatic lines that a careful pianist should have little or no difficulty in adapting appropriate music thereto.

And now comes their big animal picture, "Kings of the Forest," in two reels. Two things are at once apparently called for—something suggestive of South Africa and something suggestive of wild animals in the jungle. Both are easy to notice in the picture, but hard to get. So far as the South African music is concerned, about all we have from that country consists of old Dutch hymns, and as the picture does not convey a religious atmosphere it is better to pass this up. The neutral scenes can be acceptably accompanied by intermezzo, caprice and valse lento movements. The jungle scenes can be accented to good advantage by some of the well known "Oriental" numbers like "Imam," "Mystic Shrine," etc.; and the heavy "mysterious" (with bass solos) to be found in the various editions of dramatic music. I will give a program nearly as I heard it played. There is room for improvement, but it gives a good basis to work on. After once seeing the picture you will have little difficulty.

"Kings of the Forest" (Selig).

First Reel.

1. Neutral; "Intermezzo" preferred. (Scene opens with exterior of a South African farm.) Music continues until title: "Sweethearting."
2. "In the Shadows," by Finck. (Or any pretty little sentimental number.) Continue until title: "A Labor of Love."
3. Waltz Lento (First part of "Reine," Will Rossiter) until "Later."
4. Any light intermezzo or allegretto for three scenes until animals are seen in jungle.
5. "Mystic Shrine," "Imam" or some Oriental number may be used. (Rifle shots occur.) Play through three scenes.
6. Neutral (waltz will answer) until title: "John Vogel, etc."
7. Heavy mysterious for jungle scene. Through scene.
8. Agitato until she enters house, subdue one scene, then work up until title: "Sona Starts for Home."
9. Moderato and crescendo until end of reel.

Second Reel.

1. Neutral moderato for one scene.
2. Heavy—on the mysterious order—(lions' den) for two scenes.
3. Schubert's "Erl King" (mysterious with bass solo) until she unhitches the ox.
4. Semi-agitato for three scenes.
5. Waltz Lento until lion is seen coming down road toward wagon.
6. Soft agitato (watch for shots) until child gets out of wagon.
7. Hurry (p. and f. according to action) until two men and woman are seen at wagon.
8. Waltz Lento until end of picture.

The same company issues a very pretty picture in "Old Songs and Memories." Several old-time songs are called for in this, which are mentioned in their advance advertisements. The titles of these songs are as follows: "Comin' Thro' the Rye," "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," "I Cannot Sing the Old Songs," "How Can I Leave Thee," "John Brown's Body," (also known as the "Battle Hymn of the Republic"), "Always the Same," and "Darby, My Own." Drum taps may be introduced very softly to accompany marching soldiers while song is being played, but if this is done be careful to keep it down, as the song is predominant, while the other is only a vision or memory.

"Anne Boleyn," a recent C. G. P. C. release, is another picture well worth taking care of. I heard it accompanied by an organ, though I believe a piano could do as well if not better. It runs like this:

1. "La Cinquintaine" until title: "A Secret Admirer, etc."
2. Waltz Lento (Charme d'Amour) until title: "The Queen Will See You To-Night."
3. Semi-mysterious until page enters with candles.
4. Gavotte (or Novelette) until she kneels.
5. Very short religioso (a few measures only) until after letter is shown.
6. Barcorolle from "Tales of Hoffman" until king takes letter.
7. Agitato (p. and f. according to action) until title: "The Queen Refusing to Stoop, etc."
8. Plaintive (Meditation from "Thais" for example) until: "Duped by the Intrigues, etc."
9. Introduction to Suppe's overture, "Pique Dame." (This scene shows the parliamentary body finding the guilt of Anne. The accompanying music should be grave and dignified with a slight mysterious character.) Continue until title: "Before the Scaffold."
10. Very plaintive (Massinet's "Elegy" is appropriate); continue until change of scene, then:
11. Chopin's Funeral March till end of picture.

A CINEMATOGRAPH PIONEER.

Beverly B. Dobbs, the noted Arctic explorer and pioneer cinematographic photographer, whose wonderful polar pictures "Atop of the World in Motion" (The Original Alaska-Siberia Motion Pictures) opened at Weber's Theater, for an indefinite engagement, beginning Sunday evening Dec. 1, is a product of New England, but went to the Pacific coast in 1888. It will be interesting to know that he had one of the first photographic studios in Seattle and he was located in a tent on the lot which is now occupied by the Seattle Times. From this place he moved to Bellingham, Wash., where he remained until he went to Alaska. When asked what caused him to leave his chosen field of work to enter into a more dangerous one, such as he has been engaged in for the past ten years, he said:

"Well, it was this way. A good many years ago, more than I would like to tell, I got it into my fourteen-year-old head that I was going to be a photographer and I have been trying to be one ever since. In 1900 I joined the mad rush to the new gold fields at Nome, Alaska., with the intention of opening a studio and supply house, which I did. It had never before been my good fortune to visit a country so teeming with novel sights and adventure and I was immediately impressed with, and fascinated by, its intensely interesting features. At once the thought came to me, what a great thing it would be to bring this wonderful country to those who could not come to see it. What a great educational power a complete set of motion pictures depicting the life of the Far North would be. I finally began the work, little dreaming the enormity of the undertaking. The deeper in it I got the bigger loomed the project, and I felt like an ant looks when it is carrying a crumb of bread up a hill. But I figured that an ant always gets there and so I kept on. Many a trip was made at a great expense of time, energy and money, only to return with little or no results for my efforts, because of unfavorable climatic conditions and other obstacles which could not be overcome at the time. However, after a number of years of alternating failure and success, I finally accomplished in getting a collection of pictures of which I am proud, and I am highly gratified with the appreciation which the public has accorded my work. Mr. Dobbs is offering state rights for sale at a bargain, but intends to withdraw his pictures from the market in 60 days.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Good News Indeed.

THE Kalem Company announces that it has cut the price of its one sheet A. B. C. posters to ten cents each where purchased from the distributors, the exchanges or the A. B. C. company direct or ten cents plus postage where the matter must be mailed, the postage adding about two cents a sheet. A new contract for a greater edition of each issue makes possible this big cut in price and it is probable that now that the Kalem company has paved the way the other companies will fall in line. This is the first move toward cheaper advertising matter and all credit is due the Kalem company for its pioneer work.

Strong for Specials.

The Mozart theater, Los Angeles, which is run by Mrs. Anna M. Mozart, is another house that goes in for special features, running each one a full week. Mrs. Mozart writes that she would like to have state rights buyers know that she is always ready to give time. She writes:

> I will play all clean features, Biblical, Topical, Travel, Educational or Dramatic, but they must be clean and free from crime. We have a high class house, playing a full week to 10 to 25 cents admission.

She uses a talking machine for operatic records and a Photo-Player orchestra. Independent subjects are used. She distributes a single sheet program 5½ by 8 inches with the program on one side and the coming attraction on the other.

Winstock Publicity.

Melvin G. Winstock, of the People's Amusement Company, of Portland and the rest of Oregon generally, has found a new way to break into print. It's only a two line item, but it appeals to Mr. Winstock as about the biggest thing around. It goes in the classified columns and announces the birth of a grandson. The new arrival came November 7th. He is not yet in the picture business, but he will study under a mighty good master. Our congratulations.

But it is not every manager who can break into print with a grandson and Mr. Winstock offers these additional tips:

> I quite agree with you that there are two methods of advertising, one is the Merchant's way, who advertises a sale and who sells a ten cent article for 5 cents. He knows what he wants to advertise, he knows the price, and he knows where he wants to draw the people. Then there is that indirect form of advertising which is the more permanent of the two. In the former method of advertising the minute the bargain ceases the public interest ceases. In the other form of advertising there has been an impression made in the public mind concerning the greatness, the superiority and the attractiveness of the thing which cannot be eradicated, and that gets permanent patrons, permanent good opinion, and permanent good impression.
> I have tried to combine the two, but newspapers get on to the fact very quickly that a man is getting free advertising when he advertises the specific thing and gets free advertising, but when he conceals the thing in the second form of advertising he can generally put over his stuff and make good.
> Now as an illustration I have evolved a scheme of giving monthly entertainments to all the employees of every kind and character from the manager down to the smallest usher, on the second Wednesday of every month. At this entertainment we put on the pick of the first run films of the week and whatever singing and musical turns we have that week, as well as serving refreshments, etc. At that time we will give a substantial cash prize to that employee, man, woman or child, who gives to the Company the best suggestion for the good of the business. I am doing this on the theory that the public opinion of a big company like ours is very frequently affected by what the employees of the company may say about it. If there is an undercurrent of feeling against the company it can be very quickly communicated to the public, which is the most sensitive organ in the world.

Coming Edisons.

Here are some good Edisons for the last half of December, the most important of which, from an exhibitor's point of view, is the Oppenheim story, "The Crime of Carelessness," a companion to "The Workman's Lesson." A negligent mill owner, an obliging inspector and a careless workman are the three factors in a mill fire that on the eve of the workman's wedding results in a fire that destroys the mill while the bride-to-be is lamed for life before the workman rescues her. It is a pictorial preachment on fire prevention and is a vital story as well as a powerful lesson. If you have a house in a mill town you can flood the vicinity of the mills with dodgers and posters and get back the cost of the extra advertising and more. It is a subject that is worth more than a day or two in such a location. In any town there is bound to be interest in the story. Commence now to interest your local papers. The story is to be released December 30th.

The sixth of the "What Happened to Mary" stories brings her back to America to a mysterious man who gives her a home and who points to the portrait of her mother, though the mystery of her parentage is not yet solved. The plot is "getting warm," as the children say and the story is in many ways the most interesting of the series thus far. There is a spirited series of complications and plenty of action and suspense. The release date is December 27th.

"Lady Clare," from Tennyson's poem, was made in England with real castles and the beautiful English parks for a background. It is a story of unusual pictorial value and the poem itself is closely followed. Interest the libraries, literary clubs and schools in this and get a bumper house. It comes December 17th.

"An Old-Fashioned Elopement" is another of the English pictures and is based on a poem by F. G. Fox. The lover, spurned by the parents, disguises as the post boy. He leaves the chaise in the middle of the ford and rides off with the girl while the father fumes and swears—but doesn't get his feet wet. It is a clever conceit and admirably preserved the old English spirit of the posting days.

Prices for Specials.

Lou J. Wittman, of the Star theater, Hamilton, Ohio, sends in a sheaf of programs and a letter in which says:

> I have recently started issuing my usual weekly folder giving the advance list. I had discontinued them during the warm months, but I think it the best publicity medium to get the business without the rather expensive method of newspaper advertising. I only use the papers to advertise the two and three reel features.
> If you consider them of any benefit I will gladly send copies to any manager who will enclose a stamp. About a year ago your comment on these programs brought a flood of letters requesting a copy but only two of the writers enclosed a stamp so I did not reply to all and did not send more to you.
> We have some great managers in Hamilton who will pay $10 or $15 a day for a special feature, put on extra music, spend about $10 for advertising in the papers and then show at the usual price of three reels for five cents. There isn't a house in the city that will seat 500 and being a manufacturing town of about 40,000, the business done in the afternoons doesn't pay expenses.
> I think that this schedule should obtain in all places:
> Two reels—five cents.
> Two reel features—ten cents.
> Three reel features—fifteen cents.
> Saturdays, Sundays and Holidays—at least ten cents.
> No feature to be shown on Saturdays, Sundays or Holidays. Should this scale be adopted universally I am sure it would have a beneficial effect.

Get Matinée Business.

It seems to us that if we had a house in a town of 40,000 we would get that matinee business or break a leg, even if most of the men and many of the women did work in factories. We've told how in past issues and there is nothing particularly new to be said on that subject, but surely in a town that size some of the women and a few of the men can be educated to the matinee habit. The trouble is that they do not seem to have been educated.

There is no reason in the world why the habit should not be cultivated. We take it that no one ever has sought to break ground and so the field lies fallow, but the business is there and someone should go after it.

Two Aspects of Features.

There are two ways of looking at the feature: as a money getter and as a business getter. Wo do not think that a feature should be shown for five cents, but at the same time there are occasions when a manager can well afford to lose money on a series of features if he gets the people in the habit of coming to his house. If he loses twenty dollars on one feature a week and builds up his business the other six nights, he should be ahead of the game at the end of the week, but once he has built up trade it is just as simple to educate the patrons to a slightly higher admission on the special nights. Many managers habitually raise the price to 25 cents for three reel features merely because they have educated thir patrons to an appreciation of the fact that the feature is worth more. We think that every five cent house should make an effort to get into the ten cent class and many of the ten cent houses could profit by going to fifteen and twenty or twenty-five cents, but this is largely a matter of territory.

The Folders.

Mr. Wittman's folders are the vest pocket size, a four-page sheet listing two of the three reels run. Where space permits there is a brief reader or two. The leaflet is compact and comprehensive, but we think that Mr. Wittman could afford an occasional advertisement when there is no feature. It is not what newspaper advertising costs that counts. It's what it brings. With a small house and only a night business the advertising appropriation cannot be very large, but perhaps the leading paper would give free advertising in return for a coupon good for a matinee admission that would start the matinee habit. Then when the habit is established cut off the coupon and there you are with more than money enough to pay for the advertising. The experiment would cost practically nothing, since the house is kept open, and it might be made to yield surprisingly big returns. We hope that Mr. Wittman will act on the suggestion and report the result. If you want a sample of his folder send a stamped and addressed envelope of the usual commercial size. And be sure to address the envelope before you send it. When you ask a favor do not put the grantor to trouble and expense. It's three cents to you, but it may be six dollars to the man you ask

Just Plain Brains.

There's a man by the name of W. Scott Wilkie, who runs the Wilkie Theater, Eureka Springs, Ark., with his brains. Not long ago a man came to town in charge of the Queen Elizabeth reels. It was as dark and stormy a night as the most expert novelist could desire and the Bernhardt man condoled with Mr. Wilkie on his hard luck in having the expensive reels on a night when few were likely to come. But Wilkie, he just smiled. The night receipts were already in the bank, because he has solved a problem that has worried men in larger towns than Eureka Springs.

A week before the special was due, the grade and high school teachers announced that the Bernhardt picture was coming. The Girls' College made similar announcement and everyone received a postcard announcing the coming of the film in this fashion:

Eureka Springs, Ark., Oct. 24, 1912.

My Dear Sir:

Having been over five years an exhibitor of the very best motion pictures, also the owner of five different theaters in Kansas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, I am privileged to make you what I consider the most extraordinary announcement of my career as an exhibitor, and that is the SUPREME PHOTOPLAY OF THE WORLD'S GREATEST ACTRESS, SARAH BERNHARDT, in "QUEEN ELIZABETH." When America's foremost director of the legitimate stage, Mr. Daniel Frohman, is compelled to recognize the progress and advance of the motion picture, it is but a short step for him to become individually associated with their production. Therefore America's master director presents to you the world's master of dramatic art, supported by her favorite players. Think of it. Theaters of the larger cities have turned thousands away at an admission price of 50 cents. This will be the most expensive film I have ever handled, and for this reason the admission will be 15 cents for children and 25 cents for adults, provided special advance tickets are purchased on or before Wednesday, October 30. Remember the date of exhibition is Thursday, October 31, and tickets purchased on that date will cost 25 cents for children, and 50 cents for adults. I ask your loyal support, both moral and financial, in bringing this production to Eureka Springs. It will be shown at Harrison, and I'll never let it be said that we were lacking in appreciation here. Sarah Bernhardt will never visit Eureka Springs in person. You would pay $5 for a seat to see her in the larger cities. She is now 69 years of age, and her course is rapidly drawing to a close. All proof that this is a rare, and possibly your only opportunity, of ever seeing her.

Don't fail to get advance tickets at reduced prices, and REMEMBER THE DATE—THURSDAY, OCTOBER 31st.

Yours truly,

AT THE WILKIE. W. SCOTT WILKIE.

FREE LIST SUSPENDED.

And the people knew that when he said it would cost double to wait until the night of the performance, with the result that the house was practically sold out the day before the subject was due.

The Advance Ticket.

Those who came early got one of these tickets:

WILKIE SPECIAL ADVANCE TICKET For
MME. SARAH BERNHARDT
In QUEEN ELIZABETH
Shown at Wilkie Theater, Thursday, October 31st.
ONE FULL ADMISSION, 25 CENTS.
NOTICE.—Advance sale closes Wednesday, October 30th. Prices advanced on date of exhibition to 25 cents for children and 50 cents for adults.

The child's ticket differs from the full admission only in the single line and the color, two tints being distinctive that there may be no mistake.

At first Mr. Wilkie kept up the special sale until the afternoon of the day of showing, but he soon saw the wisdom of closing the special sale the day before, and now if you want to wait and see if it is going to rain on the day of the exhibition it will cost you double and the full sale is practically closed the day before the subject is due. It has been worked with "The Coming of Columbus," "The Lady of the Lake," "Cinderella" and "The Money Kings," and it has worked every time. Here is what Mr. Wilkie has to say:

I personally announce all of my specials to my patrons, as I believe that beats the slides.

I also impress upon them the fact that I am paying extra money for the film, but don't want it to cost them a penny extra, but in that case they'll have to share the risk of inclement weather with me by getting the special advance tickets, which I have printed. Otherwise, they'll have to pay extra on the night of exhibition. I first sold tickets at special advance prices up to noon of the day—or night, rather—we don't run matinees—of exhibition. But when I saw them hold off till the last minute, I got busy and closed the advanced sale on the night previous to exhibition.

Mr. Wilkie advances his belief that this scheme will not work in places with a population of more than 20,000, but we know houses right here in New York where the scheme is just as good as in the small town, for residential New York, and most other cities for that matter, is merely a collection of small towns so far as the locality theater is concerned.

It All Depends.

A couple of weeks ago a manager wrote that he had tried programs with a lithographed cover thinking that it would pay better than the papers, but had been forced to drop the idea because it did not prove successful.

Now comes George C. Cacum, of the New Clarksdale Theater, Clarksdale, Miss., to show us precisely the same cover with this comment:

Enclosed please find program, which we use as our "Daily Bulletin," having discarded advertising in the "Cigarette Paper," which is called here a daily.

I find this scheme much better than the newspaper, and the results are wonderful.

Whereas I paid ten dollars a week for space in the paper, this way of advertising costs me only two dollars a week more, and I get about 25 per cent. more business than heretofore.

If you think it worth while, would like to hear any suggestions that you have to make, through your columns, as I am sure you will find something that may still improve my system of advertising.

I have a different design for each day in the week, about fourteen different ones, and I send these bulletins all over the town just as I did with ordinary dodgers, and I find the people simply waiting for them.

Occasionally I have a few daffydills inserted between the titles and the printing does not cost me one cent, as I have given the program to a printer, and he gets the ad money.

Stock Covers.

The covers are stock covers issued by a lithographic concern. They are finely printed, but produced in such quantities that they can be sold for the price of indifferent work on a special order.

Mr. Cacum does not issue a weekly program, but puts out the single four pages every day with the program for that day on the third page and advertisements of tradesmen on the second and fourth pages. If it is possible, we think it would be well to give the leading subjects for the following day, but apart from that we do not think that much comment is needed.

Each exhibitor must face his own public and test it out, no two audiences are precisely the same, but we think that where a program is used this colored cover scheme is a good one and no more expensive than a two color printing locally produced.

By letting the local printer do the hustling for the advertisements one source of worry is removed, but at the same time there should be enough profit in the advertising to pay for the printing and the cover. We think that three thousand feet of new film would be better than six thousand feet of commercial, but this, too, is largely a matter of local conditions.

Stands Them Up.

The Polk Theater, San Francisco, sends a one-sheet program and announces that it is the only house in town that gets ten cents for pictures alone, explaining that "getting ten cents" means standing them up.

The program is not pretentious, but it is well printed and gives enough description of each reel to whet the curiosity. The usual arbitrary allowance of so many lines to each subject is discarded in favor of a disposition of the space according to the relative importance of the titles, which is a much better scheme. We like a line to the effect that "Our pictures are musically interpreted by Mr. Lyle C. True." That has an opulent sound. The program also announces that requests for certain favorites will be complied with the following week where practical. It is all clean-cut work; not big, but good.

In Keeping.

The Colonial Theater, Wichita, Kan., recently had the Queen Elizabeth subject and sent cards to the ministers and city officials. With the card was a note sized sheet of gray paper with an attached half-tone of Mme. Bernhardt. Nothing else appears on the first page and indeed the only printing is on the third page, where this announcement appears:

It has been and always will be the policy of the Colonial Theater to strive for the uplift of the moving picture, and we feel that we can go at it in no better way than to encourage such productions as Sarah Bernhardt's four-reel masterpiece, "Queen Elizabeth."

This historic photoplay will be shown next Monday and Tuesday at our house, and we respectfully submit the enclosed tickets, trusting that you may find the time to take advantage of them.

In this struggle for a cleaner, higher plane in photoplays, we need your help. Come.

Sincerely yours,
THE COLONIAL THEATER.

We cannot be coaxed to admire an old English face where the type book is full of gothics that carry the same suggestion of engraving. It is eye-trying to have to read more than one line in the confused text and it is no longer the last word in style. Outside of this the Colonial announcement will take a lot of beating. It is dignified, earnest and appealing. H. N. Spitzer says the scheme repaid him beyond his expectations. It not only pays Mr. Spitzer, but it helps every picture theater in town when something like this is done right. It means dollars taken from the box office to give away free tickets for a special feature, but for every dollar that goes out in this fashion from ten to a hundred or even more will come back. That's bread upon the waters that comes back cake; rich, fruity cake, with icing.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

What Universal Wants.

HERE is a statement from Joseph Brandt, who, by the way, is not the editor, but the publicity man of the Universal Company. He writes:

> We want all the photoplays we can get and are willing to pay better prices than heretofore. Western dramas are particularly needed, but we are always in the market for good, strong comedies and dramas.

"More than heretofore" means that ten dollars will no longer be the flat price, which will be good news to a lot of writers. But remember that you're not going to make a sale here or anywhere else if you send in the wishy-washy stuff. It must be strong, telling, effective stuff to find a sale anywhere, and there are a dozen writers on the Universal staff who can write an average story and never even wiggle a whisker.

Going Up.

H. Tipton Steck, former photoplay editor for Essanay, but more recently press representative, has gone another step up the ladder and now when his stenographer transcribes his letters she puts "Manager of Negative Production" under the "Very sincerely yours."

Two or three years ago Mr. Steck was a free lance writer. Being a resident of Chicago, he naturally got after the Chicago companies and his short comedies brought him in touch with the Essanay. When they needed a photoplay editor he was put in and later given the more responsible position of publicity promoter. Now he is the manager of production in charge of all branches of production work. It just goes to show that if you do good work and keep it up long enough you will land somewhere.

And this is not an invitation to flood Mr. Steck with congratulations and scripts more or less simultaneously. Send your congratulations if you will, but send the scripts to the editor, as usual.

Sticking to the List.

Every week we receive complaints that this or that company is holding a script and will not reply to letters. Sometimes it is one of the established companies, but more generally it is one of the wildcat companies that are going to do big things some day.

This department does not recommend sending scripts to any company unless it be the Kinemacolor or a company in affiliation with one of the three distributing agencies. Kinemacolor releases direct to the exhibitor and is established. The other companies that release through the General Film Company, the Universal or Film Supply have a market for their goods. They sell, therefore they can buy, but when a company cannot sell what it manufactures it cannot very well pay for the raw material manufactured no matter how good may be its intentions. Certain feature film companies outside of the releasing agencies are as solidly established as those with weekly releases, but most of these do not ask outside scripts as they make few releases and procure these from special writers, but others, with no financial standing, take scripts and when they go through temporary or permanent insolvency the scripts are lost. Stick to the list supplied by this paper and you'll be reasonably safe. If you want to gamble, try the others.

Copyright.

One of the "talking points" of some of the photoplay agencies is the promise that the agency will copyright your idea for you. This is on a par with the other promises. As we have explained before, a photoplay cannot be copyrighted. It has been flatly and definitely denied that right by the congressional committee having the matter in charge. The published photoplay; the photoplay that has been filmed may be copyrighted, but until the play has been published the copyright office has no more interest in it than in the script of an unpublished short story or novel. The photoplay script can be copyrighted only by printing and publishing as a book and entering for copyright as such. That entry reserves to the author the dramatic and all other rights, but such publication would be an expensive proposition unless a dozen or so were copyrighted at one time.

Any concern that promises to copyright your stories is making a promise it does not intend to perform and the rest of its promsies may be judged from that. Keep away from them.

Here's a Good Hint.

Here's a hint from A. Roy Sillman, of Philadelphia, who offers his suggestion for the benefit of the craft. He writes:

> Although not a writer of photoplays I take pleasure and interest in writings, suggestions, criticisms, etc., pertaining to the welfare of The Moving Picture World. The short time I have been reading the department headed "The Photoplaywright" I have found it beneficial and instructive, taking all in and saying nothing.
> At last I have decided to write you of a suggestion which seems plausible enough to me for criticism.
> In a great many plays where cowboys are used it is noticed in scenes requiring the writing of a note or letter a pencil is easily obtained for the occasion from about their person. It may be the practice of ranch hands, etc., to provide themselves with writing utensils yet it seems the average working man of the city cannot furnish a pencil when actually needed.
> The public is looking for the true Western atmosphere in cowboy films. In order to help perfect these films I am offering a suggestion for the attention of the writers of this class of scripts.
> I have taken several of the cartridges used in the ordinary make of revolver or pistol and find by using the lead ball a mark legible enough for reading can be made similar to that made by the ordinary hard lead pencil, while the softer made ball makes a heavier mark.
> A cartridge with the powder removed and the ball replaced would make a fair, in fact, a good, safe substitute of the pencil.
> In a "close up" or in fact any case where writing is required such a scene would be greatly improved upon by the use of a cartridge instead of a pencil and would tend to suggest true western style, eliminating the criticisms of the observing and fault finding public.
> Respectfully yours,
> A. ROY SILLMAN.

Writing With Pains.

One of the most famous of the newspaper humorists is a photoplaywright who sells his stuff, but most of those who have won fame as writers and dramatists affect to look down on photoplay and seem to think that anything that has their name attached is good enough for the motion picture people. The superior attitude of most of these men higher up is irritating. Not long ago a "regular" dramatist sent a script to the Lubin Company and in returning it to the writer Lawrence S. McCloskey added a hint or two as to the cause. Instead of being grateful the dramatist came back with a statement of his affiliations and the threat to tell the other members of the Society of American Dramatists and Composers. It is refreshing to read McCloskey's reply. Here it is, that you may share our pleasure:

> We deeply regret that you take our rejection of your photoplay so much to heart. We also regret that we cannot always see things exactly as our contributors see them and at the same time do our official duty as our proprietors see it. It is the desire of this department to advance the best interests of our establishment from both a monetary and an artistic standpoint.
> We are really a kindly disposed editor and would like to let a fellow being down easy. To that end we sometimes tell white lies to the authors of rejected manuscripts when we are sorely tempted to tell the honest truth. Sometimes the truth leaks out in spite of us. Then they get back at us, taunt us with our lack of judgment and predict our early downfall. Of course, we have to take it and look pleasant.
> If we send back pearls and precious stones believing we have only looked upon base imitations, it's one on the house and they stand for it like little men.
> Our firm is searching for the highest grade of photoplays. There is no film manufacturer paying or willing to pay a higher price for material than the Lubin Company. But we insist, selfish as it may look, in using our own judgment as to its quality and value. We believe we can spot an original idea when it dances before us. We are also able to recognize the limping old soldiers of many wars whether served in burnt cork, bolomania or ornamented with variegated whiskers.
> If you were to sit in this chair some morning and go over the pile of scenarios arriving with that mail (seldom less than a hundred) you would be amazed at the names of some writers prominent in the list of novelists and playwrights who submit worm eaten, moth blown themes accompanied by letters setting forth their claims to originality. Originality! The word has almost become a joke.
> I'm glad you didn't accentuate too strongly any claim to a new idea in "————," otherwise I should have to remind you of Bartley Campbell's "————," Boucicault's "————," Dave Higgins' "————," or, to go 'way back beyond any of them "————."
> The high standard of work done by some members of the Society of American Dramatists and Composers is well known in this department. We have had many valuable contributions from them. We are looking for more. We have also received many manuscripts from the same source that were utterly worthless, and suggested that the author felt he was condescending to write for the film maker, that any old thing with his name tacked to it ought to be snatched up hungrily. He is mistaken. We would gladly welcome more members of the society among our writers but they must consider us seriously. They must study our requirements. In spite of your suggestion to the contrary, we know good stuff when we see it, and the name of the author or his connection with some high sounding club or society doesn't dazzle us or bias us in our opinion in the least.
> If our prices do not suit then it is up to them to raise them by the grade of their contributions. We pay from $25.00 to $150.00 even more for photoplay scenarios that we recognize as good and valuable. We also know trash when we see it no matter where it comes from.
> Personally, the staff of this department would give a big gleeful yelp to see the prices of photoplay work go up into the easy street figures but we want to see something with a showing of red blood and humanity in exchange.

There really are editors who would rather send out $100 than $10 for a story but they will not send out $100 for the $10 story and they will not buy names alone. We have scores of complaints that scripts are underpaid and more than once we have requested of the studio the privilege of examining the script and we rarely have found that the complaint of underpayment has been made with good foundation. It may be a good story and yet not a good photoplay, but if the author would study the needs of the camera stage he would be able to write to good effect.

The First Photoplaywright.

Here's a picture of the first man in America hired to write plots for motion pictures. He is Roy L. McCardell, who is best known to newspaper readers as the creator of Mr. and Mrs. Nagg and the Jarr family. He is also editor of the Metropolitan Section of the New York Sunday World and the author of a book of verse.

ROY L. McCARDELL.

It was in 1897 that the Biograph Company needed the services of someone to write the fifty foot subjects for the Biograph and Mutoscope. Up to that time anyone around a studio wrote the plays, but the demand for mutoscope pictures (the slot machine) was strong and McCardell, who was then on the staff of the New York Telegraph, was put on the staff as author, editor, producer and press man. He has been at it ever since and sells from two to four scripts a week. He has an intimate knowledge of the motion picture camera and has written more than four hundred plays in addition to his early comedy product. Some of his recent scripts have been The Troubadour's Triumph, Rex; Dear Little Dancing Dora, Kinemacolor; There's Music in the Hair, Vitagraph; He Would Be a Hero, Kalem; and two of the Weber and Fields successes for the Famous Players Film Company.

Getting Next the Editor.

There is only one way to "get next" to the average editor. Send him the stuff he wants to buy. He doesn't want to get long letters from you telling how good he is and how good you are. He knows he's good and the way to convince him that you are is to send him stuff that proves it, not by writing personal letters and addressing the scripts to him personally and not to the studio. If you register the scripts to make certain that he gets them himself you are doubly damned, for you are putting him to the trouble of signing receipts and your very eagerness to reach him has given you a black eye even before the envelope is open.

If you would spend the time you waste trying to get his name and then getting in touch with him in improving the grade of your story you'll get ahead twice as fast and there may come a time when of his own volition the editor will write you personal letters and make friends. It cannot be done by addressing a man instead of a manufacturer. It can be done only by making good. As a general thing the man who wants to establish the basis of a personal pull is the man who needs a pull most because his scripts are poor, and you do not want to get into that classification. Let the editor make the overtures. If you are deserving of intimacy he will, but leave it to him, don't write yourself down a fawner and disgust the man you are trying to win. Let your scripts be their introduction and the friendship will follow.

English Prices.

Some of the English companies are asking for American scripts. If you notice the advertisement remember that they are paying English prices. The average is about £1 or even fifteen shillings and two guineas is considered the height of liberality.

It is so recently that English manufacturers awoke to the need of better stories that they are not yet educated up to prices and it would be well, before you make any submissions, to find out precisely how much the company will pay.

Inquiries.

NOTE.—No questions can be replied to by mail. If your answer does not appear in this issue, look next week. No addresses can be given in this department. A list of studio addresses will be sent if a stamped and self-addressed envelope acompanies the request. Requests for the names of players should mention the part played in some photoplay and not merely ask for "the lead," "the heavy, "the girl," etc.

P. D.—A full reel is one thousand feet. It may contain ten scenes of one hundred, according to the length of those scenes. The average play has between twenty and thirty-five scenes. A two-part photoplay is one in two reels or parts. Occasionally they are designated as two-act plays. No data is available as to the number of children employed by the various companies. Mostly the children are "jobbed," or hired by the day, when they are needed.

ORIENT—Miss Ormi Hawley was the Juliet in Lubin's "The Players." George Reehm and Miss Frances Ne Moyer were the sweethearts in the same company's "Love and Treachery. We do not identify that Lux. The "Fall of Troy" was released early in 1910. It was a special, and therefore without definite release date.

C. L. M.—Wilfred Lucas was the bad man in "Under Burning Skies," and the title in "Enoch Arden." Edwin August is now a Powers player, having left November 23rd, to join the Los Angeles section. Write the Universal for the photograph. Miss Jean Gale was Billy's sister in Lubin's "When Father Had His Way." Irving White was the father.

D. D.—In framing questions do not quote from the reviews, but mention the character by name. The Answers Man does not see all the releases. It takes all of the time of two men to cover the ground with approximate completeness. The reason for the use of two names is that Miss Adrienne Kroell was Aurora Floyd in Selig's "Her Bitter Lesson," Margery, the society girl, in "Into the Genuine," and Violet Dale in "The Fire Fighter's Love." Miss Winnifred Greenwood was the poor woman in "Where Love is God is Also," Nellie, the trapper's daughter in "Into the Genuine," and Charles Clary's wife in "A Detective's Strategy." You will note that both were in "Into the Genuine." We do not find such a character as Carl Winterhoff in the company's cast of that play. Isn't it possible that you have mistaken the title? Walter C. Miller is the soldier lover of Miss Pickford in Biograph's "The Informer."

E. J. G.—Dell Henderson was the bachelor in Biograph's "The Sunbeam." "Was He a Coward?" is a little too old for the Biograph Identifier to recall. Miss Dorothy Bernard was Nell in "A Tale of the Wilderness," and Mildred in "A Blot in the 'Scutcheon." In "The Informer," the girl was Miss Mary Pickford. Her mother was Miss Kate Bruce. Eddie Dillon was the son in "Their Idols." Just a word of thanks for the concise and comprehensive way in which you frame your questions.

INQUISITIVE—Names are given in the criticisms where casts are available or the players recognized, but not all casts are available. Charles Eldridge was the young doctor in Vitagraph's "The Lovesick Maidens of Cuddletown." We do not know the girl in "The Musketeers of Pig Alley. Miss Marion Sais played opposite Mr. Blackwell in Kalem's "The Days of '49."

A. R. M.—You do not state the company to which your scripts were sent, so we cannot give you definite information, but we would wait three months on any regular company on general principles. We've had one of our own scripts out since October 30, 1911. Next time give full information and we can give more direct advice.

M. F.—Mr. Johnson did not appear "recently" in "The Resurrection." It was several years ago. Miss Florence Lawrence has not yet connected with any company. She was reported under engagement to the Lubin Company, but nothing appears to have come of the negotiations.

THANK YOU—Miss Barbara Tennant was Nell in Eclair's "Dolls." Miss Janet Salisbury was Laura, and Charles Craig Percival, in Gem's "The Woman in White." Miss Bernard is no longer with the Biograph. We think the Vitagraphers are still Vitagraphing. Sometimes you'll miss your favorites for weeks. In Biograph's "Home Folks," Charles Malles and Miss Kate Bruce were the parents and Robert Herron the son. In Selig's "The Pity of It." Tom Santschi was the spy and Miss Bessie Eyton the girl. The same players had the parts mentioned in "The Ranchman's Mistake." We have not the cast for that Universal.

X. X. J.—We believe that Miss Neason is no longer with Kalem. We do not know where Mr. Holmes is playing now, though he is still with Kalem. Miss Neason was in "The County Fair." Neither was in "The Bachelor's Bride."

A. J. B.—We lack the names to the first question. Henry Walthal was the stenographer in "The One He Loved." We very recently lined up the brothers in "A Feud in the Kentucky Hills." Read back.

W. A. C. L.—Edwin Barry and Logan Paul were the tramps in Vitagraph's "The Professor and the Lady." Do not know that Mr. Lanning was with the western Pathe. Don't you mean George Gebhardt? He's their crack "White Indian."

J. M.—Frank de Vernon was the heavy in Lubin's "The Stolen Ring." In Selig's "The Dynamiters," the leads were William Duncan and Miss Myrtle Stedman. Miss Edna Payne was the girl in the two Lubins mentioned. Please don't ask for "the men that played opposite the young girl." Name the characters and make things easy for the Recording Angel.

M. A.—Misses Lillian and Dorothy Gish seem to be with the Biograph still. Now that you've been good enough to tell us who the sisters in "An Unseen Enemy" were, won't you add to our indebtedness by telling which is Miss Dorothy and which Miss Lillian.

ORIENT—Had to hold this out last week to get the cast. Miss Evelyn Selbie was Pepita in Essanay's "The Ranch Girl's Trial." William Orlamond was the widower, and Charles Compton his son, in Lubin's "Caught Bluffing." Mr. Orlamond is no longer with the company. The Biograph's Identifier does not remember the successful suitor in "A Deal in Real Estate." The young, dark-haired man was Eddie Dillon, the stout, smooth-shaven man Dell Henderson.

A. B.—Not even to a constant reader can we give an address where you could get a position for "taking parts in acting." It cannot be done. The companies want experienced people only—and they will give you no chance to gain that experience.

F. H. H.—A mask is a cut-out of thin metal used to eliminate undesired light rays in making a picture. The subject will be more fully treated in an early issue. This department cannot engage in discussion as to the merits of any film, and besides, we did not see the release mentioned.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON

Editor's Portrait.

DURING the past three years there have been hundreds of requests for the publication of a picture of the editor of this department of a size suitable for framing.

It has been deemed inexpedient to publish such a picture in the Moving Picture World, particularly on account of the constantly enormous demand upon space for other purposes and particularly because such a picture would not be satisfactory.

In view of the fact that the new handbook is just coming out within a few days, the publishers have decided to comply with this demand in the following way. Mr. Richardson has had an excellent picture made by Frank C. Bangs, one of New York's leading photographic artists. From this the publishers have had made a photogravure, which is the highest medium of the engraver's art, the size being eight inches by ten inches. One thousand of these pictures are made. One thousand and no more. These pictures will be given free with the first thousand orders accompanied by cash sent in to the New York office of the Moving Picture World. Let it be clearly understood there will be but one thousand of these pictures given and they will only be sent with the first thousand cash orders for the handbook sent in to the New York office. This does not apply to orders sent in by newsdealers, film exchanges or other agents, but only to individual cash orders to this office.

Operators Get Representative.

From the executive department of Branch No. 2, New York Local Union No. 35, comes the following letter:

Editor Projection Department: Nov. 27, 1912.

This is to inform you that Branch No. 1 has allowed Branch No. 2 their own business representative. Branch No. 2 has, in conformity with this, elected Mr. Thomas Costello as business representative. We all know Brother Costello will do his best and give his best efforts to the moving picture operators.

I also wish to inform you that Branch No. 2 will elect a complete set of officers from their own membership after June 1st, 1913.

Fraternally yours,

HAROLD WILLIAMS,
Business Representative, Local Union 35.

Excellent Letter.

Greenville, Miss., writes:

I am running an Edison machine which is six years old, and I only wish you could see my picture. Have made a three-wing shutter and it works fine; scarcely any flicker at all, except when I run real slow, and I claim there is no machine made which is absolutely flickerless when run slower than 48 per minute. I am using 110-volt a. c., through a 60-cycle Fort Wayne compensarc. Get about 60 amperes at the arc, which burns quietly and steadily. It hums like a 16-inch fan. When I start my fan I can hardly tell which one is running, so far as sound is concerned. Have a 70-foot throw, with a 17-foot picture; 4½-inch Gundlach Manhattan lens. The focus is sharp all over the picture. The light is brilliant. Run 30 to 60-day licensed film. Have been here nearly three months, and have scarcely had use for film cement, and do not have stops enough to remember when the last one occurred. Operating room is 8 x 10 x 7, one machine and stereo. Machine is motor driven; therefore I can do my own rewinding. Have a work bench in the operating room, and do not have to go outside for anything. I have belonged to Local Union 140, I. A. T. S. E., since August, 1911. I attach hereto sketch of my motor drive, which is largely self-explanatory. 1 is a sliding wood base, which is held by means of lever 6, which in its turn is held by ratchet 8. It will be readily seen that by lever 6, belt 5 is tightened or loosened. Belt 5 drives pulley B, attached to the take-up sprocket shaft of the machine.

The brother made quite a complete sketch, but even so, I am not sure I have doped it out just right, but in reproducing the drawing I have made it as it seems to be. Such a drive, it appears to me, would be simple and effective. Neither the drawing nor the brother's description, however, have set forth the method of fastening block 1 on the sliding ways, or how the sliding ways themselves are made. We would appreciate a little further information, Greenville. You are quite correct in assuming that no machine is absolutely flickerless when run at very low speed; however a properly designed and proportioned three-wing outside shutter will show practically no flicker on a clear screen (with no film in) when run down as low as 50 per minute, and very little flicker as low as 40, which is about as slow as any film ought to be run in these days of heavy amperage and strong light. Your operating room is of good size, but I notice you do not mention any vent flue. You ought to have, particularly in that hot country, a vent flue not less than 24 inches in diameter through the roof to the open air—or at least to the open air somewhere. This not only is to provide ventilation, but as a measure of safety to the audience in carrying off the smoke and flame in case of fire, should you ever have one.

In Error.

Long Island writes:

I am operating in a small town, population 3,800. I have charge of the whole place, and have picked up the running of the machine myself, with such aid as I have received from books and the department. I have a new Power's "Six" machine, only eight months old, and the best of everything, so that the entire outfit is excellent. My operating room is 5½ feet above the main floor and is fireproof. The throw is 65 feet. The screen sets 10 feet from the apron of the stage, enclosed with dark red scenery. The picture is 16 feet. My only trouble is I do not get the light I should. Have a Fort Wayne compensarc and run it at 40 amperes, which should give me a very bright light. I have figured out one thing, and that is that the scenery shades my screen. I would like to have your opinion on this point.

In the first place, Long Island, you have not told me what kind of a screen you are using. It may be you are using thin muslin which, while it looks white to you, is in reality yellow and dirty. If you are using a muslin screen I would advise you to have two screens, each made of high-grade bed sheeting—bleached muslin, 109 inches wide, which can be had at Gimbel's store, New York City, and I believe at any other large department store. Then take down your screen every two weeks and put up a clean one, having the dirty one laundered. The screen may look white, but if you hold the clean one up beside it you will be surprised at the difference. You do not see how dirty it gets—how much dirt and smoke collects on it—because it is spread on its surface evenly. In the second place, 40 amperes, a. c., is not enough for a 16-foot picture. You should have 60 at the least. For myself, I would want 70 amperes of a. c. on a 16-foot picture, using a muslin screen. The scenery has, I think, little or nothing to do with the matter.

New Union.

Iowa orders a Handbook and remarks:

I sent for the old Handbook about a year ago, and it has helped me a great deal. I would not be without the new one for anything. We have just gotten together here in Des Moines and have organized under the I. B. E. W., Local Union No. 208.

The new Handbook will be sent you as soon as it is ready. You have made a mistake, Des Moines, in organizing under the I. B. E. W. You should have organized under the I. A. T. S. E. The I. B. E. W. card will be of no value to you outside of Des Moines and very few other cities. The operators are affiliated with the I. A. T. S. E., and I would strongly advise you to change your affiliation, so that your card will be good all over the country.

Rich Hill Makes His Bow Again.

Mr. R. E. Spraker, Rich Hill, Mo., is with us again, as follows:

It has been some time since I sent in anything, but I have lots on my mind. First, my ideas as to the running of split reels. I stop the machine and run a slide, "Our Next Picture," etc., after each subject of a split reel. This gives people who may have seen the following picture an opportunity to leave the house without disturbing others while the picture is running, and also clears the minds of the audience for the reception of the next picture. Now, I find that the way the "Imp" handles splits is ideal under these conditions. You know that they close split-reel pictures with the falling curtain, the same as full-reel subjects. This tailpiece gives one time to drop the dowser and stop the machine without running over into the following title or cutting off part of the finish of the first picture. It takes mighty quick work to see the title of the second picture on a reel come out of the magazine, and then dowse the light before it shows up on the screen. So this is the way I cast my ballot: Shall manufacturers attach tailpieces to all pictures on split reels? Yes.

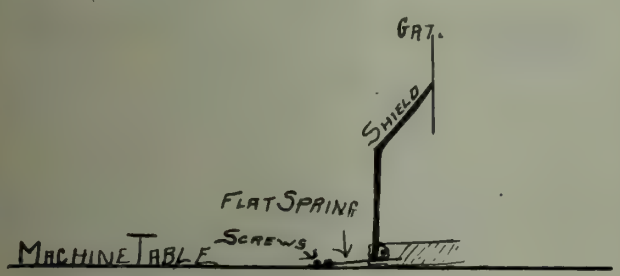
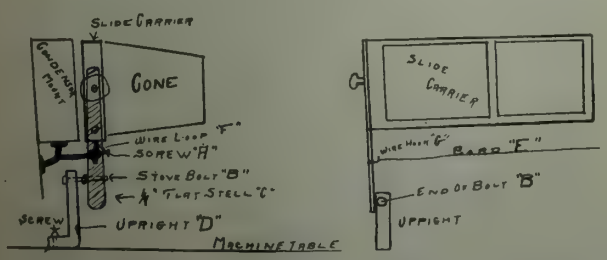
Some time ago you asked for definite information regarding the cost of operating isolated electric light plants. We have a Brush direct connected outfit; 10 h. p., 2-cylinder engine; 4 k..w., 60-volt d. c. generator. I measured all gasoline used for something over 17 hours' running, and found the gasoline consumption to be a fraction less than 1.2 gallons per hour on a 55-ampere load. Lubricating oil used in that time was about half a gallon, which we buy in half-barrel lots at 28 cents per gallon. So you see our current cost is less than 5.2 cents a k. w. Our plant demands only that we give it gasoline and oil and start it; after that it works like a faithful slave till we say, "Stop; 'tis enough." I am trying out a somewhat unique but apparently satisfactory motor drive arrangement, which I will submit when I have given it a thorough test and I know positively that it is all O. K. There is a "Jimmy, the Usher" operator somewhere in this neck of the woods who is doing some mighty careless, slipshod work, evidences of which I take out of the films every day. Misframes I find galore, and I have a couple of dozen splices three sprocket holes wide. Must be a peach of an operator to have a habit like that. But, worse yet, I once found part of a leader and about ten feet of the corresponding scene spliced right into the middle of a letter, with the rest of the leader and scene about fifty feet further along in the film. Wouldn't it make you tear your hair to run a picture like that, and know that it was entirely due to someone's rank carelessness or utter indifference about his work? In a recent issue someone submitted a sketch of a catch to hold down the lower film shield of Power's "Six" machine. Since first beginning to use our Power's "Six" I have been accomplishing the same result far more simply than by using a catch. I knew, however, that you do not approve of anything of the sort, so did not submit it. But you did not "land on" the other fellow so very hard, so here goes. I removed lower film shield spring, No. 716 (P 2), entirely, and screwed a short leaf spring to the machine table, with the free end under the shield. This holds the shield tight up against the gate when shield is up, and holds it down to the table when it is down.



I am using what I call another "scheme," for lack of a better word. It may not be of great benefit to anyone else, but it is to me, for, as I said before, I run "Next Picture" slides after each reel. My "scheme" automatically brings the slide into position while I am sliding the lamphouse over into line with the stereo. When sliding the lamphouse back to run the picture, slide automatically moves away from in front of the condensers.



These sketches are rather crude, and sadly out of proportion, but possibly they will do. First, I filed off the stationary part of the slide carrier even with the movable member. Then I screwed a piece of ⅛-inch flat steel 5½ inches long and ¼ inch wide to the end of the carrier, under the wooden knob. To the machine table I screwed upright "D." This can be of anything suitable. Mine is ⅜-inch round iron, because I had a piece with holes already in it. At the top of upright is a stove bolt "B," which slides in the hole in upright. When pushing lamphouse over, strip "C" strikes bolt "B" and pulls slide carrier over so that slide comes in front of light. When sliding lamphouse back, cord "E," which is tied to end of the rod on which lamphouse slides, pulls carrier into first position, thus removing slide from the light. Cord "E" passes over screw "A" and is held in place by wire loop "F." When running more than one slide bolt "B" is pushed back to disengage strip "C." A loop in the end of cord "E" and wire hook "G" provides for easy disconnection of cord if for any reason such disconnection is desired. Several weeks ago I asked advice regarding the removal of a ghost. I removed same by adding to the length of the machine table and moving lamphouse back four inches. Now on less than 35 amperes I have a light yellowish-brown streak across both top and bottom of picture. At 40 amperes same disappears. Six and three-fourths inch No. 2 Gundlach lens, two 7½-inch condensers, 12-foot picture, ⅝ carbons, cored above, solid below; carbon set as you advise. Spot round and all right, so far as I can see, and plenty large enough. Recently you referred to the "other method" of aligning lenses. I can't find it. Will you please explain correct method, or tell me in what issue it was published? I have the "Worlds" since January 6, 1912, on file, but can't find it in any of them. Always publish my name and address. If I send in anything that may be of benefit to anyone else, I want the credit for it. If I ask questions I want credit for being wise enough to try to find out what I don't know, instead of being too "modest" to ask, for fear of being laughed at. If you live over this, I'll come again.

Your title slide between split reels is all right, though personally I am not very much in favor of title slides. I have nevertheless advised the stopping of the machine between the subjects on split reels, and do still advise it, in order to allow the last picture to fade out of the minds of the audience, instead of compelling them to grab the new one right off the bat. As to tailpieces between split reels, I should like to have an expression of an opinion on that proposition. Suppose all you who want tailpieces between split reels send me a postal card to that effect, the idea being that the tailpiece be put at the end of the first subject, just ahead of the title of the second subject. This is a matter of considerable importance to you, my brother operator, and unless there is a large response it will not have much effect, but if we should get several thousand votes yet on the tailpiece proposition, undoubtedly they would be added. We shall be glad to have your motor drive scheme as soon as it is ready. The shield spring is excellent. I do not very strongly object to that kind of a scheme, although there is always the temptation to the slip-shod operator to leave the guard down, and if that is done it might as well be taken off altogetner. The slide carrier idea is good for more reasons than one, the principal one being that it removes the slide carrier entirely, thus giving the full benefit of the entire area of the condensing lenses, a part of which is cut off when the carrier is in place. This is one thing I like about the Motiograph. Their schme of tipping the slide carrier out of the way is good. I want to compliment you on one of the last sentences of your letter, viz.: "I want credit for being wise enough to try to find out what I do not know, instead of being too modest to ask, for fear of being laughed at." Many a poor fellow is stumbling along, working in ignorance, simply because he has not the moral courage to seek information. In order to find a thing out you must, ordinarily, let someone know your lack of knowledge. But after that you are "wise," and will not again be compelled to display ignorance on that particular subject. The man who fails to seek knowledge is worse than foolish. He simply stands in his own light. He is remaining ignorant when he could easily change that condition. Let us hear from you again, Neighbor Spraker. By the way, there is considerable diversity of opinion as regards the pressure of 60 volts, some claiming it is too low to allow of the proper handling of the arc. What is your experience in this respect? The method of lining the machine was illustrated on page 119, July 22nd, 1911, issue. You will also find it in the new Handbook.

Holy Smoke!

I have just given a nice little slap on the wrist to the man who knows it all, and the very next letter I pick up, from Davenport, Iowa, goes right on with the same subject. It is funny how things happen that way. The letter is as follows:

> This is my first letter, but I want you to know there is another operator who takes The World and always reads the Projection Department. From its pages I have learned many valuable things, and believe there are others too who have found it a great help. I shall be glad to avail myself of the privilege to propound questions when I find myself up against it, and will ask you beforehand if I am welcome. I have been operating for five years, yet I do not quite understand many things, but am willing to learn, realizing that one can never learn all there is to learn or have too much knowledge of his profession. Until recently I did not know there was such a thing as the Projection Department, from whence information could be had, else you probably would already have received some foolish questions from yours truly. As it was, I had to secure such pointers as I could from other operators. I found some of them knew it all, or at least had an ingrowing idea that they did; but after five years I would not say that I know it all, or that I believe they do, or ever will, so long as there is such a thing as moving pictures. Those who think they do are merely indulging in an over-vivid pipe dream. I have asked operators simple questions only to have them reply: "Ask someone else, I am not teaching anyone to be an operator." They thus, I believe, merely tried to conceal their own ignorance. I would advise those men who have the "know it all" bug to drill a small hole just above their respective noses, and let the hot air leak out.

With all and sundry of which I heartily agree. Yes, my brother, you will be perfectly welcome to use the Department at any time you may wish, provided you have something of interest to communicate or some problem you wish solved. Your questions may (or may not) sound foolish to those who are already informed, but we must remember that there was a time not so long ago, when the same question and its answer was bothering US.

Examination.

Canada, after modestly requesting that name and province be carefully suppressed, comes across the line with the following:

> In view of all operators in this province being required, at an early date, to pass an examination and obtain a license to operate (there being no law to this effect at present), and the writer having had five years of practical operating work, and there being no opportunity of obtaining personal instructions from any licensed operator, how would you advise him to prepare for such examination? Along what lines should study tend? Assuming that the writer is unusually well posted so far as actual projection is concerned, but feels weak so far as the theory of the electrical part is concerned, is there not some correspondence school in the States which would be able to post him along the lines that would probably be required? With practical experience and an exhaustive study of your new Handbook, would one be able to pass, say, the New York or Massachusetts boards, it being understood that this new law would be somewhat similar to those? Can you refer me to any back numbers of you paper containing information on this subject?

The American School of Correspondence, Chicago, Ill., gives an operator's course, but I cannot say whether it is of much value or not. I should suppose that, having had five years' practical experience, coupled with a study of the Projection Department and the new Handbook, any man of ordinary intelligence ought to pass any reasonable examination. The examination is, or should be, confined entirely to practical things pertaining to wire capacities, switches, resistance and similar questions designed to bring out knowledge of the applicant on practical things pertaining to electrical action and projection.

Tobacco Coupons.

Mr. W. D. Eccleston, Huntington, L. I., writes:

> Have a copy of your old Handbook, and will want the new one. Although a manager, I am also a qualified operator, and can take a machine at any time in case of a pinch. Every manager should know how to operate, and thus be able to check up the results on the screen of his theater. I am manager of the Carleton Opera House, Bay Shore; Bijou Theater, Huntington, and have just opened a new $13,000 theater in Northport, called the Northport Theater. I agree with the Moving Picture World on the cigarette coupon business. The agent was here yesterday. I told him I was running the theaters on a clean basis, and they could not be used to advertise cigarettes. I read the Projection Department every week, and get much valuable information therefrom; also from the Advertisers' Department. I find the hardest thing to do in the country is to get the dodgers properly put out. Boys throw half of them away, and hiring a man is rather expensive. What can you suggest? I use a plain white curtain in all the houses, with just a tint of blue in it. Is a Mirroroide curtain much better? I want to get the best possible results. Please give me your advice.

I thoroughly agree with you, Brother Eccleston, that the manager should learn to properly project a picture. The manager who does not study the matter of projection, and learn to recognize faults on a screen, is not, in my opinion, a good manager. As regards the cigarette business, I compliment you on your stand. You are entirely correct and it is to be most sincerely hoped that theater managers will refuse to lend themselves to the furthering of any such reprehensible and thoroughly nefarious scheme. The Mirrioroide screen is, in my judgment, a very good article. It is fully covered by guarantee. As to the dodger matter, it seems to me that a medium could be struck between the young, irresponsible boy and the full-grown man, and that you could secure reasonable reliability by the employment of a schoolboy sixteen or seventeen years old, giving him a regular route, with just enough bills to cover it. You could thus check up his performance by going occasionally to a few houses, selected haphazard, on his route, making inquiries whether the bills are delivered. In this connection, if the putting out of bills pays at all, it would certainly be a better investment to pay a comparatively large sum to have them properly distributed, rather than a small sum to have it improperly done. Most theaters turn them over to the local billposter or arrange with adult newspaper carriers to have them inserted in the daily papers. The latter way is best, as the circular gets inside of the house with the paper, and is read by the head of the house at the very time when he is prepared to read. The billposters and newspaper men around Greater New York charge $2 per thousand for distributing.

Slide Ink.

Mr. A. Richter, Allegan, Mich., writes:

> Enclosed find $2.50, for the year's subscription and copy of the new Handbook. I enjoy your paper very much—in fact, I could not get along without it. I made a good slide ink with aniline dye. Mix the dye with hot water, and then add mucilage until it works good.

Many thanks, Neighbor Richter, for the ink recipe. The Handbook will be sent you just as soon as it is ready.

Traveling Arc.

Conway, Ark., has a peculiar trouble. He writes as follows:

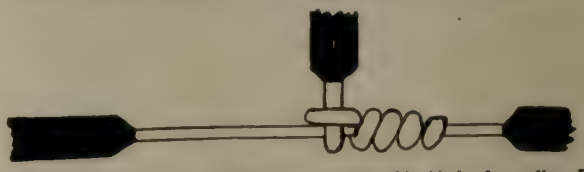
> Enclosed you will find money order for the new Handbook, which I hope to receive without delay, as I am very badly in need of it. And now, while I have your attention, I want to ask a question or two. We have just opened a new house here, installing two of Power's 6A machines, with motor drive and automatic loop setters. We project a 16⅓-foot picture, 64-feet, on a Radium Gold screen, using two 6⅓ condensers on each machine, with the lamphouse back as far as it will go and the condensers nearly touching. We use 110 volt a.c. through a Ft. Wayne compensarc, usually running on the 40 ampere notch. Now, here is the trouble: We have a traveling arc, and a bad one, too. The arc travels all around the carbons (cored Electras), and we cannot hold our spot at the gate. Our voltage here is very unsteady. I have a voltmeter in the operating room and find the pressure varies from 110 to 130, but the arc seems to travel as badly on low voltage as on high. I have tested the secondary wiring of the compensarc with an ammeter and find it delivers only 40 amperes on the 40 notch. Our lamphouses are perfectly clean, all vents open, etc. I have tried many remedies dug up from back numbers of the Department, without avail, and would like you to come to my rescue. I have been thinking of installing a Mercury Arc Rectifier. Would the rectifier rectify the variation in voltage, and is a 35 ampere rectifier large enough?

Your trouble, as you describe it, Conway, is peculiar. One thing you are certainly wrong in, however, viz.: You say you are using two 6⅓ condensers, projecting a 16⅓ foot picture at 64 feet, and have the lamphouse back as far as it will go. If you have in two 6⅓ condensers, and the lamphouse set back as far as it will go, either your arc is very much nearer the condenser than it should be, or else you are working on the back focus—that is to say, the rays of light from the condenser are crossing before they reach the aperture of your machine. If this is the fact, then your spot will have a flaring edge of light blue. Move your lamphouse toward the mechanism and see what effect it has on the spot. I think you ought to have one 6⅓ and one 7½ condenser, with the latter in front. Now, as to that traveling arc: You will have to tell me how your carbons are set before I can answer you intelligently. If you have your carbons set properly there is no earthly reason why the arc should travel, and it will not travel either. But one thing is certain and that is you should use 60 amperes of a.c. instead of 40. Forty amperes a.c. is not nearly enough for a 16⅓-foot picture. Send me a sketch, showing me how your carbons are set, and I will go into the matter further.

Wire Splice.

La Crosse, Wis., writes as follows:

> I have had a dispute with a brother operator as to the best way to make a wire splice, and we have agreed to leave the matter to you. The question is: What is the best way to make a splice, when a branch wire is to be run at right angles to the feeder.



What I consider the best method of making this kind of a splice, La Crosse, is illustrated above. This splice has all the strength it is possible to obtain, and when soldered it is a perfect tap joint.

Seattle Boys Busy.

We are in receipt of a neat sixteen-page souvenir program of an entertainment, given at the Clemmer Theater, Seattle, Wash., by Moving Picture Operators' Local Union, 154. This benefit is to swell the fund now being raised to entertain the I. A. T. S. E. convention next year.

Carbon Screws.

Mr. J. T. May, Bartlesville, Okla., sets forth the following:

> Here is a suggestion to Ely, Minn.: Before putting in new carbon contact screws, run a 3-16-inch drill into the end of the screw, until the entire drill point has entered the iron, after which taper the end of the screw on the outside, with a file, until you have nearly a knife edge around the hole you bore in its end. A screw thus treated will make much better contact. Another cause of the end of the screw melting is burning the carbons too short, which brings the arc near the carbon clamp, in consequence of which the metal becomes heated. Iron expands more rapidly than carbon; it also expands more than carbon does under the same temperature. The net result of this is that, though your screws are tight with the lamp cold, they become loose when the metal is heated, with consequent poor contact. I am glad to know K. C. likes my shutter. You will probably call me a fabricator (I would if I were in your place), but it is nevertheless a fact that I make a habit of running every drama we get that is dark, from twenty-four to twenty-eight minutes. Am running on 60 ampere contact on a Ft. Wayne compensarc. Neighbor Doyle, of Pueblo, has hit the bull's-eye on lower loop trouble, but why make a fibre roller? Edison still puts out his rubber sprocket idler, and it is far superior to the steel rollers. Goldsboro, N. C., can greatly help, if not entirely eliminate his double spot, by side adjustment of his upper carbon and forward adjustment of the lower. The double spot is caused by an imperfect crater. Your carbons may be aligned, but no carbon is itself absolutely perfect, therefore you must do some adjustment to get a perfect crater. This remedied my double spot.

My own remedy for the screw burning would be to get a different type of carbon arm. No doubt friend May's remedy is good as far as it goes, and, in fact, I am sure it would help some, but that kind of a contact is not the thing now that we are using with 40 to 80 amperes of current. Also, using his own argument, the expansion will loosen up the contact just the same, regardless of how the point of the screw may be shaped. Under May's plan the screw would cut into the carbon considerably, which is good, but the loosening under expansion would be just as much one way as another. I cannot agree with Brother May's plan of running dramas

24 to 28 minutes. I think the characters in those plays must take it pretty easy—in fact, instead of walking, they float along. Friend May, you cannot put up a high-class performance in that way. A photoplay must be run at the speed best calculated to bring out the natural action of the characters, and 28 minutes would be too slow for even the Passion Play. Your comments on the rubber roller are correct. As to the double spot, your plan might remedy some cases, but not in all. However, Goldsboro can try it out. Perhaps you have hit the bull's-eye in his case.

Oildag? ? ? ?

Mr. O. G. Patterson, People's Theater, Carlsbad, N. M., contributes the following:

> In all the discussion about condenser breakage I do not find mentioned what I consider the main cause, and would like to have your opinion on the following: I have been told that if the lens is held too tightly in its mount it cannot expand freely, and will therefore crack. I have never seen a mount strong or rigid enough to retard expansion, which latter is practically irresistible. In every case of breakage I have observed the trouble has been due to uneven expansion. The crack starts from where the mount folds over the lens, thereby making extra good contact with it. When starting the lamp everything is cold, and the black iron mount and other adjacent parts absorb heat rapidly. On the other hand, the clear lens allows practically all the heat to pass through, and, being thick, its temperature rises slowly. Naturally under these conditions there is a comparatively large flow of heat from the iron mount into the lens, through the points where it makes good contact, during the period of heating up. This causes that particular part of the lens to expand more than the rest, thus producing internal stresses, which will end in fracture if the lens is not well annealed. All of which applies in pretty much the same manner to cooling off too quickly, or to changes in temperature. I have placed a sheet of thin asbestos between lens and mount, so as not to allow them to touch at any point. Have not lost a lens since, whereas before I broke one about every night. I believe this method will go a great way toward eliminating condenser breakage, provided the lens is well annealed. Speaking of lubricants, the addition of oildag vastly improves any oil.

Now, what in the name of heaven is oildag? I'll be dag-gone if I know. So I will have to take your word for that. The mounts which break condensers by clamping the lens when it expands are the old style round ring mounts, the same being a solid ring of metal almost, if not quite, one-sixteenth of an inch in thickness and about, if I remember rightly, 3¼ inches wide, into which the lens was placed. Evidently Brother Patterson has never seen one of these mounts. What he says about the other, newer type of mount, is well worth considering. He is, I believe, at least in a measure, correct as regards his deductions. The placing of asbestos between the metal and the lens has remedied many a case of condenser breakage, and has been, from time to time, recommended in this department.

The Nerve of Him!

Syracuse, Kan., describes his house in the following language:

> How do you do it? I mean, how do you find time to answer all the letters and queries you must receive each day. I am going to describe my new house without asking a single question. I really wish you could drop in and see the nifty place we have; and it's only 1,400 inhabitants, too, but we draw from the southwest for one hundred and twenty miles, this being the closest railroad point. To you dodging cars there in New York I presume this listens like fiction, but nevertheless it is true. We also have a Harvey hotel which cost $110,000. We are situated on the old Santa Fe Trail, and on the direct route for autos from coast to coast, and we see lots of cars from your little burg (See the heading.—Ed.). This is the fifth show I have started here in four years, getting a larger house and a little better equipment each time, until I have reached the limit, and figure that I am about ten years ahead of the town. Building is 140 feet long, with a 40-foot front. There is an enclosed lobby, with cork carpet covering the floor, marble soda fountain of the latest design, cigar and candy cases, goat leather arm rockers and settees for loafers, and ice cream tables, chairs and screens of mission oak. Fully equipped with electric lights and fans, wired in conduit. The auditorium itself seats three hundred. The floor is inclined four feet in sixty feet, then level to the stage. The stage has four sets of scenery and drop. It is 24 x 25 feet. Under the stage we have a basement with a 10 h. p. gasoline engine and a 3 k. w. dynamo. Fifty feet from the back we have a small balcony, on which is a piano, with drums, mandolin, flutes, etc., which furnishes excellent music for the show; also for the dance hall, which occupies one hundred feet upstairs. I get 10 cents for three reels, changing every night, using Mutual 40-day stuff. We light the auditorium with side lights, inlaid conduit for the lower lights, using green shades. Our dynamo must seem a little small to you, but we have all double throw switches in the operating room, and when we are using the projection arc we throw all other lights over on the city a. c. lines, so as to get the full benefit of our plant, for, believe me, it is the picture that counts. We also have the rheostat on our own dynamo circuit in the operating room, where it is controlled by the operator, who can vary his current at any time. I figure we get, as a rule, 35 amperes, d. c. Of course, if we have a dark picture we raise the voltage to 120, though it is a little hard on our lamps, should we have any of them on. I have to smile as I read of operators having light trouble, when I see my own plant doing business every night, with the prettiest light you ever saw. I was going to put in another screen, but think I will stick to my old canvas, coated with alabastine, for I have seen a good many shows, but no better pictures than mine. Having two currents makes a fellow feel pretty good. In case one plays hookey, he has the other one to fall back on, but deliver me from a. c. We are in Southwest Kansas, thirteen miles from Colorado.

I have given this letter space partly because of the entertaining way in which it is written, and partly because it shows what a really enterprising man can do, even in a small town. Here is an exhibitor in a town of 1,400 who has combined an ice cream and candy parlor, dance hall and a show, doing the job right, too. Needless to say, he is successful, though of course, as he says, he has a wide outside territory to draw from. He has a frightful nerve, though, to call Gotham a "little burg." Huh! We're deeply insulted.

Mercury Arc Rectifier Information.

Salt Lake City encloses $2.50 for the new Handbook, and says:

> Would appreciate any information you can give me as to the best book I can buy, giving thorough and detailed explanation of the mercury arc rectifier, and how to remedy the various troubles pertaining thereto.

The new Handbook will contain detailed, illustrated explanation of the Mercury Arc Rectifier, together with directions and instructions as to handling and repairing the same. I know of no other book containing this information.

Wants Them All.

Mr. F. T. Hall, Los Angeles, Cal., encloses $2.50, and writes:

> As I have a copy of the little paper-covered Handbook you put out years ago, also a copy of the late book, I certainly want the third and last edition.

All of which shows that the brother has found the books to be of value to him. Orders for the new book are coming in rapidly. We have even received an order from the Arcade Amusement Company, Tiensin, China, which helps some, of course.

New Invention.

Mr. Horace W. Griggs, Milwaukee, Wis., has, after something like two years of experimenting, invented what is described in patent 1,042,430 as a "machine for winding picture films and other material." Its practical application is, as a tension equalizer, to be attached to the lower magazine of projecting machines. Mr. Griggs sent us in patent drawings and a description, but the editor is not good at doping out this kind of proposition from a patent description. Brother Griggs has promised to send one of the machines in for inspection and trial. If it is not too complicated, thus making its manufacture costly, and if it is simple enough to be successfully handled by the average operator, and if it really produces an equal tension throughout the length of the film, then it will fill a truly long-felt want. Let us hope it has all these things. We wish the invention of Brother Griggs all the success its merit will deserve.

Poor Installation.

The Man in the Moon contributes the following:

> Please do not publish my city, state or name (You will notice I didn't.—Ed.). I have a 95-foot throw and a 16½-foot picture. What size condenser would you advise? Our house is wired as follows, though neither myself nor the management considers it as anything else than wrong, but it had existed thus for two years before the present owners bought it: The house is fed by a 2-wire system, No. 6 B. & S. wires. Then there are three distributing circuits of No. 10 B. & S.; two of these go to two Power's "Six" machines, and the other to a spot and to a stereo. The machines use a Power's rheostat on fourth point, and to top this off these distributors are solid wire, but I am to get better conditions soon, and the room will have No. 2 B. & S. stranded three-wire system, with four distributing circuits of No. 6 B. & S. stranded. What kind of picture would you expect at 95 feet with the above conditions, and a bunch of elevators (freight, at that) going in the afternoon? I wish you would head the Projection Department each week with two or three questions suitable for examination, and then, next issue, answer them. This would, I believe, do much to get city officials to know what a practical projection examination should consist of. Why not also give the drawing of a model operating room? Outside of the wiring, I have the finest in the state of—in the moon (Gee! I nearly slipped that time.—Ed.). Will send picture and description later. Has any brother found a lower hard carbon which you do not have to throw away an inch of in an Edison or Power's lamp?

Your wiring is indeed very, very bad. The feeders themselves are altogether too small. You have four machines and five lamps. Allowing 35 amperes to the machine, 15 to each stereo lamp and 15 to the spot, you should have feeders capable of carrying 115 amperes, and the various distributing circuits should be No. 6. The quicker you tear out that wiring and put in new, the better—particularly if you are on meter service, since the loss through excessive resistance is large, and it all registers on the meter. Length of throw does not make much difference—very little, indeed. It is the size of the picture that counts. But the elevators, if taking power from those No. 6 feeders, probably raise thunder with your voltage. You should have two 7½-inch condensers. I do not give a drawing of a model operating room because what might be a model under certain conditions might not be the best under other conditions. I do not think the propounding of examination questions would be wise. If it were not for the enormous amount of labor involved, I would propound 100 questions, giving prizes aggregating $1,500 for the best replies. The late J. P. Chalmers and myself had this matter under consideration, and the only thing that stood in the way was the great amount of labor involved. I do not understand what you mean by the throwing away of an inch of carbon. Certainly you do not expect to burn up every bit of carbon. You will have to explanation yourself a little more clearly on that point, brother.

Comments on the Films

Licensed

"THREE GIRLS AND A MAN" (Vitagraph), November 28.—Albert W. Hale produces this bit of comedy in which the principal roles are taken by Miss West and Miss Keefe and Messrs. King and Lytton.

"THE EAVESDROPPERS" (Vitagraph), November 28.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this little skit featuring Adele De Garde and Kenneth Casey. Mr. Young and Miss Young have the adult parts. The group make a lot of fun.

"THE WATER-RIGHT WAR" (Kalem), November 27.—There is a hearty laugh in this picture when the father of the girl receives word from her to the effect that "Steve says you can have your old stream; he has taken me instead." Steve is the man with whom the father has been at odds over water rights. Neva Gerber as the daughter is excellent. There is a thrilling runaway; also there is much fine scenery.

"THE TRIANGLE" (Selig), November 28.—This is a good story. Thomas Santschi is at his best. He is well supported by Miss Eyton and Mr. Rawlinson. The closing scene between Mr. Santschi and Miss Eyton is especially strong.

"THE BOSS OF THE KATY MINE" (Essanay), November 28.—A story marred by the improbability of a husky young man dropping dead from apoplexy at the psychological, the convenient, moment. Brinsley Shaw takes the role of the unscrupulous mine owner, and takes it well.

"THE ISLAND OF CEYLON, INDIA" (Edison), November 29.—This full reel of scenic and educational matter is interesting. There are pictures of snake charmers and devil dancers and of lace-makers. The views of the sea during the monsoons will hold the attention even of those who live by the ocean. There are many pictures of shipping copra (the kernel of the cocoanut) and of tea; of elephants, at work and at play.

"THE CHAPERON GETS A DUCKING" (Kalem), November 29.—Wherein Fat Bill, portrayed by John E. Brennan, is rigged up as a woman in order that he may chaperon a party of girls who desire to visit the camp of the boys. Fat Bill monopolizes the attentions of the girls; the boys give him a ducking. The girls get square on the particular young man who introduced the "chaperon," and there is another ducking. There are some laughs.

"RUTH ROLAND, THE KALEM GIRL" (Kalem), November 29.—Showing a Kalem girl amid California settings riding to the studio, doing a little weak bag-punching, then duck-shooting, fishing, horseback riding and canoeing. There is a girl who does some good fancy diving from a high platform. It may be Miss Roland; we are not permitted a sufficiently close view to determine.

"AN ABSENT-MINDED BURGLAR" (Biograph), November 28.—There is much fun in this tale of the burglar who robbed a house in daylight and absent-mindedly left in the pockets of his old clothes a large sum of money, which came in very handily for Mr. Hardluck.

"AFTER THE HONEYMOON" (Biograph), November 28.—At the end of the honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Gooddresser start housekeeping; they are more than affectionate. After a period of six months things are different. The wife no longer dresses for dinner; the husband is not interested in affairs at home. The two dress to go out—with friends of the opposite sex. While the two are waiting for the husband and wife at the same spot, by coincidence, and the girl under the man's embrella, to protect her from the rain, the estranged couple meet in the hall of their home. The sight of each all togged up awakens the old love. Both fail to keep the engagement with the two standing under the umbrella. It is on the same reel as the foregoing.

"THE GREAT STEEPLECHASE" (Pathe), November 29.—In this special two-reel drama the feature is easily the steeplechase. It is a thrilling contest. There are spills, three of them. How the riders escape with their lives will puzzle the beholders. The villain is played by Bigelow Cooper, the well-known Edison player. His work is carefully done, as always. An element of comedy is introduced through a young African, who takes the role of stable boy. The scenes of the race course and of the race will interest any audience. The production really is a feature.

"LINKED BY FATE" (Melies), November 28.—There is some superb scenery in this drama of the seashore—great towering cliffs. The story is of a shipwrecked party being thrown on an island, a minister and his daughter and a young man being deserted by the others, who take the only boat and depart. The minister, dying, marries the two. The daughter, finding a miniature of a woman on her husband's neck, jumps to the conclusion that the man has married her through regard for the conventionalities. The husband has rigged up a boat. The wife throws into the water her coat and hat. The husband, finding them, believes the girl has committed suicide, and rows away. The wife, afterward, rescued by a passing craft, is put ashore. Later she meets her husband and learns that the picture is of his sister. There is a good situation in the closing scene, it is competently handled.

THE SURGEON (Lubin), Nov. 25.—A very interesting picture of a surgeon who, although more skillful than most physicians, failed on account of drunkenness. No longer called upon to operate, he forsakes the East and becomes a cowboy, and at length foreman, on a ranch. Of course, the daughter of the owner and he fall in love. There is very little of the melodramatic in the story, just enough to get speedy action at the climax where the foreman saves the life of his wounded employer by performing an operation the country doctor couldn't do. There is plausibility in the situation and also in the way it is worked out, and, with its fine character sketches, it makes a very commendable offering. Both Wallace C. Clifton, the author, and F. J. Grandon, the producer, deserve credit. By far the best character in it is the country doctor, played by Albert Seigel. The surgeon-foreman is well played by Edgar Jones. Both the ranch owner and his wife are well pictured; but the daughter is weak. Her acting makes the whole picture seem artificial.

LYDIA PUNKHAM'S LOVE STORY (C. G. P. C.), Nov. 26.—The producers of these C. G. P. C. farces show a remarkable fertility in devising new ridiculous situations. This is like others not in its situations, but in the method followed. It more closely touches on the vulgar than the average farce of this kind. It will be found amusing, but is no masterpiece.

PICTURESQUE BRITTANY (C. G. P. C.), Nov. 26.—This lovely picture of old castles, old houses and quaint cities in Brittany will strongly appeal to all kinds of spectators; but those who will enjoy it most will be least likely to find entertainment in the farce that percedes it. The photography is perfect and finely stereoscopic; the coloring just enough to seem natural and make one forget that it is hand-painted.

SOME RARE SPECIMENS AND A FEW OLD FRIENDS, NEW YORK ZOOLOGICAL PARK (Edison), Nov. 26.—The reviewer has looked over the New York Zoo more than once; but this picture has given him more valuable instruction than any or all of his visits. It is much more than a haphazard collection of photographs; it gives no bears, lions, etc., nor animals that everyone has seen and knows. The chooser of the specimens has shown discrimination and made the picture most valuable. It is worth while to see the panda, the emu, the wild dogs of Australia and the Tasmanian devil. Very interesting, too, are the Gobi cassawary, the wild horses of Mongolia, the pigmy hippopotamus, the beautiful crested pigeons from New Guinea and the very rare hogs from Africa. These things are not found in every large museum of living fauna, and they are worth seeing. The photography is so good that they can really be seen, through a magic window but seen nevertheless. This is really a fine feature picture.

MR. HUBBY'S WIFE (Essanay), Nov. 26.—Augustus Carney, our old friend "Alkali Ike," plays the leading part in this office farce as Mr. Hubby, a married man fond of flirting with pretty stenographers. His wife objects, and cleverly lays a trap to break him of the habit. The scenario behind this picture doesn't afford any real chance for the brilliant clown acting that Carney used to give us in his western characters. It has one or two funny moments; but, for the most part, is about as flat as can be. Eleanor Blanchard plays Mrs. Hubby, who persuades her friend, Lily Branscombe, to dress up as a freak, and makes her husband accept her. She gets a chance and takes the wig, specs and disguise herself and then as stenographer trounces Hubby. Ruth Stonehouse and Dolores Cassinelli play two stenographers who are too good looking for the job, according to Mrs. Hubby.

IN THE FLAT ABOVE (Vitagraph), Nov. 26.—An apartment house farcical love story with Roger Lytton as the occupant of the apartment above. He is an annoyed bachelor when a vocal music teacher, Clara Kimball Young, moves into the apartment below. His dislike isn't softened by the fact that he meets Flora Finch, a student, coming out and thinks she is the instructor. A little later, Kate Price, also a student, meets him and gives him a tongue thrashing. The climax isn't convincing enough even for a farce, and the amusement that their roles gave the players, especially those who sing, kept them from seeming so amusing as they might have. James Young is both author and producer; but it surely isn't up to his good work.

"THE TOTVILLE EYE" (Edison), Nov. 27.—Bannister Merwin easily keeps in the front rank of photo-playwrights. In this picture he has provided another amusing and humanly pleasing offering. It isn't strongly convincing as real life, but was made in sympathy with the way the human mind and heart work when they take a holiday together, and very plainly pleased a large audience. "The Totville Eye" is a village newspaper of four pages, and the Edison producer seems to have put out an edition of it just for the picture.

The edition one day was ready to go on the press, when the crusty old editor (Robert Brower) was called away. The printer and the boy (Walter Edwin and Yale Boss) were lifting the front page form, when they "pied" it, and it was just type scattered over the floor. The paper had to "come out," so the printer sent Yale out for some news and determined to have the paper "right" for once. Yale's news items showed that he had positive genius, and Totville saw itself, when the paper reached the street, as others saw it. The result is more pleasing than probable.

Among others of the cast, Edward O'Connor, a tramp printer, passes through, looking for a job. Yale sees him putting whiskey into Dominie Bigelow Cooper's soda water, and his report saves that man from being asked to resign his pulpit. This minister's role was the only poorly played part in the picture. Harry Beaumont and Bessie Learn have a lovers' tiff, and Yale's item about that brings a reconciliation. Charles Ogle plays a miserly landlord, and the young reporter's writing him up makes him reform. He comes in to thank the astonished editor, which is running pretty hard on the goodness and wisdom of human kind. It made us expect that the landlord would marry the poor widow whom he had turned out into the cold, but the story isn't as romantic as all that. Bliss Milford plays the widow. Alice Washburn has a minor part. It is an unusually likable offering and will please everywhere.

"TREBIZOND AND ITS SURROUNDINGS" (Eclipse), Nov. 27.—A fairly well photographed set of views of a city of Asia Minor. Pictures of Turkish cities are doubly interesting at this time. This one, as including glimpses of a Turkish regiment, and especially as showing it at grub time, is a fine offering.

"A MAN FOR A DAY" (Eclipse), Nov. 27.—A very small boy is shown as breaking his clay "bank" and "blowing" himself with his money just like a gentleman, including dining with girls whom he "picks up," and finally going home "lit," when his exasperated dad gives him a well-deserved spanking. If the audience is amused it is because of the ridiculous incongruity of a boy's behaving so. Together, these two offerings make good.

"ROPED IN" (Selig), Nov. 26.—Because of other pictures, at least produced before this, its author, Will Aspinwall, deserves no great amount of credit. The picture is entertaining. It deals with the cowboy who answers a matrimonial advertisement and hears from an old maid, front teeth gone, who sends him her latest, but not very recent, photograph. One of the most amusing things in the picture is the contrast, with the evident similarity, between Myrtle Stedman as she was—shown by her photograph—and as she is, with her makeup. Lester Cunio, the cowboy, behaves as other picture cowboys have behaved in this situation, but acts naturally. Also in the cast are Frank Higgins and Messrs. Frith, Merris, De Long and Williamson.

"THE STAIN" (Essanay), Nov. 27.—There is just enough freshness in this story to keep it interesting. It is pictured in the costume of a bygone age, and as a dream. Seldom it is that a poorly acted picture comes from the Essanay studio; this seems to be one of the exceptions. It happens to be an ultra-romantic story, and the players did what is known as "playing up to their parts." There was a priest, or minister of some kind, in one scene, and his open mouth spoiled that scene's whole effect.

The picture opens in modern life. Walter Hitchcock plays a man who occasionally goes to a museum and looks at a picture of an ancestor. He is in love with a woman, played by Ruth Stonehouse, who hasn't yet told him that she returns his affection. He grows jealous of a man, played by Billy Mason, and goes home in a despondent mood and gets out the pistol. The producer lets us think he intends suicide. When the story is done we suspect that he intended killing his friend, which was even more displeasing. He dreams the love story of his ancestor (E. H. Calvert), who is a villain and kills a young gallant (Bryant Washburn) because of jealousy. The girl of the dream is Lily Brauscombe, and her death scenes are poor.

"THE SAMARITAN OF COOGAN'S TENEMENT" (Lubin), Nov. 26.—A picture that will entertain and please and that the audience seemed to enjoy. But it is not what could be called a strong picture. One feels that more might have been made from the scenario, which seems well written. The author is Frederick E. Wright. Its one weakness lies in the fact that not one player in it was well cast. Of course, Arthur Johnson is never less than himself, even when playing a farmer or a workingman, but he is never at his best in such parts. Lottie Briscoe, as a tenement house girl, is more convincing, but, as usual, hers is the romantic part. Clara Lambert plays the old mother of the farmer lad who cannot pay a mortgage on his farm and comes to the city to find work. He gets into trouble until "Red," the gangster and the Samaritan, helps him. Except for the choice of players, the picture is well produced. There is some humor in it, and it also holds interest. Jack McDonald is "Red," and is comical if not convincing.

"THE SHERIFF'S BROTHER" (Pathe), Nov. 27.—A typical Western story of a sheriff with a bad-man brother. The girl is loved by both, and although she prefers the sheriff, he thinks she prefers the brother. When the sheriff is following a gang of horse thieves, and finds that his brother is a part of it, he resigns his shield. There is a happy ending, and no one killed. Paul Panzer plays the sheriff, and William Cavanaugh the brother. The heroine is good looking. It's a good picture of its kind.

"SATIN AND GINGHAM" (Lubin), Nov. 28.—Here is a full reel without a harsh word in it. It is a story of a minister and his love. Well might it be thrown on the screen in any church entertainment. A woman would say it is a sweet story. So it is, and a simple one. Nevertheless, it holds—holds by reason of the art of the players; of the sequence, the continuity, of the scenes. The climax comes when May, the daughter of well-to-do parents, on the eve of her wedding breaks the engagement she has made with a man of means. She drives in her machine to the home of Tom, her brother's clergyman friend. Tom has been at his mother's knee, seeking consolation in his sorrow—he has told her that he is in love and heartbroken. Tom has just before gone to the kitchen and put the kettle on the stove. He has put the tea in the pot. Waiting for the water to boil, he has returned to his mother's knee. She is stroking his hair.

May starts to enter the clergyman's home at the front door. She changes her mind and goes to the kitchen entrance and steps in. She sees the kettle simmering on the stove. She tiptoes across the floor and peeks in on the domestic scene in the sitting room. She throws across the back of a kitchen chair an expensive wrap. She goes to a closet and takes down a gingham apron—the same, by the way, which in an earlier scene she had in a pet thrown off, convinced that it did not harmonize with her social station. The apron is promptly thrown over the trailing satin gown. May makes the tea, puts it on a tray, enters the sitting room and, without a word or a turn even of the eye, put the tray on the table. Tom and his mother show their amazement. The mother senses the situation and smilingly glides out of the room. Tom puts out both hands to May in dumb query. She is in his arms.

Mr. August takes the role of the clergyman. Miss Hawley has the part of May. The work of the two and of the entire support is convincing—excellent.

"THE IRON HEEL" (Essanay), Nov. 29.—A picture made unusually interesting by Norman MacDonald's strong portrayal of a vindictive old miser. This old man tries to get his enemy's son convicted of murdering him. He sets his trap well, even making a will in the man's favor to provide a motive, and setting one of his cottages on fire, as though to cover the crime. Then he keeps in hiding, but is discovered just before the execution. The Selig people some time ago used this same character and situation, which came perhaps from a popular detective story, but their picture didn't equal this this on account of Essanay's old miser. The Selig picture was, however, better conducted. This story is clear only as to its main thread; some of its subordinate things are not understood. Because of this, and because the producer conducted the picture as a detective story, inasmuch as he kept at every step the outcome hidden as much as possible, although the detective was not the hero, he failed to get at certain points the feeling of suspense that was desirable. He didn't explain enough to awaken expectation. In a detective story the audience's opinion of the detective's brain power furnishes this. We didn't know much about the detective in this case, and were not made interested in his part of the work. We were left merely guessing, not expecting anything. It is always the expected things that make for suspense. The unexpected things have a legitimate use in pictures, but in another way. Francis X. Bushman plays the youth suspected of murder. Also in the cast are Harry Cashman, Beverly Bayne, Mildred Weston and Helen Dunbar.

"THE STROKE OAR" (Lubin), Nov. 29.—Edmund Steel, the author of this picture of college life, furnished what might have been made into a masterpiece. The picture's story works up to a closely contested three-cornered race between eight-oared shells. It tells how the stroke oar got into trouble with the college authorities, how he was forbidden to row in the coming race, and how he did row nevertheless, and was forgiven because his boat won. The picture was conducted to give a farcical atmosphere, and in our opinion this weakened it. Perhaps the producer feared to make his college president a sensible man, since he had to make him act like a martinet, but he seems too clownish. The president is played by William Orlemund; his daughter by Dorothy Mortimer, and the stroke oar by Charles Compton. Also in the cast are John Holmes, Ned Steel, R. C. Travers and Cy Morgan, who plays the coach.

"ON DONOVAN'S DIVISION" (Edison), Nov. 30.—A railroad love story, clear, well acted and pleasing. The fireman, Donovan, loves the station master's pretty daughter. His engineer also is in love with her. Their train, a freight, is following an excursion train, when on a down grade the air brakes refuse to work. The engineer proves a coward, and the fireman stays by the engine and averts a catastrophe. Edna Flugrath, with her pleasing self and her good acting, makes an interesting heroine. Bigelow Cooper is an acceptable Donovan. Charles Ogle plays the engineer; William Wadsworth the conductor, and John Sturgeon the station master; all are natural. The railroad scenes, including the rush down the grade and the climax, are all fine. The audience seemed to be enjoying it, and it ought to be generally popular.

"THE MAYOR FROM IRELAND" (Kalem), Nov. 30.—There is nothing that so criticises the majority of pictures as the few that, like this, are very well produced. It is not a great or a deeply significant offering, but its story is freshly entertaining and human, and it is both naturally and sincerely acted and smoothly and clearly told. Consequently our attention is captured and held from the start.

It is a story of Ireland and America. The early scenes show us glimpses of farming life in the old country and the beginning of a love story. As usual in Kalem Irish pictures, these scenes are lovely. We have in them a happy couple and an unsuccessful lover who goes away to America. A few years pass and the young couple, hearing of the success of their fellow townsman, decide to emigrate also. They sell their cow to buy tickets. All through the story we find these truthful, homely incidents that are not necessary to making the story clear, but add much to its interest. In America the man and wife find hard luck. The wife gets sick, and the husband applies for work to his rival, the successful contractor, and is insulted. Yet in time he becomes successful and is elected mayor in a campaign against his rival.

The picture's quality comes partly from the care used in arranging the scenes so that it is an organic whole and seems to grow, and partly from the acting which makes the characters seem real. We think it one of Director Sid Olcott's best productions. The girl is played by Gene Gauntier in her usual distinguished style. Jack Clark plays her husband, and J. P. McGowan the other man. An unusually desirable offering.

"RANCH MATES" (Lubin), Nov. 30.—Miss C. B. Peterson, the writer in this picture, has fabricated a typical Western story of rather old style, which F. J. Grandon has produced smoothly and clearly. It deals with a bad man and his sister and the bad man's bunkmate. The bad man is leading a double life, but loves his sister, who is coming to live on the ranch. The bunkmate has fallen in love with the sister's photograph. The bad man is found out and kills himself just before the sister comes. She marries the bunkmate. The bad man is played by Burton King, his sister by Clara Williams, and the bunkmate by Edgar Jones.

"O'HARA, SQUATTER AND PHILOSOPHER" (Vitagraph), Nov. 30.—The author of this picture of life in the shanty borders of Brooklyn deserves credit for a fresh and human glimpse of a few good Irish characters; two of 'em are real fightin' Irishmen, and O'Hara is a peacemaker. Underneath the neighborhood scrap, caused by O'Grady's goat, who gets some of Sullivan's cherished flowers, is a love story. Sullivan's daughter and Grady's son are sweethearts, and it is chiefly to help these two that O'Hara is moved to act. The picture was ably produced by Van Dyke Brooke, who plays O'Hara. Perhaps the best thing in it is William Shea's Tim Sullivan in a fighting mood. He is so mad he breaks his own dudheen, and his hands and feet seem to "smell battle from afar." Robert Gaillord is also good. These three men, with Kate Price as Mrs. Sullivan, really make the picture. Also in the cast are Mrs. Maurice, Dorothy Kelly, Hughie Mack, Richard Rosson and Norma Talmadge. It is a very enjoyable offering.

"BRUTALITY" (Biograph), Dec. 2.—"Brutality" seems an honest but a rather unfortunate title for so good a picture; such a name is hardly a recommendation. The offering is one of those suggestive Biograph sermons, like "The String of Pearls," but it is better. One finds a good deal of sincerity in it, and a good deal of human truth. There is also individuality of style and something of progressiveness and originality, which promises well for the future of the picture business. The Biograph producer plays upon his characters as though they were musical instruments, and we are full of admiration for the impressions he is able to make, just by facial expression. In his beautiful photographs his characters appear as through fine opera glasses. Every change of expression is more clearly pictured than if they were really before us, and one isn't embarrassed drinking the effect in. Is it not truly soul-music? Can such impressions be created in any other way than on the screen?

The story is of a husband and his wife. The man has an ugly, brutal temper, especially when he is drunk. The girl had warning, the testimony of her own eyes, before she married him, but he said that her he never would hurt. They are working people, and not very long after the wedding the little wife finds this husband of hers different from what she hoped. The way he treats her, and her consequent attitude toward him, are very truthfully suggested; one sees things not unlike it now and then. The man finally sees himself at a show where "Oliver Twist" is being played, and repents. Miss Mae Marsh plays the wife and does admirably. The scenes, acting, photography are all that could be desired. The picture is a desirable offering.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY No. 49," Dec. 2.—The best items just now are the glimpses of Balkan war scenes. There are a number of very interesting ones in this week's topical, taken in Servia, Montenegro and also in Turkey in Asia Minor. Such pictures are very valuable. We also find the usual other items of deep interest.

"THE ABSENT-MINDED VALET" (Vitagraph), Dec. 2.—John Daly Murphy wrote the scenario for this comedy, which is fresh and would have been very amusing had it been played more spontaneously. The valet has a clown's part, and while Hughie Mack, who plays it, had the proper physical build for the part, his clown work lacks the subtle fun suggestion so necessary and so pleasing when well done. Frederick Thomson, the director, has handled the picture well and made it fairly effective; it brought out a number of laughs. Mrs. Kate Price plays the valet's long suffering mother. It is she who gets him the job. Harry T. Morey plays the employer and does very well.

"A DOLLAR SAVED IS A DOLLAR EARNED" (Edison), Dec. 3.—A picture pointing the value of scientific, consistent saving, even when in small sums. Augustus Phillips and Bliss Milford take the parts of sweethearts, and then of husband and wife. The salary of the husband is stationary; the wife, nevertheless, saves a dollar a week, putting the money into the base of the big lamp. When in later life the husband is discharged because his usefulness as a clerk is at an end, and things look black, he regrets that he cannot buy a farm which may be obtained on a payment of $500 down. The wife takes the money from the lamp. It is a pretty story throughout and holds all the way.

"WESTERN GIRLS" (Essanay), Dec. 3.—There is a hold-up; the two men who do the trick go out into the woods to divide the loot; they are seen by two girls, who ride back to inform the sheriff; there is no one in the office; the two girls masquerade as men and go back and hold up the hold-upers, bind them and are bringing them into town when they meet the sheriff and his posse on the way to find the robbers, they having been notified by the driver of the stage coach; the robbed passengers get back their property; that's all.

"THE SCOOP" (Vitagraph), Dec. 3.—The nub of this comedy-drama is where Edith Storey, as the girl reporter, gets a much-wanted interview with a public man. She gains access to the man's estate and learns that he is bathing in a private lake, but sans clothes. She uses the man's wearing apparel for a cushion and compels him to answer her questions before she will depart. She gets her story and brings it all the way back to town on the train, instead of wiring it in. The inside of a newspaper shop is shown, among other departments the composing room and the pressroom. The comedy is worth while.

"AT NAPOLEON'S COMMAND" (Cines), Dec. 2.—Here is a picture it is a pleasure to see. It is billed as a two-reel special—in other words, a feature. It is a feature, for every one of its two thousand feet—in fact, a picture on which an exhibitor can safely go the limit. It would be useless to attempt to describe this picture in a few words; it could not be done. Go see "At Napoleon's Command."

Independent

"THE PERKINS-JENKINS WAR" (Solax), November 29.—A clever comedy in which Billy and Sallie have a difficult time getting married. Their families are at war. There is a frustrated elopement and a double suicide which fizzles out very properly. In the end all factions are united happily. A good comedy offering.

"THE HYPNOTIC CHAIR" (Majestic), December 1.—A fantastic idea worthy of a stronger plot. The hypnotic chair throws its spell over a dozen or more people at once, and lastly over the rebellious wife. There are some good restaurant and Broadway street scenes.

"TOO MUCH MOTHER-IN-LAW" (Comet), November 30.—Jenkins and Casey exchange overcoats in a restaurant. Their cards are mixed and also the presents each was taking to his wife. Trouble ensues and one of the men plans a robbery of his own house to bring the rope of pearls into proper hands. This is fair comedy with good photographic effects.

"A TOPSY TURVY LOVE AFFAIR" (Reliance), December 7.—Merely an effort at comedy. Two couples are seen at the beginning giving lessons in the art of making love. A duel scene follows, the pistols being loaded with bread crumbs. At the close the women come to the rescue and all ends happily.

"THE LAW OF GOD" (American), December 9.—The hero of this, played by Warren Kerrigan, is an atheist. He loves the minister's daughter, but their marriage is forbidden. He is involved in a plot to wreck a train, but refuses to throw the switch after reading an excerpt from the Bible. There is an exciting chase across country. In the end the outlaw becomes converted and marries the girl.

"NELL OF THE PAMPAS" (American), December 12.—The setting is the chief beauty of this film, as the story ends with a little too much tragedy. Three characters out of the five are shot. Pauline Bush and Warren Kerrigan play the leads. The scenes in the pampas field are exceptionally attractive.

"HIS SQUAW" (Broncho), December 4.—Though a little slow in reaching the plot, this two-reel offering is meritorious and works up to a good climax. The attack on the wagon train is realistic, as well as the scenes of the Indians in camp. The women and children are led to the fort, where their lives are saved by Jim Hale. Blue Sky, the Indian squaw, makes an effort to revenge the supposed death of her husband, the squawman; it is well played. Her fall from the cliff seems too realistic for safety. The story closes with Jim Hale and his former sweetheart reunited. A successful film.

"FOR THE CAUSE" (Kay-Bee).—It is a pleasure to commend the stirring war pictures made by this company, such as the two-reel offering given here. It would be a captious critic who would quarrel with the California setting for these tense, vivid scenes, though the surroundings are not historically accurate. But there is such a wealth of scenic detail, careful costuming and splendid acting, that if anything there is an improvement over the true southern battleground. This film reveals tremendous distances, with files of soldiers sharply outlined against the sky, bursting bombs, and all the paraphernalia of actual warfare. Even the horses fall and lie struggling as though trained to the work. The plot is interesting and well handled by the principals. A fine offering.

"BROWN'S SEANCE" (Keystone), December 2.—A fortune teller threatens to tell the wives of several men that their husbands are untrue, unless the men dig up some money. The blackmailing scheme succeeds and the men pay up. But the film does not make the best comedy.

"PAT'S DAY OFF" (Keystone), December 2.—Fred Mace draws a good Irish character in this. There is a big hunt for Pat, who is supposed to be lying dead in the sewer, when instead he is peacefully smoking on his back porch. This is on the same reel with the above.

"THE RANCHMAN'S WOOING (Universal), December 18.—This frontier film contains many beautiful Western scenes. The sepia and blue print tones are good. The sub-titles are ultra-romantic, but the story is entertaining. At the last there is a drop from the sublime to the ridiculous that leaves the audience roaring with laughter. But we are afraid much of the laughter is directed at the picture itself because of its farcical ending. Still it is funny, and that is not an inexcusable fault.

"APARTMENT NO. 13" (Gem), December 3.—This picture tries the observer's patience. It is so exceedingly clever and ingenious for the first half that we regret the weakness of the ending. The girl and the hero, played by Billy West and John Adolphi, were gotten into a very novel predicament, but the way out was very disappointing. Telephoning for a minister was a flat windup for this very original little comedy.

"THE RIGHTS OF A SAVAGE" (Bison), December 7.—A tale of Indian vengeance, located in the Hopi Indian region. There are strong, colorful scenes in it. The wounded gambler, after receiving succor at the hands of an Indian Samaritan, lures his squaw away. Three years later he is tortured at the stake. Marguerita Fisher appears as the squaw. The part of the Indian is very strongly played.

"STUDY OF THE FLY" (Eclair), December 5.—This picture should make next summer's cry of "Swat the fly!" stronger than ever. From the time the eggs are hatched we are shown microscopic views of this household pest, and when the picture is finished it is clearly seen what a menace it is to health.

"THE MENDER, THE PIPE AND THE VASE" (Eclair), December 5.—On same reel with above. Domestic troubles which arise from a broken pipe and vase. Clear-cut photography, but only a mildly interesting story.

"BRIDES AND BRIDLES" (Nestor), December 6.—Intimate glimpses into the unhappy existence of two circus girls. The bearded lady, living skeleton, snake charmer and ringmaster are shown. The plot works out well, with the two girls marrying cowboys and making their homes in the West.

"ALMOST A SUICIDE" (Nestor), December 6.—On same reel with above. Edward Lyons and Dorothy Davenport here lead the observer through an interesting first quarrel of a young married couple. Because the husband sat down on a needle he became angry and hot words followed. The scene on the beach is a laugh producer.

"THE TWO INSEPARABLE FRIENDS" (Ambrosio), December 4.—A mere trifle of a plot, depicting the love of a little Italian lad for his dog, but so naturally worked out that we wished it had been longer. Photographically excellent.

"MR. FATTY IS FURNISHED WITH GOOD LUNGS" (Ambrosio), December 4.—This picture, on the same reel, rounds out the offering in good shape. Mr. Fatty's strong breath moves table and chairs, breaks down doors and creates general havoc. One of the best eccentric comedy pictures seen for some time.

"AN ENERGETIC MEMBER" (Powers), December 4.—Baby Early's work as a member of the American Society for the Protection of Cruelty to Animals is here the basis of an amusing picture. She saves a cat and a horse from cruel treatment, and though life imprisonment is not administered to the offenders as she wished, the ends of justice are served. Not a strong story, but one that will do good work for our dumb friends and leave a good impression with the observer.

"THROUGH SHADOWED VALES" (Imp), December 5.—King Baggot and Jane Fearnley work out a story of troubled married life in this picture. We are glad to find that the downfall of both husband and wife through the ravages of drink is after all only a dream. The character work is excellent and with the happy ending this makes a successful offering.

"ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 38" (Universal), November 28.—Views of the Yale-Princeton football game, Paris Fashions, Cardinal Gibbons dedicating a Baltimore church, Turkish war prisoners, Boy Scouts at play and practice and intimate views of Margaret Illington off the stage, are among the interesting things in this number.

"NO GREATER LOVE" (Imp), December 2.—A blind girl falls in love with a hunchback violinist. When her sight is restored she thinks the hunchback's brother was the musician who had won her heart. The hunchback, perceiving this, drowns himself. This is full of good seacoast pictures. Vivian Prescott and Wm. E. Shay play the leads.

"THE SILENT CALL" (Nestor), December 4.—The hero of this story advances money to send a bankrupt man to California with his daughter. By the time the hero goes West himself, the girl has fallen in love with another man, who in turn befriends the hero. The latter returns home without the girl. Some good California scenes help this plot along and there is a realistic fall from a horse.

"BILLY JONES OF NEW YORK" (Champion), December 2.—The plot of this picture is vague and uncertain in its development, and even the ending does not quite clear things up. This is unfortunate, as there are a lot of interesting people on the screen and some interesting glimpses of New York streets. There is a bogus Italian count and numerous complications crop up, but they do not hold the attention strongly enough.

"A WILL AND A WAY" (Thanhouser), December 3.—Besides telling a good, entertaining story in a series of clear pictures, this film also carries a strong "office" atmosphere. The setting is good throughout, and even the way the blonde stenographer chews her gum is realistic. The plot tells of how the scheming nephew was kept out of an inheritance which finally went to the daughter. A good film throughout.

"STANDING ROOM ONLY" (Thanhouser), December 1.—Here is a humorous conceit of an interesting character. A farmer is elected keeper of the jail and his daughter proves such a good cook that all the tramps of the vicinity make an effort to be arrested. The jail is soon overcrowded, but the girl is induced to leave and the next morning there is no breakfast. The prisoners immediately yearn for freedom. Pictorially good.

"ROUGH ON RATS" (Punch), December 12.—The hero of this story, played by Herbert Pryor, is supposed to be dying from eating "rough on rats." There is a badly tangled love affair and a great deal of somewhat confusing action of an amusing kind.

"THE BABY AND THE COP" (Punch), December 12.—This comedy, on the same reel, shows the fattening effects of a certain medicine, which make a baby grow with amazing rapidity. Little Herbert Rice appears in humorous contrast to the large infant.

"A DEVIL OF A TIME" (Punch), December 19.—In this half-reel an escaped lunatic masquerades as the devil, creating much havoc wherever he appears. Men run and ladies faint, but he is at last apprehended.

"WANTED, A HUSBAND" (Punch), December 19.—On the same reel with above. Featuring little Herbert Rice, who becomes the diminutive husband of big Maggie Malone. Their ensuing troubles are interesting and amusing.

"A TELEPHONE ENTANGLEMENT" (Gaumont), Dec. 5.—A young man is overheard answering a matrimonial advertisement over the telephone. Four girls at central office appear at the appointed rendezvous, with white roses at their belts. They "cut out" the spinster who advertised for a husband, and the hero carries off one of the telephone girls.

"WHEN THE SPHINX SPOKE" (Powers), Dec. 6.—A picture with pretty scenes taken in Southern California. The story lacks clearness, one of the most important qualities in a production designed to be dramatic. The objecting father turns back toward his house and sees a pair of shoes going in a window. He suspects that his daughter's sweetheart is paying a clandestine call, and hurries to give him a warm reception. The shoes belong to a yeggman, but it happens that the lover is really in the house. This situation has been handled before dramatically, but in this instance we don't know just what really happened. The burglar seemed to get very sick suddenly, and the sweetheart gets the reputation of being a hero. The photography is fair.

"WATERING PLACES IN CALIFORNIA" (Powers), Dec. 6.—An interesting scenic.

"DIAMOND CUT DIAMOND" (Milano), Dec. 7.—A somewhat drawn out two-reel subject that would have been much more acceptable in one part. The most remarkable thing about the picture is that it is a Milano picture, and yet is so inconsequential. We have grown to expect much more substantial material from this maker. The story is one of those colorless adventures, with a coast guard hero, a gang of counterfeiters with an accomplished scheming woman among them, and the jealous wife of the guardsman. The backgrounds are, for the most part, a rocky shore, a cave in which the spurious money is made, and a few interiors.

"AN ELECTION BET" (Imp), Dec. 7.—Something better might have been made of this farce if it had been more carefully produced. The acting lacks both the sincerity that might have made it amusing as a satire, and that indescribable spontaneity that would have made it a joyous burlesque. It is not at all dramatic, and concerns itself merely with showing how three old and foolish clubmen lost an election bet and had to dress up like children and play childish pranks on the street. It is not truly funny.

"PAUL AND VIRGINIA" (Rex), Dec. 5.—A two-reel illustration of a once popular romance. Spectators over sixty may get more out of it than the present generation which hasn't read the story. As a picture, it lacks dramatic suspense, but stands on its pleasant sentiment. The scenes meant to represent Martinique are poor; one shows a few palm leaves stuck in the ground, with autumn foliage and half-denuded trees in the background. The hero and heroine, Paul and Virginia, are fine; their acting seems just what it ought to be—in fact, the acting as a whole is the picture's biggest asset, if it isn't its saving grace.

"THE WHEEL OF DESTINY" (Rex), Dec. 8.—There are pictures like this that deal with life in a pleasant but not very convincing way, and yet appeal to the average spectator more than some artistically made offerings. The average spectator goes to a show to be amused; he wants to see things that he likes. This picture, although one might easily find fault with some of it, provides good entertainment. It is a Thanksgiving story of two faithful darkies who have come to a Northern city. The ex-slave finds his old master, by mere chance, in dire poverty. He spends all the money he and his wife had been saving for a turkey to buy "ole marster" some decent clothes, and then, darky-like, steals a chicken for "marster's" dinner. He is caught and brought before a judge who turns out to be "young marster," who had lost track of his father. The people will like it.

"THE FOOLISHNESS OF OLIVER" (Victor), Dec. 6.—Fritzie Brunette and Owen More have the leads in this picture dealing in a rather conventional way with the youth who marries an actress and is disowned by his father. In this case the adventures of the young couple, after they get down to hard-pan, and before the rich father is convinced that the girl is really worthy, are fresh and much more entertaining than usual. Owen More is a competent actor, and Fritzi Brunette is pretty and intelligent and makes a very acceptable heroine. The scenes in which Oliver is a waiter and has an amusing encounter with two of his one-time friends who are behaving ungenerously are fine. As an offering it will be liked.

"A TANGLED MARRIAGE" (Crystal), December 8.—Pearl White is a real actress and in this pleasantly farcical love story she is ably supported by Chester Barnett. The hero, by the terms of a will, has to get married by noon on a certain day, and finds it out, just at the last hour. The story turns on the need for clothes of an escaped prisoner who changes his stripes for the parson's sober respectability just as the young couple arrive at the parsonage. Nearly all the curious twists of freaky fortune possible have been used in the development of this situation. It is good entertainment.

"THE BLACK PRINCE" (Crystal), December 8.—An amusing farce, somewhat broader than the one above, on the same reel. Of a darkie couple, the husband gets a job as sandwich man, advertising a palmist. The wife gets a job as cook. Her mistress takes the sandwich man for a black prine, reported to be in town and the cook finds her entertaining him. A picture that would be displeasing in the South.

KINEMACOLOR.

"NEW COIFFURES" (Kimemacolor).—On the same reel, some very pretty women showing new styles of dressing the hair. It was taken in New York City and shows the work of Wm. Hepner, a hair dresser.

"MEDITERRANEAN SCENES" (Kinemacolor).—Gives very interesting glimpses, rather short, of ports around history's most interesting waters. They are Marseilles, Palermo, Athens, Gibraltar, the Port of Algiers, etc. The photography is not of the best, but is fair.

"SALVAGE OPERATIONS OF S. S. OCEANA" (Kinemacolor).—The S. S. Oceana went aground and sank near Eastborne on the English coast. A few sketches show how she was raised. An interesting sea picture.

"COIFFURES BY W. HEPNER" (Kinemacolor).—On the same reel is found an added attraction in this fashion plate. Pretty girls and new ways of dressing the hair. It was made in New York.

"ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS, ROME" (Kinemacolor).—The colors in this picture are pleasing, but it is not so well photographed as the best color pictures.

"LAKE GARDA, ITALY" (Kinemacolor).—Lake Garda is one of the beauty spots of the world and it fortunate for us that the Kinemacolor camera has captured views of it so lovely as are these. The picture is a series of animated paintings often as clearly captured, so well photographed are they, as the reflections of a mirror. Surely it is an offering to make lovers of nature enthusiastic.

The views are mostly taken from the deck of a boat and we see for instance snowy mountains above, set out against a pale blue sky and delicately painted with graceful blue lines. Just below them are foot hills grown with pines, benches and birches. Pink, mauve, fawn and grey are the colors here, tender as springtime and almost breathing perfume. A flat land of meadows and orchards lies between these hills and the shore where we see a marble palace and its garden with balustrades, touches of bright color and its sharp ilexes, pine-dark trees shaped like broad Grecian spear-heads. Around us lies the blue, blue water with the silver of sunlight on the right; just a suggestion.

These lovely pictures are many, and one surprising thing about them is that they are so different in atmosphere. One comes that reminds us of Turner; it was the kind of scene that he liked to choose. This may be followed by a scene that suggests Maxfield Parrish's work, mostly because it has caught clouds like his and because this is so marked, the whole seems to be thrown into Parrish's mood. Others are like Italian illustrations by Howard Pyle. These men probably would dislike the comparison, because they haven't seen just these pictures and more than probably presume that no camera can get pictures of nature in nature's own colors. They ought to see this picture.

A NEW BOSTON FEATURE EXCHANGE.

While one of the youngest in the field, the Majestic Feature Film Exchange, of 224 Tremont Street, Boston, is fast forging to the front and with several of the strongest of the late feature releases is coming to be known as most progressive. The exchange is conducted by Frank Boscketti and Prof. S. Jannelli, both of whom have had wide experience in the motion picture business and therefore have that particular knack of knowing just what the people want. Prof. Jannelli is well known in New England as a singing teacher and composer of note, while Mr. Boscketti is a technical school graduate. They conduct the Cosmopolitan Theater in Lawrence and the Majestic Theater in Haverhill.

The new exchange has the State rights for New England, covering a wide and important territory. One of their latest features is "Dr. Gar El Hama," the sequel to "The Dead Man's Child," which is a stirring tale of a thief who leads a double life, but who is apprehended in the end, being related in three reels. With all New England to cover they will have a wide range of subjects which are timely and important, and theater managers in that section could not do better than get in touch with them in order to procure the best and newest features as soon as they are out.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs

By George Blaisdell.

IF you see a poster of Cines' "At Napoleon's Command" in front of a picture show house go in and see this fine drama, even if you are late for dinner by reason of so doing. It is a rare picture. Primarily it is a spectacle. Beyond this and above this, it is dramatic. It is of the sort that gets under a man's skin. There are splendid settings a-plenty, and strong scenes likewise. The photography is excellent; and it is enhanced by judicious tinting. An extended review was printed in the Moving Picture World of Nov. 23rd.

There may be some admirers of the "Little Corporal" who will be disappointed in the characterization of the Corsican. The possibility brings to mind an anecdote of Forrest. The great tragedian was put out by the weak reading of his lines by one of the minor members of his company. Forrest stopped the rehearsal and turned to the offender. "Say what you have to say like this!" And in that wonderful voice he indicated how the lines should be uttered. The reprimanded actor looked steadily at Forrest and made a profound bow. "You forget, sir," he said, "my name is not Forrest!"

The chief of the Pinkerton agency confesses that he likes clean picture shows, but in writing to the head of the Union Pacific advertising department he deplores the western hold-up pictures. Mr. Pinkerton thinks that boys may conclude after looking at such scenes that it is an easy matter to hold up a man or rob a bank or train. While fully agreeing with the detective as to the good shows, it must be said there are no pictures at large glorifying the hold-up man. There is always a come-back in the shape of the chase and capture. While this does not excuse the existence of this class of film, it is at least a mitigation. It is probably a fact that the hold-up picture is on the wane. It cannot survive. While there may be no statistics on the subject the writer will venture the assertion that there are less hold-ups and similar crimes now than when the motion picture made its initial bow.

The screen is blamed for crimes committed, occasionally, perhaps, with a measure of justice, but there is no record of the crimes prevented through the quickening of conscience, through seeing the portrayal of the final triumph of the just, the eventual discomfiture of the unjust.

It's getting so out west that a man cannot desert his wife and with safety attend ball games. Pictures taken in San Francisco of the last game for the coast championship revealed the face of a long-lost to an Oregon woman. An abandoned search has now been renewed, with some prospect of locating the missing man.

Maurice Costello dropped in at the Screen Club on the 3d inst., to say good-bye to such of the boys as might be in the house. He was to start on the following day for Pittsburgh, to visit his mother, on his way to San Francisco, from which point he will sail on the 13th for the Vitagraph's trip around the world. There was a hearty handshake between the Vitagraph man and Henry Walthall without the formality of an introduction. Each recognized the other. These Screen Club "get-togethers" are always interesting. There have been many of them. Costello was given a warm send-off on his trip that may last eight months.

In Oregon this month five condemned murderers are to be hanged on the same day. It is reported that several moving picture concerns sought permission to transfer a record of the executions to film. The Governor of Oregon has denied the applications. There is nothing out of the ordinary in the Governor's action. It is amazing, however, that any man or set of men with sufficient sense to acquire and retain possession of a moving picture camera should have so little regard for public decency as to try to put over anything like this. There is no question, of course, that if a theater manager could be found who would exhibit any pictures of legal executions he would get in a crowd to look at them. That fact would not absolve such manager from public condemnation. No reputable manufacturer would think of putting out a picture of the sort described. No one but a person obsessed with the money habit could. Those who had flashed upon their view in one of the weeklies several months ago a scene of a dozen Turks swaying in the wind can estimate in a measure the horror of the thing these manufacturers would thrust upon us. Out upon such panders!

By means of double exposure Mr. Hackett will be enabled to portray the characters of both the King and Rudolph.

Here's a real story out of Texas—from Brenham, to be exact. The Galveston News is sponsor for it. Read it: "So realistic was the moving picture of a dog that a dog in the audience jumped up on the stage and ran barking after the picture dog. Before he could be restrained he had demolished the screen."

Oh, well! This is not the first time the shadow has been mistaken for the substance.

This will add four hours to the present orchestral program.

C. J. Hite and Fred J. Balshofer are among the recent applicants for life membership in the Screen Club.

Director W. F. Haddock, of Eclair, has gone to Pawnee City, Okla., accompanied by Lamar Johnstone and George Larkin, of the regular Eclair stock, and six others. The Eclair Company has leased the Pawnee Bill Ranch, and will immediately begin the production of Western comedies. Mr. Johnstone and Mr. Larkin are accomplished horsemen, and in their new work will be of especial value to the Eclair productions.

George A. Blair, of the Eastman Kodak Company, is in town for a few days, stopping at the Prince George Hotel. He paid a brief call at the World office.

James Young Deer, producing manager of the Pathe West Coast studio, is in town for a few days. The Screen Club quarters so attracted him that he forthwith made application for a life membership.

MAURICE LESS OPENS PICTURE HOUSE.

Maurice Less, proprietor of the Lyric Film & Supply Company, of Terre Haute, Indiana, has about completed the American theater, in that city, the plans for which were made last summer. The building has been under construction for three months and when completed will be one of the handsomest picture theaters in Terre Haute.

The illumination of the front will be of a design consisting of about 500 lights, the front being built about two and one-half stories high. The electric sign for the roof of the theater, is one of the most elaborate signs erected for a theater. It has an American flag waving in colors and the words, "American Theater," in lights with red, white and blue colors, consisting of 400 lights.

Mr. Less expects to open the place early in December. A handsome souvenir of a box of candy will be given to every woman and child on the two opening days. Mostly special features will be used. Arrangements will be made to obtain all the new features released, in addition to those Mr. Less will buy for his film exchange.

Harry R. Raver, Manager of the Itala Film Co. of America, Offers Twenty-five Dollars for a Name.

IT was not the intention of the Itala Company, whose pictures are made in Italy, to leave a picture unnamed and then to offer a prize to advertise it. It had a name; but translated it duplicates one recently used for a picture made in this country. To avoid this, Mr. H. R. Raver, manager of the American company, whose address is Columbia Theater, New York City, offers twenty-five dollars for the best substitute. The competition is to be free to all. Suggestions must be sent to the Itala Company's address given above, using the following description as a guide:

The nameless offering is a three-reel picture of a self-sacrificing father, and a reviewer of the Moving Picture World's regular staff thinks it one of the strongest and most commendable that has come from the Itala studio. It isn't a love story and has no sloppy sentimentality on the one hand, or on the other, a distressing sex problem or the marital unhappiness and infidelity that we see so much of; but it has a big heart interest.

It is a picture of an old man who had been terribly wronged by his business competitor and who in a sensational climax risks his life in a burning palace to rescue this man's son, who is the fiance of his own daughter. The man is played by Eremete Zaconni, who is said to be one of Italy's leading actors. He most certainly is a wonderful player, and his portrayal of the ruined old man in whom the ache of vengeance is conquered by parental affection is very strong, at one or two brilliant places almost startling. In one scene he has just escaped from prison (he had been convicted though innocent) and finds himself free after years of durance. It is a convulsive moment; but in it he seems to condense weeks of tedious work and crafty planning and in a flash also suggests what he knows his future will be. It is a kind of acting better than most we see.

This man, Andrew Vivanti, had been the owner of a factory to which his business rival, Edward Marney, with the help of a low fellow named Tonio had set on fire. Several persons had perished and Vivanti had been accused of arson and manslaughter for the sake of his heavy insurance. When the story opens he is still in prison. Marney has adopted Vivanti's little daughter and brought her up as his child. She has grown to be a pretty young woman and Marney's son is in love with her. Seeing this has pleased his father, whose conscience has troubled him.

Vivanti escapes from prison and comes back to the city where he lives in the slums as a rag picker. He comes in contact with Tonio, who is blackmailing Marney. The backgrounds in the last two reels are just the hovel, the low inn of Tonio and Vivanti and the palace where Marney lives with his son and adopted daughter; but the different glimpses of them are full of changing interest partly because the action they set forth is always significant. Vivanti finds the truth and forces his way past the doorkeepers to face Marney; but on being shown that his daughter is in love with Marney's son, controls his thirst for vengeance and is on his way to lands unknown, when turning he sees the palace on fire. He comes back and rescues his daughter and his future son-in-law.

The picture has been very carefully made. It is well acted by all in it, very well acted by Tonio. This, with the character of the story and the perfect photography make it a desirable feature picture. It ought to be popular.

UNIVERSAL JOTTINGS.

Universal city is still growing, and will continue to grow, week by week. A new fort has arisen the last few days and a big affair it is. Another huge stage is almost completed and the Armory is an imposing structure.

Director Fahrney is putting on a single reel which is one of the most powerful ever written. Mr. Fahney is noted for his handling of mobs and in this picture mob law rules for some time. The picture will certainly create a sensation and will hold its audience gripped while it is being run.

Director Ricketts is giving the motion picture world something new in the way of plot; something that has not been done before. It consists of a novel way of acquainting a man that a mine has been salted. In the company are Josephine Ricketts, Edna Maison and William Clifford. There are only five characters in the piece, but the acting is strong.

Director Christie is still rolling out full reel and half reel comedies which he and his company enjoy as much as the succeeding audiences do. He has a regular little family party, and the good spirit displayed is half the success of the comedies themselves.

Two Universal actors were in the fatal fire at the St. George Hotel on Third Street, Los Angeles. William Ryno and Jefferson Osbourne occupied a room there. Mr. Ryno got off with slight burns, but Mr. Osbourne is in the Sisters' Hospital suffering from severe burns on the face and hands. Their room was on the third floor and if they had known they could have escaped injury by staying there, as by some curious freak the fire leaped from the second floor to the fourth floor and upward, leaving the third floor almost intact. Ryno is around and Osbourne is getting along as well as can be expected. The fire cast a gloom over the whole ranch, where Mr. Osbourne is much liked. Both men are members of Mr. Fahrney's company.

Dangerous work! more dangerous than most people think for. A large section of the public is of the opinion that most of the effects obtained in motion pictures are faked in some way. Not so. Take, for instance, the last picture put on by Frank Montgomery, "The Perils of the Plains." The action opens with a prairie fire and through the fire bursts Mona Darkfeather, as an Indian maiden, and Charles Bartlett, who rescues her. Both come through actual flames. They could not have done it a few seconds later. As it was Miss Darkfeather dropped her valuable blanket. It was far too hot to gather it up again, and it was entirely burned. Bartlett singed his eyebrows. Then, again, Virginia Chester was tied on the back of a steer which resented the liberty taken and tried to roll over with her. See the picture and you realize the pluck displayed by some of the actors and actresses.

Lee Moran, who was a victim of a recent auto accident, is around again. His collar bone is knitting nicely. Mr. Matthews is recovering slowly, and Miss Elsie Albert is herself again.

Vicky Forde is the star in Director Otis Turner's present Civil war picture, "A Maid at War," and it gives her an opportunity of showing her excellent riding abilities.

Owing to the postponement of Mr. Matthews' production of "Snow White" caused by the auto accident, David Wall has been directing. No new occupation for Mr. Wall. He has put on two split-reel comedies, in one of which Margarita Vollmer appeared as a negro boy—and a cute little boy she made too!

James A. Crosby, the head of the negative department, is a splendid all round man. He is always ready to step into a breach and help a director out. He is well known in the motion picture world and had charge of the department at Selig's, which firm he was with for twelve years. In fact, he brought the first Selig company to the West. He was with the Bison-Reliance for two years. The quality of the work now put out is sufficient testimony to the good work being done by Mr. Crosby.

NEW ENGLAND PICTURE PERSONALITIES.

David F. Cowan.

I met David F. Cowan on the street recently, and he told me that he was representing the Precision Machine Company of New York, and that it was his particular job to demonstrate and sell Simplex motion picture machines. Of course, Dave was high in his praise of the merits of the Simplex, and it seemed good to hear him talking machines, as I haven't forgotten that Dave was the first man in Boston to run a machine.

The Simplex folks should be congratulated on obtaining the services of such a good fellow, and honest worker; and if anyone can sell Simplex machines, Dave is the boy for the job. Mr. Cowan is making his headquarters at the Boston offices of the General Film Company, 564 Washington Street, Boston, at present, and is always ready to call on New England exhibitors, and to demonstrate to them just what the Simplex is capable of doing. Dave is very popular and has earned an enviable reputation for good judgment and square dealing that should stand him in good stead. HENRY.

"The Long Strike" (Imp.)

THIS story by Dion Boucicault has been adapted and produced by Herbert Brenon. Mr. Brenon has done well. He has been particularly fortunate in the selection of a lay member of his cast—Captain Black of the steamship Columbia. It may be difficult to convince many picturegoers that the captain is the Simon Pure sea-dog—he does not act the least bit. He is the captain of the ship; he shows that in his manner. There is not a trace of camera-consciousness in him. Something unusual arises in the course of his day's work. Very well; he meets it just as he meets all such issues. There is not a ripple or a ruffle in the calmness of his bearing. A sailor is insubordinate. The captain orders him put in irons. The incident is closed. The captain's unconcern in the face of the rapid-fire camera matches the work recently done by Opie Read in "The Starbucks." It is beyond praise.

Vivian Prescott's talent for serious work has full play in this drama. As Jane Learoyd, whose sweetheart is accused of murder, she has much to do in the making of the play. Notable also, is the characterization of Frank Smith as Noah Learoyd, the father of Jane, who, after shooting Readley, his employer, loses his mind. The portrayal of the transition from the sound to the unsound, of the creeping on of insanity, is impressive. William E. Shay has the part of Jim Starkey, the man unjustly accused of murder; Mr. Brenon of John Reilly, his sailor friend, and William Dunn of Richard Readley, the employer.

Scene from "The Long Strike" (Imp).

Of course, the chief incident in the drama is the chase by the tug of the steamship, the climb up the side, the appeal to the captain for the release of the sailor, and, when the captain refuses to release Reilly, of the latter's jump into the water and being picked up by the tug. Also there is a wild ride on a locomotive in an effort to beat out the jury's decision in the murder trial. The flashes from the chase to the courtroom, and later to the room where the members of the jury are in session, keep the interest at the top notch.

Jim Starkey is betrothed to Jane Learoyd, the daughter of old Noah Learoyd. Both men work in the factory of Richard Readley, who makes advances to Jane. To free herself from his attentions, she arranges to meet the employer of her father and sweetheart near her house at night. Her father learns of the appointment, and loads an old-fashioned pistol, in which he uses as a wad a portion of a letter written to his daughter by her sweetheart, Jim. He then starts out for the place of the appointment, and, seeing his daughter in the arms of his employer, believes that she is dishonored and shoots him. At that instant he loses his mind.

His daughter Jane knows that he has done murder, but her sweetheart Jim is accused. The wad is found near the body, and the fact that it is in his handwriting is used as evidence against him. At the moment of the murder, however, Jim was in another city saying farewell to his chum Johnny, who is leaving for Europe on an Atlantic liner.

When Jim returns to his home he is arrested and accused. Jane comes to his cell and he tells Jane of his meeting with Johnny, the sailor on the steamship Columbia, and she, to save his life, calls on a prominent attorney asking him to help her. She pleads with the cranky lawyer, who eventually decides to help her. We see her arrive at the steamship dock, but too late. The old lawyer hires a tug and it races after the huge liner. Eventually they catch up with it and, stopping it, Jane and the lawyer climb aboard. The captain, however, refuses to allow Johnny to return to New York, claiming that he needs him for his crew, which is shorthanded.

Johnny pleads with him, but in vain, and Jane and the lawyer sorrowfully return to the tug, which pulls away from the vessel. Johnny realizes that his friend's life is in his hands. He makes one more appeal to the captain, is refused, ordered to be put in irons for insolence, and this is about to be done when he runs to the side of the vessel and makes a jump into the sea many feet below. He is picked up by the tug, which races back to New York. They arrive there too late to catch the train, but bargain with an engine driver to take them back to where Jim is being tried. This is done and they arrive in the courtroom just as the jury returns and is about to pronounce the verdict of guilty. Johnny rushes up to the stand, tells his story to the judge, and Jim is released.

"THE ERROR OF OMISSION" (Essanay).

This is a feature educational subject of vital importance to parents, taken in co-operation with the Chicago Board of Health, showing how important and necessary it is to register a child's birth. Following is a brief outline or synopsis of the story.

Tom Lawton is born in the world, and his father, one of the common type of careless parents, neglects to register his birth certificate in a flurry resulting from having a young bull pup sent him by a friend. The dog is registered at once, however, and the contrast of the two registry offices is startling. Before the dog registry office a huge crowd clamor for attention from the overworked clerks, while at the birth registry counter the clerks yawn and nod over their neglected books. Tommy grows into a sturdy lad, and his father has the greatest difficulty in securing him a place in the public school, because of his birth never having been registered. At the age of fourteen, Tommy is left alone in the world by the death of his father and is unable to secure employment on account of not having a birth certificate. The years pass on and Tommy is now a young man in love with pretty Eva Cushman. Feeling himself of age, and desiring to cast his vote for a staunch friend of Eva's father, Tommy tries to register at the polls, but is challenged because of his youthful appearance, and, not being able to prove his age, is turned away. Later, he endeavors to secure a marriage license, but it is the same old story—he cannot prove his age and is rejected. One morning he receives a letter advising that he has inherited a fortune if he can prove his identity. Again the neglect of registering his birth almost loses Tommy the fortune until he happens to discover his father's old dog registration paper, on the back of which is carelessly scribbled: "Also became the father of a fine, bouncing boy on this date." With this scrap of good luck, Tommy hurries to the lawyer, proves his identity by revealing an old birth mark on his neck, and is rewarded with the money.

This is indeed an object lesson for lax parents. The role of the boy is played admirably by Whitney Raymond. This production is booked for release Dec. 13th.

PROUD OF PRAISE FROM PASTOR.

C. J. Hite gives the World for publication a letter he received recently from Tillman B. Johnson, Pastor of the Salem Baptist Church, of New Rochelle, and of which he is very proud.

The letter reads:

Thanhouser Co., Nov. 25, 1912.

Gentlemen: It was my pleasure on Wednesday afternoon to witness your presentation of "The Star of Bethlehem." I thank you for this courtesy, and I have this frank word to say:

The Motion Picture is here, it is here to stay; it is a mighty factor in present day civilization, it is steadily improving, morally, and has within it the possibiltes of unbounded good.

Some of its presentations are yet to be condemned, and must be prohibited; but your picture story of "The Star of Bethlehem, is to be heartily commended. It is sympathetic, instructive, forceful and reverent.

Wishing you success in the best, I am, gratefully and sincerely yours, TILLMAN B. JOHNSON.

"The Revenge of the Fakir"

A Sensational, Two-Reel Feature by the American Eclair, Makes Startling Use of Wild Animals.

"THE REVENGE OF THE FAKIR," a special feature release by the Eclair Company, is an Anglo-Indian story set in the highlands of India. As in most of Kipling's stories, its mainspring is race antagonism and it concerns itself with a conflict between brutal straight-forwardness in an Englishman and subtle guile, which is even more brutal, in the fakir. This fakir is a high caste and very reverend mendicant priest. When we, here in America, use the word fakir, we have an contemptible kind of men in view, not so in India. The fakir of the story is a holy man.

The picture opens with a street scene in a mountain village. It is a temperate region; not all India is in the tropics. A few dark-skinned and turbanned natives are seated before the reed-thatched huts and the fakir is in their midst teaching them. A company of British soldiers on horses is seen approaching. As they ride into the village, the peasants scatter, but the old fakir remains seated. The English captain commands him to leave the narrow way, so that his men can pass. He pays no attention and the captain strikes him in the face with his riding whip.

Scene from "The Revenge of the Fakir" (Eclair).

As though stung to the quick, the old man leaps up and stands aside, his face scowling in hatred, while the cavalcade rides unconcerned away.

After this pithy statement of the situation, the results are smoothly and clearly unfolded to us, making an engrossing story full of good atmosphere. This locality feeling, so well suggested as it is, so Oriental, is one of the picture's strong points. Produced in this country, it required much care to give this appearance of a land so different. The best scenes are naturally small scenes, corners of some temple, or of some peasant's hut, with now and then a close-view exterior; but they are all remarkable and reflect much credit on the producer. And good as these backgrounds are, the drawing of the characters is is even better. The English characters one expects to be natural and they surely are; but even the fakir, the Hindoo priests and the Indian peasants, are naturally hidden, partly under paint, partly under good acting.

The fakir, helped by his friends, plans a complicated vengeance for the blow on his face. It had to be accomplished subtly; because it is to be against the ruling race. He makes use of a queer man, a veiled creature, like the "cat man" of one of Kipling's stories. This mysterious being, with the help of an obedient tiger, steals the English captain's son. When the child is gone, the authorities suspect foul play; but are not sure, since the tiger's presence makes it seem also a wild beast's act. A search is instituted and the huts of the peasants are ransacked. A British officer is even shown the baby; but its face and hands have been colored and it is passed as an Indian child.

Years pass: The child has been brought up by the priest. It adds to our interest to see him passing among the white people as black. He stains himself every day, as a religious exercise and perhaps doesn't suspect, even when he has become a grown lad, that his skin is much whiter than the priest's. The Bramin caste springs from white stock and many of them are still almost as white as the English.

A love story is now introduced, which soon works out to the final nullification of the vengeance. The priest's lad falls in love with an English girl. This love episode follows the natural and expected course under the circumstances. The girl admires the high-born native lad and accepts flowers from him; but her friends could hardly be expected to encourage the affair. The opposition ends with the discovery of the lad's white origin and of his parentage which, after a breathless climax, the rescue of the girl from a wild leopard by the lad, is wrung from the thoroughly frightened fakir.

This rescue is, in part, something quite new in pictures. The lad tackles the leopard unarmed. The struggle was intended to be lively; but the beast went wild suddenly. The lad gets at a revolver (no one will stop at this point to wonder why he hadn't done it before), and shoots him. We are told that the player is still in the hospital from the scratching he got. It certainly is a thrill. The death agony of the beast is vivid, it seems to the reviewers almost too much so for comfort, but that is merely our own opinion. When the beast lies dead, the lad faints and the whiteness of his breast is remarked. A dramatic scene shows the confession of the fakir, and the love story's denouement provides a pleasant ending.

It makes a good substantial feature, for it is well made and its story is off the beaten track.

TURNS COUPONS DOWN.

Official Action on the Cigarette Coupon Scheme by Motion Exhibitors League No. 2 of California.

Oakland, Cal., Nov. 22, 1912.

The Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Dear Sirs: The Motion Picture Exhibitors League No. 2 of California, declared themselves at the last meeting and absolutely decline to recognize any scheme of this kind. Our object is to bring this class of amusement up to the highest standard—Clean, Entertaining and Educational, and it is the purpose of the majority in this business throughout the country.

We trust that through your splendid magazine, this matter will be taken up and effectually put an end to.

This should also be taken up by the National Exhibitors League and the National Board of Censorship.

Thanking you, we beg to remain, very sincerely yours,
Motion Picture Exhibitors League No. 2 of California.
E. B. Whitney, Secty.

OHIO STATE CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Ohio will be held at Columbus, January 21st and 22nd, 1913. Extensive plans are being made for a big meeting, and officers of the Ohio State League will be elected on this occassion for the ensuing year.

Adding to the importance of the convention will be a meeting of the National vice presidents representing the several state leagues now affiliated with the National organization.

SYRACUSE EXHIBITORS WILL DANCE.

Arrangements are being made by the members of the Syracuse Exhibitors Local for the grand ball at the state armory in that city on January 28th. The details of preparation are not at hand, but it is said that Mr. John Bunny, the famous Vitagraph star, and other prominent photoplayers will attend this event.

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH IN THE HOSPITAL AND SCHOOL.

Power's Cameragraph No. 6A has been recently installed in the State Hospital for Insane at Concord, New Hampshire, for the entertainment of the inmates of the Institution. The Board of Trustees find that moving pictures properly projected have a very beneficial effect upon the patients. Power's Cameragraph No. 6A has also been installed at St. Cecilia's School, Greenpoint, L. I.

ERROR IN LAST WEEK'S COSMOPOLITAN ADVERTISEMENT.

Through an error in proof reading, the address of Mr. K. W. Linn of the Cosmopolitan Films was given in last week's paper as 145 West 145 street. As everyone in the trade knows, this should have been 145 West 45 street, Mr. Linn having located in the well known Exchange Building several weeks ago.

News and Views of Houses Here and There

THE ALHAMBRA, INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

DICKSON & TALBOTT, two of the most substantial citizens of Indianapolis, recently completed their magnificent new picture theater, the Alhambra, and are now showing to big audiences.

This beautiful house was built specially for motion pictures, at a cost of $60,000. It is absolutely fireproof, being constructed of concrete and steel. The doors are of steel, and were manufactured by the Dahlstrom Metal Door Co., of Jamestown, N. Y. The floors are of cement and are covered with three-quarter inch rubber, thus making the entrance and exit of patrons inaudible.

View of Entrance to Alhambra Theater.

The front, which is massive and architecturally beautiful, as can be seen in the accompanying illustrations, was designed and built by the Rookwood Pottery Company, of Cincinnati. The color scheme of the front is a turquoise matrix, with green, brown and yellow colors artistically blended. All these colors are permanent, being burnt in the tile. The front trimmings, including lighting standards, are of copper. The interior decorations are in continental yellow, gold and black, the lighting fixtures being of bronze. The indirect lighting system is used. Black silk velour draperies are used throughout the house.

A Rembusch mirror screen has been installed; also a $10,000 pipe organ, erected by Moller of Hagerstown, Md. This is the largest pipe organ in the state of Indiana.

The Alhambra has installed a most up-to-date and perfect system of ventilation. In summer and winter the air will be of such temperature as will contribute to the comfort of patrons. The height from the floor to the ceiling is 30 feet.

The basement is provided with lavatories, steel lockers for employes and a special rehearsal room for singers.

"We have traveled all over the United States, and must say that we have never seen a house, devoted to moving pictures, as fine as the Alhambra in Indianapolis, and as complete in every detail," write Messrs. Dickson & Talbott.

THE ROYAL THEATER—ARDMORE, OKLA.

Mr. Harry M. Lowenstein is the manager of the Royal Theater, Ardmore, Okla., a cut of which we publish herewith. Mr. Lowenstein says that he opened the Royal on the second day of February, 1912, and has been kept busy counting the pile of money he is continually making from his house. Maybe the reason for Mr. Lowenstein's rapid rise to "millionaireville" is due to the fact that he gives his patrons music emanating from a set of Deagan's bells and from a five-piece orchestra which gives music suitable to the picture and not such a selection as "Everybody's Doing It," while the hero or heroine is "doing" a death act.

The Royal Theater.

The inside of the house is painted in colors of red and green with plaster relief decorations. The projection booth is made of asbestos, a Motiograph machine is used and the indirect lighting system has been installed. The pictures are projected upon a curtain invented and patented by a resident of Ardmore, and it is giving entire satisfaction. Motion pictures constitute each program.

LEASES EMPIRE THEATER AS PICTURE HOUSE.

Mr. Joseph Miller, of the Miller Enterprises, with headquarters at 89-91 Glen Street, Glens Falls, N. Y., has leased from the Shuberts for a term of five years the Empire Theater in that city. Mr. Miller opened the place on the fourteenth of November as a moving picture and vaudeville house.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE CROOKED PATH" (Lubin).

"The Crooked Path" is a two-reel special featuring four of the Lubin star players, supported by an admirable cast. It is a dramatic story of the underworld, picturing with much realism the workings of a den of thieves and the salvation of a girl who quits the evil life to find love and happiness in the family of a young clergyman. The first scenes show the crooks at their miserable work. Nell is in the toils of a brute who thinks he loves her. One of his jobs lands him in jail and the girl runs away from the wretched home to take her chances in the world for a new life. Fate throws her in the path of a young clergyman who hearing her story offers to help her to redeem the past and find happiness in the future. The young minister's mother is blind and Nell is assigned as a guide and companion. Kindness and clean surroundings soon work a change in the character of the girl and she develops beauty and a charming disposition.

Scene from "The Crooked Path" (Lubin).

Years pass and the young clergyman falls in love with Nell and the blind mother joyfully consents that her son shall marry her faithful companion. The happiness of the family is about to be completed, when Dan Lyons, the crook, breaks jail and is once more at liberty to menace society. One day he catches sight of the Reverend Kimball and Nell riding by. He follows the auto and discovers the home. He demands an interview and endeavors to force Nell back to the old life. The clergyman breaks in on the interview and Nell, terrified, introduces the crook as her brother. Dan, finding his persuasion useless, resolves to rob the house and use Nell as his protector. Securing the help of a pal, he one night breaks into the house. The girl offers him all of her money and jewelry, but it does not satisfy the brute. Kimball is aroused and coming upon the scene covers the burglar with a revolver and accuses Nell with being an accomplice. The police enter with the pal and the two crooks are handcuffed together. Nell then confesses the association of the past and Kimball takes her to his arms.

"PERILS OF THE ATLANTIC" (Gaumont).

Had this offering not been designated by its present title it could have been named the "Perils of Palmistry" with all propriety, inasmuch as it deals with the craft of hand-reading in about the same proportion with which it deals with ocean voyages. The scenario up to a certain point was probably inspired by the sinking of the "Titanic," after which it deals almost entirely with fraudulent palmistry.

According to the story, an American business man is about to sail from Europe, returning home, where his wife is anxiously waiting for him. The business man, James Trevor, has received word from a friend who went before him that ocean travel at this particular time is dangerous on account of icebergs. But, heedless of this information, Trevor engages passage on the "Colossus," the greatest of all steamships, on her maiden voyage.

Meanwhile, in America, Trevor's wife has become restless, and upon the occasion of a social visit she meets a clairvoyant who is operating among the society people. This palmist gives the woman some words of ill-portent. They are to the effect that she is about to lose someone who is near and dear to her. Thereafter the mind of Trevor's wife was greatly disturbed by the clairvoyant's prophecy, and she writes to an uncle of hers to come and spend his time at her residence until her husband's return, as she feels too nervous and anxious to bear up well alone. She does not know whether the palm reader's ominous words applies to her husband or to her beloved son.

Scene from "Perils of the Atlantic" (Gaumont).

Suddenly there comes one day the news of a great ocean disaster. It tells how the mighty "Colossus" has foundered and gone to the bottom with many souls aboard. The grief of the wife at this news is overpowering to the danger point. She insists that the words of the clairvoyant are true, and that her good husband is lost in the deep. Her uncle, having no faith in palmistry, decides to explode the horoscope of the fortune teller by putting the woman to a test. He engages her to come to the house to read the palm of a young lady's hand. When the fortune teller arrives she finds a woman's hand protruding through some portieres, and refuses to read the palm unless she can see what manner of person it belongs to. The uncle offers her considerable money, and the palmist agrees to do the work. The reading she gives of the hand, which is none other than that of Trevor's wife, is entirely at variance with the first reading. In fact, it tells of much happiness and good fortune in store for the person to whom it belongs, and in this way the woman is shown up as a fake. Trevor's wife steps from behind the curtains and confronts the abashed fortune teller. With her mind disabused of its illusions, Mrs. Trevor is much happier, but this happiness is naught to that which follows, for in another moment her husband, who is one of the survivors of the ill-fated ship, has returned alive and well, bringing much joy to the household and banishing thereafter the spell of fake palmistry.

A SUBSTITUTION.

The Gaumont Company will release on December 5th, a comedy split-reel with the subjects "Zigoto Has a Good Heart" and "Zigoto As a Station Master," in place of "A Telephone Entaglement" and "Twixt the Devil and the Deep Sea," which have now been scheduled for release on December 19th.

"The Great Ocean Disaster"

(Great Northern).

When it is considered that its action takes place, for the most part, on board a real ocean steamship, it may readily be imagined that the Great Northern Special Feature Company's latest feature entitled "The Great Ocean Disaster, or Perils of Fire" is a production of unusual proportions and calling for the outlay of a large sum of money. The burning of a vessel in mid-ocean, the panic among the passengers and their final rescue by a steamship that has been summoned by wireless are calculated to prove fully as thrilling as this firm has ever provided. Aside from its unusual and sensational qualities, the story is said to carry a side light of heart interest which makes it all the more appealing to the observer.

Frank Harvey, a young music hall entertainer, is about to take his departure from England and on the evening of his farewell appearance, in the audience is Captain Wilson and his daughter Mary. The latter becomes enamored of the young performer and is in hope that he may be a passenger on the steamship "Sverige," of which her father is the commanding officer. By a kindly turn of fate, Harvey books passage on the "Sverige" and once the vessel puts out to sea the love-making of the couple commences. While the passengers are enjoying dinner in the saloon the crew forward discovers fire in one of the hatches and Captain Wilson is notified. Frantic efforts are made to quench the flames below deck and likewise to keep the passengers unaware of the danger. In order to accomplish this Captain Wilson through the medium of his daughter urges Harvey to give an entertainment in the cabin, while the officers and crew attempt to subdue the flames. Harvey does his utmost to keep the attention of the passengers and finally collapses under the nervous strain to which he has been put. After he has fainted behind a curtain in the steamer's saloon, Mary takes his place and holds the attention of the passengers for the time being. A puff of smoke, followed by a volume of fire, is sufficient to cause a panic among the passengers and a mad scramble is made for the lifeboats. The latter have been lowered by Captain Wilson and in the interim the wireless operator has been exerting every effort to get in communication with a ship within reaching distance. The operator on board the "Adriatic" catches the message and her course is changed toward the ill fated "Sverige."

Captain Wilson is the last to leave his doomed steamship and he does this only with the understanding that the rescue ship shall tow the "Sverige" until such time as it is evident that the vessel must be abandoned to the dual elements of fire and water. In the excitement, Harvey and the captain's daughter have been overlooked and are left on board the burning steamship. The young man carries his sweetheart to the side of the vessel and then sees the hawser connecting the doomed steamship with the "Sverige." He leads the way in an overhand journey toward the rescue ship. Mary follows him and when midway on their perilous journey a life boat is sent from the "Adriatic" to rescue them. On the deck of the rescue ship a happy reunion takes place under the pall of smoke which rises from the ill fated "Sverige."

The picture is said to be replete with thrills and is entirely out of the ordinary run of feature films. The Great Northern Company is sponsor for the statement that this is one of the most sensational films which has been brought to the attention of the public and is as near perfection as has yet been attained in motography.

PANAMA CANAL SHOWN BY KINEMACOLOR.

On the afternoon of Monday, November 25, at the Belasco Theater, Washington, President Taft, with members of his family and official staff, saw the first showing of "Panama, the Earth Divided, the World Divided"—all caught by the Kinemacolor camera. On Friday afternoon the exhibition was repeated at a special meeting of the National Geographic Society at its official home in Washington, over a thousand members comprising the gathering. Rear-Admiral Colby M. Chester spoke while the pictures were on the screen, and explained some of the possibilities of the Isthmian project from a naval viewpoint. "The commercial and economic results of the opening of the canal are like a dynamite mine—almost as uncertain, just as dangerous," he said. "There is no doubt that from the opening, next August, the canal will be well patronized, and a decade will see it on a paying basis."

The series of pictures occupied nearly two hours in showing and covered the entire fifty miles of the canal. The picture showed the sinking of the huge caissons, the blowing up of the dike in the Mindi Cut by exploding twelve tons of dynamite, the working of the huge dredges scooping up tons of rock and soil and carrying them away as easily as a child would lift and carry away an apple. Other scenes showed the conveyance of thousands of tons of material along cables through the air; the towering lockwalls and gates and deep gorges; the removal of cliffs by a terrific stream of water directed against them from a gigantic hose—and a thousand other sights in this tremendous pageant of man's indomitable will.

FILM ANNOUNCEMENT SLIDES.

The American Song Slide and Poster Co., located in the First National Bank Building, Chicago, well and favorably known as dealers and renters of posters, slides and other advertising and publicity matter for the picture theater, have sprung a novel and unique announcement slide.

The handling of song and announcement slides is by no means a new venture to this firm. Mr. Von Ronkel, sponsor for the company, and a man thoroughly familiar with "Advertising for the Exhibitor," has after much consideration applied his thoughts to practical use, and is now ready to supply the Exhibitor with a new announcement slide advertising all film releases.

When projected on the screen, this slide closely resembles a large poster, giving the names of the films to be shown, also portraying the leading characters and scenes taken from same.

Aside from its artistic value, this new slide will do much to eliminate the difficulty often experienced in reading all of a title on account of aged film or poor projection.

"THE RED MAN'S HONOR" IS AN ECLIPSE.

The advertisement of the General Film Company of last week ascribed "The Red Man's Honor" to Cines-Kleine make. It should, of course, have been Cines Eclipse. The same correction will also apply to our Licensed Calendar and Licensed Release Dates.

"THE SHADOW OF THE CROSS" (Essanay).

This production is one of the finest ever produced by the Essanay Company. Leandre and Jacques, two young Italians, are in love with Francesca Tonelli, a beautiful girl. Leandre is favored by Francesca. One night a dance is to be held and Leandre writes Francesca pleading with her to wear a red rose if she returns his love. By chance Jacques secures possession of the letter, and, in a frenzy of jealousy, changes the word "red" to "white." All unknowing of the trickery involved, Francesca innocently wears the white rose and Leandre leaves the town with a broken heart. Taking opportunity of the chance offered, Jacques wins Francesca for his wife. The years pass and Leandre has become a monk. One day a poor girl falls exhausted at the cloister door and Leandre is horrified to discover it is Francesca. He cares for her tenderly, and then learns for the first time of Jacques' perfidy and that he has deserted her. Francesca dies, and Leandre swears to have revenge on his false friend—though bound by his eternal vows. Years pass and one night a stranger falls senseless at the monastery door. Leandre carries him to his room and there, by the flickering light of a candle, recognizes the wasted face as that of Jacques. Whipping a knife from Jacque's belt, Leandre raises it aloft. Suddenly the candle is dashed to the floor and the room left in blackness. Gradually a shaft of light penetrates the gloom and falls upon the crucifix on the table. Then the form of Leandre with repentant face, crawls to the table and bows before the crucifix while his lips move in silent prayer.

Scene from "The Shadow of the Cross" (Essanay).

E. F. Calvert in the rôle of Leandre is exceptionally good. Mr. Calvert's personal magnetism and ability to portray heavy dramatic parts is unquestionably successful. Ruth Stonehouse as Francesca Tonelli is clever. Bryant Washburn as Jacques portrays the part admirably. This production is booked for December 10th.

Will Rising, formerly of the Eclair Company, is now getting sixty cents per dozen for first-run eggs from his chicken farm in Jersey. Released every week.

JOHN B. O'BRIEN, DIRECTOR.

One of the youngest directors in the moving picture field to-day is Mr. John B. O'Brien, at present producing Western photoplays for the Circle Ranch Film Company in California. Though still in his twenties, Mr. O'Brien has been a cameraman and director for several years. He first began with the Essanay Company and worked with Mr. Anderson when the latter first began producing Western plays for Essanay. In this environment he learned the requirements of the Western drama and became familiar with the characteristic life of the cowboy, the Indian and the early settler of early Western days. From the position of cameraman, Mr. O'Brien advanced to that of producer and has since been engaged in that line of work.

JOHN B. O'BRIEN.

His best known production is "The Life of Buffalo Bill," in which Colonel William F. Cody appears. This picture was taken while en route with the Buffalo Bill show, under many difficulties. Each day he found himself in a different city, and the work of arranging locations and taking the scenes had all to be done in the quickest possible time, without sacrificing quality. According to Mr. O'Brien, the work of taking the picture was the simplest part of it all. The difficulty was to direct a polyglot assemblage and get some intelligent action out of them. Many of the Indians, cowboys and Mexicans did their work reluctantly, on the assumption that they were entitled to rest during their off time instead of having to pose for pictures. They were paid for their extra services, but in many cases they valued these services far beyond their actual worth, and it was such problems as these that Mr. O'Brien was continually forced to cope with and adjust. It is well to say that Mr. O'Brien succeeded in making this picture after two other directors had failed, which is all the more to his credit.

A SPLENDID BOOKKEEPING SYSTEM FOR EXHIBITORS.

James V. Bryson, Manager of The Laemmle Film Service, Minneapolis, is offering his newly revised 1913 Theater Record Ledger which is a great improvement over past editions. The Theater Record Ledger is the most popular theater ledger system ever used by motion picture or vaudeville managers. It allows the proprietor a year's complete record of his afternoon and evening receipts besides seperating every possible expense including spaces for feature acts and films, also the weather. $2.50 invested in this years Theater Record Ledger will be a good investment for any proprietor who wants a complete record of his business. Owing to so many inferior ledgers on the market Mr. Bryson has withdrawn the sale of The Theater Record Ledger from all dealers and will sell direct from his office, The Laemmle Film Service, Minneapolis.

BUSHMAN GOES HOME FOR CHRISTMAS.

Francis X. Bushman, leading man for the Essanay Eastern Stock Company, will leave for his home in Norfolk, Virginia, next week to spend Christmas with his mother and father. It has been seven years since Mr. Bushman and all his brothers and sisters have been together, so the reunion at Christmas will undoubtedly to a happy one. Counting up the kind invitations Mr. Bushman has received from admirers and personal friends to dine with them at Christmas, we get a grand total of one hundred and six. How fortunate some people are. If he could eat one hundred and six meals in one day it would be worth taking a three reel picture of him doing it.

"THE RECEIVING TELLER" (Pathe).

An absorbing story with plenty of pathos and good dramatics, played by a star cast, is Pathe's "The Receiving Teller," which will be released December 18th.

Basil Brady, the receiving teller of the First National Bank, is in dire straits because of a mortgage on his home which he is unable to clear. Just after the vaults had been closed one day, one of the bank's big customers offers $10,000 for deposit. Brady hesitates, but on the advice of his fellow clerks, and rather than refuse to accomodate so important a client he accepts the deposit and takes it home with him.

Brady and his wife hide the money However, the needed money so near at hand is preying on his mind, so he leaves the house for his club. A few moments after he has departed a starving unfortunate staggers into the Brady home in search of food. Mrs. Brady gets a revolver. The man convinces her that his hunger is genuine and Mrs. Brady gives him something to eat. Suddenly a noise is heard. Mrs. Brady explains the presence of the money. The stranger takes the revolver while Mrs. Brady lowers the lights. They wait. A masked man, revolver in hand, climbs through the window. The beggar fires, wounding the intruder in the arm. The lights are raised again and Mrs. Brady tears away the mask, revealing—her husband. It is a tense situation. Brady pleads forgiveness and explains why he wanted the money. The beggar promises to keep the occurrence secret. Mrs. Brady forgives.

Miss Octavia Handworth and Crane Wilbur play the leads in this interesting drama and with these two stars appearing in it, it is to the best interests of every exhibitor to book the film. It will be released December 18th.

BRITISH-AMERICAN FILM MFG. CO., LIMITED.

The British-American Film Manufacturing Co. Ltd., of Montreal, Canada, producers of "Briam" films, are just about ready to announce their first release. "The Battle of the Long Sault," is the title of the first photoplay this new company has turned out and they expect to follow this up with two releases weekly. They have inaugurated an exclusive right policy to protect the exhibitors of their films against competition.

During the past summer, the producers of "Briam" films have been encamped at Johnson's Point on the banks of the St. Lawrence River across from Montreal. Work will continue at the camp throughout the winter and the snow and ice of this northern country will give a chance for some great scenes.

In addition a studio has been established in Montreal. A large three-story building provides ample space for perfect arrangements, and no expense has been spared in the fitting up of the studio. The executive offices of the new producers are in the New Birks Building, Phillips Square, Montreal.

ED. HOWE VISITS SELIG PLANT.

"Old Ed" Howe, as he is familiarly known to the newspaper fraternity, the famous editor of Howes Monthly, of Atchison, Kansas, was an interested visitor at the Selig establishment last week. Mr. Howe is preparing to start on a second trip around the world and will include a motion picture outfit in his luggage. As he intends to visit many out-of-the-way places during his jaunt he will undoubtedly bring back many reels of good educational film.

MORRIS FINDS CONDITIONS GOOD.

Mr. Sam Morris, a well-known picture theater manager of Cleveland, Ohio, and president of the Cleveland Exhibitors Local, paid a visit to the office of the Moving Picture World on December 2nd. Mr. Morris reported business excellent in his city and remarked that never before in his experience have conditions been so satisfactory in every respect as now. He attributed his state of affairs to be largely due in his city to the uniform method of transacting business adopted by the General Film Company, and said that the majority of exhibitors in Cleveland were opposed to any plan that would disrupt or in any way interfere with those methods.

Mr. Morris reports the opening of a new exclusive picture house in Cleveland, the Dutchess theater on Euclid Avenue, between 58th and 59th streets. The house was built a short time ago for the Vaughn Glaser Stock Company. It was opened on Monday, December 2nd with an exclusive picture programme with prices ranging from fifteen to fifty cents. Music will be furnished by a five-piece orchestra.

Mr. Morris further reported that the Cleveland local was making arrangements for its annual ball to be held on January 14, at the new Hotel Stadler. Efforts are being made to secure the attendance of a number of the leading photoplayers and every effort will be made to put the event on the list of notable social successes. After visiting a number of friends in New York, Mr. Morris returned to Cleveland later in the week.

THE DEMAND FOR "THE MIRACLE."

Considerable activity is reported from the headquarters of the New York Film Company, which owns the exclusive American rights to "The Miracle," as produced by the Art Film Co., of Berlin. Mr. Henry G. Schultz, one of the officers of the company, has gone to Baltimore to complete the details for a grand performance in Albaughs Opera House in the last week of this month. The magnificent and highly artistic paper, some of it imported from abroad is attracting the attention of exhibitors and state right buyers who visit the offices of the company in the Exchange Building, 145 W. 45th St. Mr. Danziger of the same company has started on a four weeks trip through the West and South to promote the interests of "The Miracle."

ANOTHER NEW THEATER FOR YONKERS, N. Y.

J. H. Hallberg reports that O'Brien & Durkin will soon open their hansome new house devoted to motion pictures exclusively on Elm St., in Yonkers. They have purchased through him a latest model Simplex Projector, Hallberg Economizer, Machine Booth, Exhaust Fans, Flame Arc Lamps, and full line of accessories. Mr. Hallberg also reports that Mr. M. F. Westmoreland, Athens, Ala., will shortly open a new motion picture theater in that town, using a Powers 6A, Hallberg Standard Economizer; the opera chairs, and all accessories having also been furnished by him.

W. WALLACE REID JOINS PRODUCING STAFF OF AMERICAN.

The American Film Mfg. Co., announces the addition of W. Wallace Reid to its force of producers at Santa Barbara. He brings with him a competent company, some of whom have before been associated with him at the Kalem's Western studio which he leaves to engage for the American. Mr. Reid is only 23 years of age and is thus reckoned as one of the youngest producers in the United States, rivaling and exceeding in youth the senior producer, Mr. Allan Dwan. Mr. Reid is the son of Mr. Hal Reid, was born in St. Louis and spent the years 1903 to 5, at the New Jersey Military Academy, Freehold, N. J. In 1909 he graduated from a small Eastern college and spent the remainder of that year in Cody, Wyoming on a ranch where he was engaged in surveying for the Shoshone Dam.

In 1910 Mr. Reid entered the newspaper work, and later in the year joined the Selig Staff at Los Angeles as general utility man. He learned to operate a camera and acquired a working knowledge of the picture business. The winter of 1910, Mr. Reid spent in New York as associate editor of Motor Magazine and in May, 1911, joined the Vitagraph forces as a leading man, playing opposite Misses Turner, Storey and Baird. In the spring of 1912, Mr. Reid joined his father as assistant director and leading man for Reliance, leaving that company to become assistant to Otis Turner, and scenario editor while Mr. Turner was engaged by the Imp. After six weeks at the Imp studio, Mr. Reid was sent with Mr. Turner to make Bison 101 pictures in California.

CORRESPONDENCE

LOUISVILLE.

D. F. MAYER, Louisville representative of the Central Film Exchange, has returned from Indianapolis, where he attended a meeting of a number of exchange men. The Louisville man is now providing service for the Empress theater, which recently was completed in Owensboro, Ky. George A. Bleich, of Paducah, Ky., is the heaviest stockholder of the Empress Company. The theater was erected at a cost of $25,000, and has a seating capacity of 728 people. It is one of the handsomest photoplay houses in Western Kentucky. Mr. Bleich also operates the People's theater in Owensboro.

Louis J. Dittmar, manager of the Majestic theater, had moving pictures made of the annual High School-Manual football game in Louisville. Caufield & Shook, a photographic firm, which recently entered the moving picture field, did the work. The game is one of the society and athletic events of the fall in the Kentucky metropolis, attracting a crowd of 12,000 people. The films will shortly be shown at the Majestic. They will also be presented in Lexington, Ky., and other places where the two teams played during the season which just closed.

The Princess Amusement Company has made a concession to music lovers by adding a singing act to the daily program at the Casino theater.

The Independent Moving Picture Service Company has filed articles of incorporation, with a capitalization of $10,000. The corporation is merely the continuance of the exchange which has been in existence for some time past. The incorporators are, D. B. Baker, John H. Putnam and Bertha Plessinger.

Louisville exhibitors and exchange men co-operated with the members of Operators' Local No. 163 in making the ball given by the latter at Liederkranz Hall on November 25 a huge success. A feature of the dance, to which the public was invited, was a grand march, led by the managers of theaters and the men who provide the service. Harry Hughes and Harry Conlon, two well-known operators, were the men back of the ball, and their efforts to make the affair smooth-running were highly successful. The fund raised by the ball went to swell the resources of the operators' union in Louisville.

Col. Tony Stuyvers, proprietor of Hopkins Theater and Fontaine Ferry Park, Louisville, has as yet made no announcement regarding the date of opening or the class of amusements of Hopkins. Col. Stuyvers, it is understood, is not sure that third or fourth run pictures would prove a drawing card for the theater, and is therefore undecided as to what he will use in the Market-street house. The owner was a recent visitor in Louisville and looked over the ground.

Moving pictures of Mammoth Cave, one of Kentucky's natural wonders, have been completed by the Industrial Moving Picture Company, of Chicago, under the supervision of Alf. V. Oldham, of Louisville, who has exclusive rights on the cave photography. The films were recently shown in Louisville, and were then shipped to Wisconsin. Only one set of pictures was made. Twelve girls are seen making the trip from Louisville to the cave, and going through the "eighth wonder." In conjunction with the cave pictures are shown those of the Four-Mile Endurance race at Churchill Downs, Louisville. A feature of the latter is the presentation of Madame Nazimova, the famous Russian dancer, who was in Louisville at the time, and who allowed the photographers to include her in the pictures, posing especially for them. Gov. McCreary, Kentucky's chief executive, also was on hand for the race, and is seen discussing the long contest.

The first annual meeting of the Louisville Photo-Play Association will be held in December. Officers will be elected, and committees appointed for the ensuing year. The Association has done splendid work during the first year of its career, being able to do much toward the uplift of the profession. Concerted action by exhibitors also has been valuable in other ways, and those who were doubtful as to the worth of such an organization have been converted. The Association now includes practically every exhibitor in the Kentucky metropolis, and is an important adjunct of the State body.

The handsome new theater being constructed at Lexington, Ky., will bear the name of "Ben Ali" in memorial of a deceased son of James B. Haggin, the chief stockholder. The seating capacity of the theater will be about 1,500, divided as follows: first floor, 618; balcony, 384, and gallery, 416. Twelve boxes will hold 72 persons additional. While no official announcement has been forthcoming, it is assumed that the new theater will be devoted to "legitimate" drama.

The Edison kinetoscope, recently purchased by the pupils of the public schools of Paducah, Ky., has been delivered and put into operation. The machine will be used especially in instructing the students in history and geography.

The storerooms in Henderson, Ky., are being remodeled at the instance of Louis Hayes, of Mt. Vernon, Ind., and will be fitted up as a moving picture theater. An admission price of five cents will be charged. The date of opening will be determined by the progress made in the alterations of the building.

The National Film Advertising Company has been formed at Huntington, W. Va., with a capitalization of $10,000. It will conduct an advertising agency with special reference to moving picture theaters. Harry Swan, R. F. Adams and other Huntington men are interested.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

THE Savoy Theater at Olney, Ill., has changed its film supply and is now using the output of the Universal.

The Steel Works Club of the Illinois Steel Company, Joliet, Ill., one of the largest industries of the Middle West, has adopted the use of the moving picture in place of the entertainment course which was for many years a feature of the Institute. On Wednesday night of each week, film is given which is designed to increase the efficiency of the men. The film may be technical and supplemented by a lecture. In addition, travel and other educational pictures, as well as amusing photoplays, are shown.

J. C. Stevens of Crawfordsville, Ind., has purchased the Billikin moving picture theater at Paris, Ill. Licensed film service will be installed and a show consisting of three reels will be given. The house will be overhauled. It is announced that the name of the place will be changed.

J. Earle Cunningham is making a trip across the Continent from New York to San Francisco, in a jinriksha, pulled by a Hawaiian coolie. To pay his expenses he is showing moving pictures and views of the Japanese-Russian war.

The question of Sunday theaters will not be voted upon in Champaign, Ill. The action which was brought against the city in the form of a mandamus suit to compel the city officials to call an election has been dismissed by the petitioners.

The Chicago Hippodrome Company of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $2,500, to do a general amusement business. The incorporators are: Edward J. McArdle, Francis P. Bradchulis and Anthony J. Schmidt.

The American Theater Company of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000, to do a general theatrical and amusement business. The Incorporators are: A. K. Brown, G. B. Brown and P. A. Kilner.

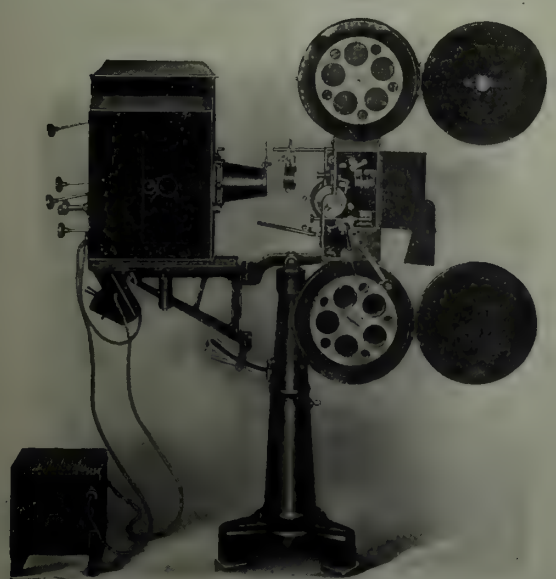
THE QUALITY YOU GET



Gears and pinions of steel and specially tough cast iron with spiral cut teeth so designed that they roll together without friction. Accurate to within one two-thousandth of an inch, they insure you against noise, play in the gears and rapid wear. The high speed gears are hardened.

Spindles of steel, hardened and ground exactly to size. Size is generous, smallest 5/16", largest ½" in diameter. Cannot easily become sprung. Wearing quality recognized as the best.

Bearings of cast iron. The pores retain the oil. This material is acknowledged by experts to be the best for the purpose.

Sprockets cut in our own factory of specially selected steel on machines of our own design and make. The size, shape and accuracy of the teeth, especially of the intermittent sprocket, account largely for the steady picture which the Simplex Projector is noted for.

Intermittent movement. The star or Geneva and its spindle are one piece of metal. The crescent-shaped locking surfaces are cut on a machine which works so close an auxiliary scale had to be designed to set it. The pin wheel or cam is perfectly concentric with its own centre of rotation. The pin which trips the Geneva is hardened, ground and lapped.

Space prevents further mention here of other excellent features.

We invite you to visit our factory and see for yourself the machinery, tools and high-class labor which guarantee you perfection in the Simplex Projector.

The Simplex must be seen and used to be fully appreciated.

Moving pictures on Sunday are not a necessity, decides Judge Albert Busch of Springfield, O., but he suggested that if they were operated in good faith for charity, a doubly commendable service can be rendered. The suggestion was brought about in passing upon the case of Phillip Chevrette, who was tried under the statute prohibiting common labor on Sundays in having one Vassel Settos to sell tickets of admission. The films shown on November 17, the date in question, were "Rock of Ages" and "Prince of Israel," and did not enter into the issues. The moving picture men may adopt the plan.

PHILADELPHIA.

THE Fairmount Film Company has been meeting with unlimited success with its features, and it is keeping the plant busy putting enough plays on the market.

A move to prevent the presentation of films depicting crime in moving pictures was discussed at a recent meeting of the City Councils of Camden. An ordinance is now being drafted to put a ban on pictures of this kind.

The Philadelphia Projecting Company and the Eagle Film Exchange both branches of the Interstate Film Company, have consolidated and moved into their new building at 1304 Vine Street, which was built especially for the exchanges.

Women of Philadelphia have put a ban on the "Sapho" pictures, and have received the hearty support of the clergymen locally. Such pictures as "Sapho" should not be allowed to be shown the women claim, and it is their object to put a ban on every picture with the aid of Municipal support. They claim that this tale of Alphonse Daudet tends to demoralize in whatever form presented.

Marshal Hugh J. Evans and Paul K. Holgate, have purchased the theater of Fred Hummel of Scranton, and will remodle it. It is expected that a large amount of new features will be placed in the house. On the first of January the house will be reopened.

C. H. CONGDON.

GRAND RAPIDS.

A MOST decided tribute to the value of motion pictures has been given here this week. Mrs. Edward Lowe, and one of the wealthiest women of the State, has offered to Charles H. Mills, for use in the municipal social center movement, a motion picture machine. Mr. Mills had advocated the use of a motion picture machine, stating no innovation could do more real good, and Mrs. Lowe very graciously donated the machine. In talking of the gift, Mr. Mills, says, "It is difficult to estimate the good that is certain to come from a feature such as this in the social centers. There is no denying the fact that the motion picture shows have a great appeal to the youngsters today and with a machine in their own home neighborhood, showing films both entertaining and educational, the attraction of the social center is increased wonderfully."

The policy of the newspapers in publishing weekly bulletins of the photoplays is meeting with real approval. One can now refer to the complete list for the week and tell just when and where any film is to be shown. It is a long step in the right direction and reflects great credit on Manager Breen of the United Theaters in seeing it through.

Work on the new Superba is being pushed as rapidly as possible. The marble and steel is all on hand, and much of the interior work has been completed. Manager Nichols has not definitely decided as to the shows, either vaudeville or musical comedy and two or three reels of film will be given.

Selig's "Kings of the Forest," was shown recently at the Idle Hour, to packed houses and was commented on a most compelling production. Mr. Kellar, the house manager, states that on each Sunday one of the big features will be a regular offering hereafter.

The Monroe Vaudette claims the distinction of being the only prominent photoplay house in the United States which gives but one reel at each performance. Good music makes up the balance of the bill, but there is no vaudeville. Mr. Williams is doing as much business as any of them.

Rumors of a new high class theater are flying thick and fast. It is a certainty Harry Sommers, manager of Powers, has the thing up his sleeve, but where he will finally decide on for a location would take a Philadelphia lawyer to figure out at this time.

The Columbia is giving vaudeville of the finest kind. While Gillingham and Smith are primarily motion picture men, having the management of the General Film Exchange in Detroit, they have demonstrated emphatically their ability to handle a regular vaudeville house. Local Manager O'Donnell, with an efficient house staff, is pleasing everyone. The Pathe Weekly is a steady feature of the bill each week.

The Appollo which is one of Nichols Bros., enterprises is naturally doing a strong business while the Superba is closed for rebuilding. Two-reel features from the Independents are a regular thing at the Appollo, and the lobby advertising is always attractive.

It took special action on part of the city fathers to get the big sign passed for the Superba, but it is going to do a whole lot to boost the theater proposition. It is the largest and most attractive sign in the state, with the exception of a sign or two in Detroit.

The Reincarnation of Karma

Vitagraph 2 Reels

During the early Christian era, Karma, a very spiritual and virtuous High Priest of the Temple of India, resists with all his religious fervor, Quinetrea, a beautiful and fascinating enchantress. Quinetrea eventually conquers and Karma falls a victim to her wiles. She triumphantly taunts him, and outraged at her cruel deception, Karma curses her, and Quinetrea is transformed into a huge snake. Fifteen hundred years later, Karma appears, reincarnated in the personality of Leslie Adams and loves the beautiful heiress, Lillian White. Together they visit the ancient Temple of Karma and are shown the reptile, which every hundred years resumes human form. While Leslie gazes fascinated, the snake uncoils and Quinetrea stands before him in all her bewitching charm. She holds him with her hypnotic power and forces him to accept an amulet for his betrothed, upon receiving which Lillian falls dead. Karma beholds a vision of his former self as High Priest, again curses Quinetrea, and drops dead across the prostrate body of his betrothed.

A Genuine Irish Drama Produced Amid Genuine Irish Surroundings

By the death of their father, Robert and Claire Ffolliott are given into the care of Corry Kinchela, an unscrupulous land agent, who schemes with Harvey Duff, a dishonest police officer, to secure possession of the children's lands. Robert is convicted on Duff's testimony and sentenced to the penal settlement in Australia. His sister, Claire, and sweetheart, Arte, are dependent upon Conn, the Shaughraun, who supplies them with food by his poaching.

Several years later Robert returns to Ireland, but is captured as a fugitive and thrown into prison. The crafty Conn assists him to escape and feigns death when fired upon by a sentinel. It is commonly believed that Conn has been killed, and a wake is held, during which the Shaughraun learns of a plan to spirit the girls out of the country. Kinchela and his accomplices are brought to justice and the girls reunited to their sweethearts.

The Last Performance

Pathe 2 Reels

Rose Mailand, the celebrated equestrienne of the famous Barnon Circus, awakens the love of Count Hans von Harten, and they are ideally happy until the Count's father angrily forbids the marriage, which compels the Count to adopt the circus for a livelihood. His spectacular thriller, "The Platform of Death," wins him the title of the "Greatest Horseman in the World," and because of the public admiration his wife becomes jealous and plans revenge.

She drugs his horse, and as he mounts the Platform of Death the horse becomes frightened at the first explosion of fireworks and plunges forward, bringing with him the Count to death in the ring below.

The Red Man's Honor

CINES-ECLIPSE 2 Reels

June Dew, a pretty Indian maiden, is betrothed to Red Hawk, the bravest warrior of the tribe. Seated Bear, another brave, also loves the dark beauty and his savage heart is inflamed with jealousy at the success of his rival. One day he surprises her alone and forcibly carries her off to his canoe. Red Hawk appears just in time to see the act, and springing into the stream soon overtakes his rival. A desperate struggle follows in which Red Hawk's arm, strengthened by the "Great Spirit," mortally wounds his treacherous enemy. Red Hawk and the maiden return to the village and the wounded Indian painfully makes his way to shore, where he tells a greatly distorted story of Red Hawk's crime. The accused warrior is ordered before the great chief "White Eagle," and the death sentence imposed: "He that kills a brother must die. Twelve moons hence his spirit shall join that of the dead warrior." Red Hawk's heart is filled with bitterness and he leaves his tribe to join the army of the pale faces. His bravery in surmounting indescribable difficulties to destroy a mountain bridge, thus checking the advance of the enemy, gains him the high regard of the army, but his happiness is short lived as he remembers the sentence and returns to his tribe to pay the debt of a red man's honor. With his beloved June Dew he is taken to the funeral pyre and their souls go forth to join the Happy Hunting Ground of the "Great Spirit."

"DEATH AND RESURRECTION"

THE DEATH OF POPE LEO XIII.

"From Pope to Pope"

In Two Parts

Under the Direction of the World Famous

J. DE BONNEFON

THE CONCLAVE. BALLOTING FOR A NEW POPE.

A faithful, sincere and reverent production by the Film d'Art of Paris, depicting in fac-simile every event attending the world-saddening demise of Pope Leo XIII., and the succeeding election of "His Holiness, Pope Pius X."

It is the one notable, radically different subject amongst all others ever released. It is an overawing novelty—a magnitude of massive religious magnificence. It is an Historical Verity—yet it unfolds such a story of human heart and touch that its interest is overwhelming. Even were it not from the Days of Reality it would still be the most enthralling story ever enacted—ever presented to humankind.

It is an exact re-creation of the authenticated history of every important event, every eminent character and every background detail which entered into the passing of "Pope to Pope." It is as correct as worldly ability and resource can make it.

It cannot displease one single person—quite the contrary, it must—through its own pre-eminent merit—absolutely please everyone.

It is an ideal winter feature. It can be as successfully exhibited in the churches and halls, as a special, as through the medium of the regular theaters. So it has double booking possibilities—that means a two-fold profit. IT IS COMPLETELY AND BEFITTINGLY SURROUNDED BY THE VERY FINEST OF ADVERTISING MATERIAL, IF PROPERLY HANDLED, IT WILL PROVE THE MOST PROFITABLE FEATURE YOU HAVE EVER POSSESSED.

BAR-"K" FOREMAN (Dec. 16).—Jim Hoover, owner of Bar-"K" ranch, goes to town to obtain money to pay the hands. Harding, the foreman, is left in charge and in an effort to do his duty he admonishes Thompson, a cowboy, for being drunk. Thompson provokes a quarrel with Harding, in which he is subdued. When the dinner bell is rung by Nellie Hoover, Thompson fails to appear, but as he frequently misses his meals, no notice is taken of his absence. Albert, Hoover's little son, is fond of firearms and frequently borrowed one of the cowboy's guns for target practice. Thinking perhaps Harding has left his gun in his room, Albert goes up and steals it out of the holster. He goes to a nearby tree, puts up a target, but fails to hit the mark, Thompson, who was passing, receives the bullet and drops to the ground mortally wounded. Albert sees what he has done and frantic with fear rushes back to the house and replaces the gun in its holster. After dinner Harding attending his duties on the ranch, finds Thompson's body. Several cowboys see him bending over the prostrate form. Believing that Harding was instrumental in causing Thompson's death. They examine his gun and find an empty cartridge. This is sufficient to convict him, they lock him up and telephone for the sheriff.

That night, Nellie, who believes him innocent, decides to liberaee him. After putting Albert to bed, she steals out, gets Hardings horse and pleads with him to escape. He accepts her assistance and gallops off just as the sheriff and deputies appear. They find him gone and give chase. Harding doubles in his track and the posse lose his trail. Riding back to the ranch with the intention of bidding farewell to Nellie, he finds the ranch house in flames and Nellie almost overcome. She tells him that Albert is still in his room and perhaps dead. Rushing into the house, he finds Albert unconscious on the floor. He carries him out, then rushes for assistance. He overtakes the posse as they are debating whether it is best to go on or turn back. He tels them of the fire. When they reach the house it is a mass of flames and burns to the ground. Albert recovers consciousness and when he sheriff is about to make Harding a prisoner, he confesses that he fired the shot and accidentally killed Thompson. Harding is released. He consoles Nellie with the thought, that some time they will have a finer house that will be all their own.

MADELINE'S CHRISTMAS (Dec. 17).—Hermann Von Schultz plays the first violin at the Pikes Opera House, Cincinnati. In the ballet there is a young French girl, Marguerite Ne Moyer. Her father has been dead two years and her mother is employed as a forewoman in a department store. Marguerite has a fair voice, and the violinist takes great pleasure in instructing her when opportunity permits. One night on leaving the store Marguerite's mother is knocked down by a wagon, and receives injuries from which in a few days she dies. At last Herman summons up courage and proposes marriage. Marguerite accepts him.

A year passes and there comes a baby girl. The wife is frequently visited by her female theatrical chums, who continuually remind her that she has tied herself to a man of small quality. They describe pictures of what her life might be if she were free. The poison weeds are sown, and one day, Marguerite leaves her home, husband and child and goes to New York to join a local company at an excellent salary.

Five years pass and Hermann, broken-hearted, has moved to Milwaukee and working, his only comfort is the child, little Madeleine. He goes to the theater every performance to play and locks the child in, placing the key in a flowerpot outside of the window so that she can get it in case of emergency. It is Christmas Eve and a snow blizzard is raging, but Herman must go to work. He puts the child to bed and leaving the house puts the key in the flowerpot. Presently a knock is heard at the door. Madeleine, who is in bed in the next room, thinks that it is Santa Claus and calls out that the key is in the flowerpot. A woman appears at the window; she gets the key and lets herself in. It is the mother, bedraggled and starving. The child cannot resist the temptation to peek in and see Santa Claus. She sees the woman and tells her she has no right to come into the house. The mother pleads for protection as the storm will kill her if she is driven out. Madeleine tells her that her father will not allow any woman in the house, but after much persuasion tells the woman she may go upstairs and sleep in the attic. The mother embraces the child, who again goes to bed. The storm is so bad that the theater cannot open and Hermann returns. Madeleine had again replaced the key in the flowerpot and the violinist comes in and sits down in front of the fire. Madeleine creeps in and again persuades him to play the favorite tune.

The mother upstairs hears the violin and commences to sing the refrain. Hermann hears it and demands of the child who is upstairs. The child replies that it is a woman. Hermann recognizes the voice, he rushes in and brings his long lost wife out. She has returned, as he knew she would. The mother embraces the child frantically, then puts her to bed again. The scene, closes as Hermann tells Marguerite to go and get one of the childs stockings. They nail it on the mantel piece and Hermann goes to a bureau draw and gets a lot of toys that he has laid in. The two fill the stockings, then sit down by the fire as Hermann fills up his pipe and takes his repentant wife to his arms.

HIS WESTERN WAY (Dec. 19).—A western born girl and boy have grown up from childhood as sweethearts. The girl's mother has social ambitions and compels the father and the girl to move to the city. The girl, enraptured over the prospects of seeing things, refuses to marry her sweetheart and goes with her parents to the city and meets with a man-about-town. He proposes and she accepts. The cowboy misses his playmate, and his father finding him in the corral deep in thought tells his son to go get the girl and bring her home. The boy goes to the city, where he finds that the girl has absorbed the artificial stimulus caused by environment. He starts to return to the station to go back home, when he runs across the man-about-town, who is under the influence of liquor and showing his sweetheart's picture to a pal, bragging over his conquest. The cowboy promptly takes the picture from him and knocks him down; returns to the home of the girl and tells her father the conditions. The boy enters the sitting room, finds the mother and daughter drinking tea, and tells the girl he wants her to go back with him, but she refuses. He then, for the first time in his life, clasps her in his arms and by force takes a real lover's kiss. The girl then realizes that she has loved him all the time and against her mother's protests, puts on her things and goes with him. They pick up her father and take him back to the mountains where the friends meet them and they are married the minute the train reaches the mountain station.

HOGAN VS. SCHMIDT (Dec. 20).—Widow Hogan, a very respectable woman with a family of two children, is very much admired by Herman Schmidt, who owns the house she lives in and to whom she owes considerable rent. For his leniency he is permitted to spend many happy hours at the Hogan's home, but there was Tim Timergan, who also admired the widow. A rivalry existed between Schmidt and Timergan, which caused many a fist fight, including a serious duel.

The two Misses Hogan, Fanny and Lucy, also have many admirers. One is a fighter, named Rush Miller and another is Percy Miiville, a little mama's boy, who showed attention to the fighter's sweetheart, On one occasion the fighter became so much annoyed at mama's boy's attention to Fanny, that he challenged him to a fight which they proceed to carry out. The fighter was so exasperated that he allowed Percy to get the best of him, but followed it up by chasing him for life.

The preparation for a reception is in progress at the Hogan home and the guests arrive and are seated at the table. In the meantime Schmidt and Timergan have patched up their differences temporarily and are placed at the head of the table. Everything is going along smoothly for the birthday dinner, when in rushes Percy chased by Miller over table, chairs, etc., finally everybody takes a hand, a general fight takes place and everything winds up in the usual atmosphere of Hogan enjoyment.

NORA THE COOK (Dec. 20).—Nora, a young Irish girl, is a tarter, and puts several households into discord. Every day Nora is looking for a new job. While working in one place she meets Mike McCloskey, the iceman. The courting is short and they are soon married. Nora, who has never been bossed by any one, is soon tamed by love, and we see Mike sitting and smoking at his ease, while Nora who takes in washing to support him, is busy at the wash-tub.

HOME SWEET HOME (Dec. 21).—In their simple little homestead in a Maine fishing village, Richard Morris, a seaman, his wife, Mary, and his two grown sons, Harry and Charles find peace, contentment and happiness. The sons are deeply in love with Marie and Mabel McCullum, respectively, daughters of Parson McCullum.

The day arrives when Morris and the two sons must leave on a long voyage. Sadly the father, bids his wife good-bye, while the sons give a touching farewell to their loved ones. A few days after their departure the terrible news returns that their vessel has been lost, with all on board. The mother and the two sweethearts of the sons are prostrated. Mary gradually declines in health, while the low state of her finances compels her to sell her cherished home to Squire Lang, a neighbor. Feebly she packs up her few belongings and prepares to leave the cottage. Heart-broken, she swoons in front of her home. She is discovered by Marie and Mabel, who take her to their home and tenderly care for her in her illness. Morris and the two sons, Charles and Harry, have saved themselves from the shipwreck on a raft, and have been marooned for six months on a desert island. One day, when they are reduced to a state of starvation, they sight a passing vessel, and they communicate with it by means of a flag made of a shawl Harrys mother had given him as a keepsake. They are rescued, return to the old home in time to prevent its demolition, are reunited with Mary, and returns to the home to live, with Marie and Mabel the brides of Harry and Charles Morris.

CINES.

AS FATE WILLS (Dec. 17).—The beautiful Margaret Wharton is the leader of a fashionable set, whose whole existence has become one round of extravagance and gaiety. She has a host of admirers, the most favored of whom being Frank Deering, who is her devoted attendant.

One day she is pleased to receive a visit from one of her former school friends, Helen Morley. Helen is a timid slip of a girl, with quiet ways, and much abashed at the attention she receives from Margarets guests. Her charming manner at once attracts all of them, especially Frank, who falls madly in love with her.

Much of the time he formerly spent with Margaret he now devotes to her guest. Margaret, at first, wonders at this change in him, and rebukes his seeming absent-mindedness, but after putting him to the test several times, she is ultimately forced to acknowledge the bitter truth.

In a sudden burst of anger, she hastens to Helen's room, and denounces her disloyalty and ingratitude. Tears and explanations follow, and a pathetic scene ends in Margaret's insisting upon sacrificing her own interests, and devoting her entire attention to the happiness of her friend.

ECLIPSE.

THREE ROGUES OUTWITTED (Dec. 18).—Percy is spending a pleasant evening with friends in the neighborhood when suddenly, he remembers that he must "call up" his house. The servant answers, but the conversation is violently cut off with the cry of "thieves" and the sound of a struggle.

Percy, accompanied by two of his friends, hastents homeward and enters the house just as the thieves are leaving. A merry chase then ensues over fences, ditches and buildings. The three rogues are extremely nimble and seem to be gradually distancing their pursuers until Percy has a clever scheme to ensnare them, as the film will best describe.

PICTURESQUE DALMATIA (Dec. 18).—Owing to the hostilities in the Balkan States, Dalmatia has lately been drawn more into the public eye. We are taken upon a trip along the coast visiting the military posts, Grovoss, Pola and Ragusa, which are well equipped with garrisons and harbor defenses.

THE RED MAN'S HONOR (Dec. 18).—A synopsis of this two-reel special subject was given in the General Film Company's advertisement on pages 994 and 995 of the issue dated December 7.

THE VIRTUE OF RAGS (Dec. 17).—A collector calling on a poor family in a tenement dwelling, and, finding them facing starvation, decides that a little money given to them would be better than pressing them for the rent. He returns to his employer, Grouch, a crabbed old gentleman, who discharges him for not getting the rent money. Grouch calls at the tenement and has the widow put out. After doing this "kind" act, Grouch makes a visit to his club, where one of the members, being informed of his selfish and inhuman act, asks him to join the rest of the boys in a drink that has been "fixed" with a sleeping powder. Grouch drinks, and falls into a heavy slumber. The boys now dress him up in old clothes, and, taking him in an automobile to the park, leave him on a bench. A park policeman passing the bench notices the supposed tramp, wakes him up and orders him to "move on." He is later refused admittance to his home and is finally thrown into a station cell, where his friends find him asleep. They redress him and take him back to the club where, on awakening, he believes it to have been a dream. Regenerated through the virtue of rags, he restores the widow to her rooms, installs new furniture and leaves with the satisfaction of knowing he has made reparation for long years of misery.

HIS BIRTHDAY JACKET (Dec. 18).—A charming young daughter decides to make her father a smoking jacket for his birthday. Being in doubt as to the size, she bribes the butler to take his back measurements, the maid to take the chest measurements, the brother the sleeve and cuff measurements. These were to be taken at opportune times when the father would not be suspicious of what they were trying to do; After much trouble to all concerned, the measurements are secured and given to the daughter, who makes the smoking jacket. On her father's birthday morn, he is showered with presents, among them a pretty jacket, He opens up the package and puts on the coat. Lo and behold! the coat is about three sizes too small. Servants laugh, daughter cries, father embraces daughter, and she swears "Never again."

THE SHERIFF'S LUCK (Dec. 19).—A stagecoach is held up and the driver and occupants robbed. Immediately the sheriff is notified and a posse is sent in pursuit. The bandits escape into mexico over the state line and leave behind an angry sheriff and heated mob. Returning to the town, taking the country road, they discover a runaway horse approaching them, with carriage harness dragging on the ground. They immediately speed up and find the Widow Barrett lying in the road, with the overturned carriage beside her. She is taken back to town and a doctor summoned. He tells the sheriff she must remain in his office in absolute quiet. After a few days of rest she recovers and returns to her home, accompanied by the sheriff. He falls in love with her and writes a letter to the county board stating "it would be impossible to be sheriff and run a ranch." This leads us to believe that the Widow Barrett and the sheriff are married. He loses a bandit but wins a wife.

GUISEPPE'S GOOD FORTUNE (Dec. 20).—An Italian street musician sees a barber making love to his sweetheart, and wants to know the reason of it. The girl promptly tells him that she cannot marry him because he is too poor, hasn't any new clothes and that she must have a good home. The Italian immediately takes his savings and going to the nearest clothing store, buys a whole new outfit. Returning to his home, where a number of his friends have gathered, he joins them in a sociable drink. Feeling something queer in the shoulder of the coat, he discovers a roll of bills amounting to $5,000. A newspaper reporter, who happens to be passing, hears the commotion inside, learns the truth and publishes the story. The next day, the proprietor of the clothing store rushes madly to Guiseppes home with the intention of getting the money. He is thrown into the street by Guiseppe and his friends. Returning to the store he finds the place crowded and doing a great business, as the result of the "free publicity." He invites Guiseppe and his friends to a banquet. At the banquet that night, the clothing man is notified that his establishment is on fire. "Bring on more wine! I should worry? It's insured!" says the clothier, and hilarity reigns supreme.

BRONCHO BILLY'S PROMISE (Dec. 21).—A pretty western girl rejected a cowpuncher admirer for Broncho Billy. Snake, the rejected suitor, swears revenge and immediately proceeds to the village bar room to load up with ammunition, both for the gun and the stomach. Broncho strolls into the saloon and, finding Snake in a pleasant humor for "taking lives," decides to leave him alone. A quarrel is prevented by a good samaritan and Broncho returns to his bunk house. On reaching his home he finds a note written to him by his fiancée saying that he must not shoot Snake if he values her love, her father having been shot in just such a manner. He immediately goes to her home and promises her that he will not kill Snake. The following day, Broncho sees Snake force his attentions on his sweetheart by kissing her. He wants to kill him on the spot, but remembering his promise, puts up his gun. That evening, at the town saloon, Snake pulls a gun on Broncho and threatens to shoot him. Broncho, reaching back to steady himself on the bar, pulls his own gun and makes Snake drop his. Broncho then shows Snake that the revolver is unloaded. This completely cows Snake, who leaves the town disgraced. Broncho and his pretty sweetheart are left alone to plan their future happiness.

VITAGRAPH.

A LEAP-YEAR PROPOSAL (Dec. 16).—A "tip" is given to the evening newspaper that Bob, the son of Robert Gray, the proprietor of a large department store is engaged to be married to one of his father's employees. Mr. Gray takes the tip, as a valuable and spicy piece of news, but it must first be verified. To secure some authoritative facts, Diana Morley, a young lady reporter of the paper, is assigned to the case. She applies for a position as model, at the department store. Being very pretty in face and figure, she makes a very favorable impression upon Robert Gray, Jr., and he likewise, upon her. It seems to be a case of mutual admiration. She is recommended by him to his father and is at once employed.

Bob is completely captivated and charmed by her grace and beauty, and does not hesitate to tell her he loves her. She writes a note to the editor of the paper that the "tip" is O.K. and Robert Gray, Jr., is to marry one of his father's employees, whose picture, number 471, is on file at the office. When the editor receives this news, he hurriedly gets the picture and finds that it is a photograph of Diana.

The story is published in the evening's paper. Bob reads it and he immediately writes her a note saying he considers her story a proposal and he accepts it. When Bob tells his father, he makes strenuous objections. Bob shows him the letter he wrote to Diana, agreeing to marry her. Mr. Gray takes the letter and writes across it, "My heartiest congratulations and blessings" and gives it to Diana. She gives it to Bob and Mr. Gray makes a hurried exit, leaving them alone in their happiness.

THE NIGHT BEFORE CHRISTMAS (Dec. 17).—The Christmas season is approaching and Mrs. Corbin, who has been a sufferer from illness for many months, thinks over the past Christmas when John, her husband, played Santa Claus for their little daughter, and wonders what the outcome of the coming Christmas will be if the operation which she is contemplating should be fatal to her. John Corbin is very anxious about his wife's operation and is somewhat surprised to learn that it will cost about $500.00. One day, when a client leaves $500.00 in his charge to be invested in stocks, he is interrupted by the telephone bell and instead of placing the money in the safe, he unconsciously places it in his pocket. Answering the telephone, he receives a message from his little daughter Helen, saying that her mother is very sick. John hurries home and decides that the operation must be performed at once. He is troubled to know where he will get the $500.00 to pay for it, and at that moment thinks of the money in his pocket. He decides to use it and replace it before his employer discovers that he has taken it.

Mrs. Corbin undergoes the operation and dies in its performance. Her husband's theft is discovered and he is sent to jail. His motherless child is left with Mrs. Corbin's sister. Corbin works in the shoeshop in prison, thinks of his little daughter and cuts from the spare pieces of leather, little dolls which he hopes to send her at Christmas time.

The night before Christmas, he manages to escape. He makes haste for his home where he tells his sister-in-law that he has come to play Santa Claus for his little Helen. Hastily taking the Santa Claus suit from the cupboard where it was kept since last Christmas, he dresses himself in the disguise, goes into his child's bedroom and tells her that Santa Claus has come to wish her a Merry Christmas and present her with some leather dolls which he has made for her. The little one is happy to meet old Santa. Leaving the bedroom and entering the living room, he finds the prison guards awaiting him. Removing his costume, he goes with them back to prison. The next day, Christmas, is made brighter for Corbin by the thoughts of having made his child happier.

WHO STOLE BUNNY'S UMBRELLA—(Dec. 18).—It looks like rain. Bunny carries his umbrella. He stops in the bank. Placing his umbrella on the writing-shelf, he draws a goodly amount of cash and walks away, forgetting his rain protector. Outside it is raining and he hastily returns to get it. Not finding it, he comes to the conclusion it has been stolen. He meets several friends, an old gentleman comes along with an umbrella resembling Bunny's, and Bunny and his friends go after him. The old fellow gets on a passing street car. Bunny and his friends call a taxi. When the taxi catches up to the car, an open one. Bunny tries to snatch the umbrella. The car stops. A policeman takes the old gent to court. The judge discovers a small tag attached to the umbrella bearing the name of Smith, which convinces Bunny he has made a mistake. He is fined $10.00 for disturbing the peace. He engages a detective, who happens to be a bogus one, and Bunny is obliged to hand over another bunch of coin. This about cleans him out, and he goes to the bank to draw some more money and finds his umbrella lying on the floor underneath the shelf. He feels rather foolish, but this is nothing to the feeling he has when he gets home and is served with a complaint and summons from the old gentleman for false arrest and claiming $5,000.00 damages.

AT THE DOB SHOW (Dec. 18).—Dogs of all degrees, high, low and pedigrees. Pet dogs, watch dogs, house dogs and every doggone breed in existence. If you are a dog fancier, this will surely strike your fancy, and if you are not especially fond of dogs you will certainly be pleased with this picture. It is the biggest collection and the greatest variety that have ever been brought together. In other words, it is a big show.

THE HAT (Dec. 19).—Self-conscious of her poverty, ashamed of her wretched condition and personal appearance, Marie finds it a very trying matter to sustain her place among the other girls in the factory where she works, she hopes and prays that some day she may be able to avoid their jeers and ridicule, because of her shabbiness. The old hat which she is obliged to wear seems to be the cause of constant embarrassment to her. One day, in passing a millinery store, she sees a very elaborate and attractive hat at the very low price of $5.00. She determines to secure it and from that moment, she figures on how she can secure it by every possible economy. That night, when she goes to her bed, she dreams of the hat and the impression she is making among the girls at the factory. She over-sleeps herself and when she reaches her place of employment, she is discharged by the foreman. She tries to secure a position elsewhere, but is always rejected. She has gone without food to secure the new hat and now begins to feel the pangs of hunger and weakness. She looks distressed and her appearance arouses the sympathy of a good-hearted fellow, who steps to her side and forces a $5.00 bill into her hand. The poor girl is dumbfounded, but when she sees the denomination of the bill, she immediately thinks of the hat and the realization of her dreams.

As fast as her weakened condition will permit, she goes to the millinery shop and buys the hat. Overjoyed, she starts for her home, but drops helpless upon the sidewalk. She is taken to the hospital and despite the efforts of the doctors to save her, she dies; her last moment made happy by the possession of her much-cherished ambition, the new hat, which she fondly holds in her hands as she passes away.

FOLLOWING THE STAR (Dec. 20).—Helen Winthrop has ambition for the stage and when, during his summer sojourn at her home town, she is introduced to De la Marre, a popular star and dramatic favorite, she is elated and asks him to give her a part in one of his plays. He consents and from that moment she becomes restless, and longs to shake the dust of her village home from her feet. Her old sweetheart, John Tobin, is no longer in her class and receives a very cold goodbye- when she leaves to shine in the limelight.

The following season in New York City, she

Benefit OF ALL PROGRESSIVE FILM EXCHANGES and exhibitors. The GENERAL use of the B. & H. Standard Motion Picture Film Reel will result in the UNIVERSAL improvement of Motion Picture Exhibitors and the Film Exchange, the Exhibitor and the Public will share in the MUTUAL Benefit.

The B. & H. Standard Film Reel with a five-inch hub and 1,000 feet capacity, is adaptable to any standard projecting machine having a 12-inch magazine.

This reel merits serious consideration on the basis of economy and efficiency. The saving in damage to film and in annoyance of interrupted exhibitions which its use effects warrants every claim we make for it.

We do not ask you to experiment for us: we have done that. But we do need the interest and co-operation of every film exchange and exhibitor, as only by making the B. & H. Film Reel the standard can its value be fully realized.

The first cost of installation of a B. & H. Standard Film Reel Equipment is very low, and the economy effected by its use makes it an investment of high merit.

All film exchanges will be supplied with advertising matter on request. Exhibitors are requested to order through their film exchange.

makes her first appearance upon the stage. Being a novice, she is struck with stage fright and makes a dismal failure. She takes it to heart and worries over it so much, she is taken seriously ill. Mr. De la Marre hearing of her sickness, takes her from the boarding house at which she is living, to his home where she is cared for and nursed back to health by his mother. Helen is grateful and her admiration for De la Marre is increased, and she has a feeling for him akin to love which she hopes he may reciprocate, and it is not until she learns that he is engaged to another that her foolish hopes are dispelled and she is only too anxious to return to her home and her parents and to acknowledge to them and to John that she is willing and ready to be plain Helen Winthrop or Mrs. Tobin, if John still feels disposed to make her so.

A MARRIAGE OF CONVENIENCE (Dec. 21).—Billy Emerson and Mildred Girard are secretly engaged to be married after Billy graduates from West Point and becomes a lieutenant. A very serious setback to their tentative understanding occurs when Mr. Girard loses heavily in a stock transaction that places himself under obligations to his friend Morley, whose son Paul, is anxious to marry Mildred. He asks Mr. Girard for his daughter's hand and he, in return for his father's favor, consents to, and insists upon the marriage.

Paul Morley is an inveterate "Dope" fiend and secretly and periodically applies the needle to his arm. After his marriage to Mildred, his father discovers that Paul has the morphine habit and disinherits him. Mildred, with her father and mother, go abroad and while away, receive news of the death of Paul Morley. Mildred, now a widow, sends the news to Billy Emerson, and says she longs to see him and has never ceased to love him.

Billy, who is now a lieutenant, stationed at the Philippines, cables back word to Mildred of his constancy and hopes for the fulfillment of their engagement. Billy cannot leave his post so Mildred goes to the Philippines and there they are married with military honors, in the sunshine of the tropics.

MELIES.

JACK'S BURGLAR (Dec. 26).—Colonel Blake and his wife go visiting for the week-end and leave their son Jack in charge of the ranch. Bessie Miller arrives at the ranch with a letter from Jack's aunt in Boston saying that the bearer is a dear friend of her's who is writing a book about the West and would like to stay on the ranch for a few days. Jack knows that Bessie will not stay if she finds his mother gone, so he arranges for Molly, the ranch cook, and Jim Hunt, the foreman, to impersonate his parents.

Things are going nicely and Jack is making fine progress in his courtship, when Pedro, a Mexican cowpuncher, who is angry because he is forced to take Molly's place as cook, tells Bessie of the trick. She accuses Jim and Molly. They confess, and both agree to help her get even with Jack. The next day Jack's course of love runs anything but smooth. Bessie treats him as though he were a little boy, and he is forced to tag along behind her while he and his pseudo father make a tour of inspection of the ranch. Under Bessie's direction Jim exercises his parental authority in a dozen different ways. Jack is paid for some cattle and puts the money in a tin cash box. Bessie seeing a further chance to get even, takes the money and hides it, and after leaving a note alongside of the empty box wherein Jack is thanked for leaving the money so handy, she goes for a long ride.

Jack is heartbroken when he discovers the loss of the money. He determines to get the sheriff, but then, doubting in his heart that she is the thief, wavers, and gets a cowboy friend to impersonate the sheriff. He meets his father and mother on their way back home, and tells them of the stranger who he thinks rewarded his hospitality by stealing the money.

His parents reach home and Bessie gets back from the ride. The joke is explained and they agree to continue it. When Jack returns with the would-be sheriff he walks into the room and finds the foreman holding Bessie roughly by the arm. His father asks him if this is the girl who stole the money, and then love triumphed over duty, and Jack says, "No, I took the money myself." After the whole thing is cleared up, it is found that Bessie played better than she knew when she played burglar, for Mexican Pedro, tired of being a cook, had decamped, with the empty cash box, thinking it contained the money.

OPITSAH (Apache for Sweetheart) Dec. 16.—Opitsah (the sweetheart), a charming Indian maiden, while befriending the only white man, McGuire, who has ever acted decently to her, stops him from killing Jervis, her brutal assailant and eventually saves him from lynching. She loves McGuire, and lives with him, and keeps the secret of his mine, but he forgets all her devotion and leaves her to spend his fortune. He returns with his mother to the place where he struck it rich, and finds the faithful Opitsah and a little stranger. His mother urges an honorable marriage.

BUCK'S ROMANCE (Dec. 17).—Buck Madden, a sportive cowboy, backs his pinto against anything on the reservation for speed. Chief Swiftwind, puts up all his possessions on his own horse. Being shy on cash, he puts up White Fawn. The cowboy wins the bet, but will not accept the girl, as his wife is due at his ranch that very afternoon. White Fawn, however, is obsessed with the idea that she belongs to Buck Madden, and she bobs up serenely wherever he goes much to his embarrassment, until he seeks the protection of his wife who explains the release to the matter of fact maiden.

THE MILLIONAIRE VAGABONDS (Dec. 18).—The prologue of this amusing desertation of measured wealth shows a band of pirates of the old school burying their treasure. Three centuries later a precious pair of tramps discover the treasure chest bared by the drifting sands. They buy an auto, a lot of flashy jewelry, misfit clothes, and finally as a matter of form, visit a Turkish bath (but do not like it). They then invest some loose millions in a palace and give a reception. Count Nowakount engages guests for the function; but they leave in disgust when the hoboes release their table manners and dancing diversions. They quickly decide that high life is too uninteresting, get back into their rags and take to the ties, and again become happy hoboes.

SAMMY ORPHEUS (Dec. 19).—Sammy, a good natured, lazy, whimsical wandering minstrel has only one object in life, and that is to please himself with playing his flute. It gets him into manifold difficulties and it also extricates him from them, so that he is content to drift through life to the easy music of his own making. He becomes a stowaway in a ship, but escapes hard labor through his music. He joins an exploring expedition and captures the fancy of the Queen of the jungle. His escape from her attentions is thrilling and amusing.

THE LAST OF HER TRIBE (Dec. 20).—A striking story and picturesque study of the old mission days when the Indians had the sturdy virtues, engendered by the simple life, under the guidance of the good father Serra and his Padres, before the meaner men came to poison and corrupt. Neepah, an Indian mother and her child are marooned in a lone island where she picks up a meager existence on the seashore and where she was accidentally left by an exploring party who had been drawn off by a storm.

Her child dies, she grows old before her time and lives in a humble and lonely way. Leah, the beauty of the mission, is so harried and affronted by the brutal soldiers that she inspires a revolt, planning to burn the mission and kill the soldiers. This uprising is quelled, but despite all the pleading and upbraiding of Father Serra, Leah hardens her face and defies him, demanding the death of the guilty soldiers. He dooms her to banishment, but when they land her on the island, the tears and entreaties of the wild old recluse, together with a natal of her lonely years, so mars the pity of the stern Serra, that he takes her and Leah back to the mission. Eventually the soldiers are punished and Leah grows to be as faithful for good as she was once antagonistic.

BIOGRAPH.

THE BURGLAR'S DILEMMA (Dec. 18).—Perhaps no two subjects have concerned both judiciary circles and public alike more than the third degree and circumstantial evidence. The justice of their use in convicting a victim has always been an open question. While this subject takes no side in the matter and leaves the question still unsolved, it attempts to present the situation as it is in vivid, logical portrayal, and perchance may cause the more thoughtful to consider whether these principles, as carried out, work for the common good. The youth of the story passes through both ordeals. Truth is brought to light and the strong arm of the law foreseen.

PAPERING THE DEN (Dec. 19).—It is Perkins' birthday and his loving wife effects what she considers a master-stroke in the way of a surprise. Surreptitiously, she engages a man to repaper hubby's den. But Perkins learns of the presence of a strange man in his domicile, and for a time the air is of azure hue—a broken home, divorce proceedings, and what not, are imminent, until the true nature of the situation is explained.

THE DIVORCEE (Dec. 19).—Despite the fact that the humble Mr. Brown is an abject slave to his wife, she is never satisfied. Nothing he does pleases her; she continually orders him about like a dog, and just because he dares to express his feelings mildly with a "But, my dear," she decides to get a divorce—possibly on the ground of his being possessed of a rebellious nature. Off to Reno she goes, and obtains her freedom, only to plunge into the greatest mess of trouble she has ever experienced.

PATHE.

PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 50 (Dec. 9), Grove City, Pa.—The new president of the George Jr. Republic takes his oath of office, after which his cabinet is sworn in, the event taking place during the ceremonies in dedication of the new building—the White Horse Inn.

Wilhelmshaven, Germany.—The Emperor attends the unveiling of the Statue of Gaspar de Coligny.

Charleston, S. C.—The smallest horse in the world, Trinket, is exhibited at the race track here. Trinket is six years old, weighs 90 pounds and stands 25 inches high.

Devonport, England.—The dreadnaught, Marlborough, slips on the ways fifteen minutes before launching time and launches itself successfully.

Tripoli, Tripoli.—Peace being proclaimed to the Arabs, General Ragni, of the Italian army, receives the Caid of the city who comes to greet him and his officers.

State College, Pa.—The students are reviewed in parade by Gov. Tener of this State.

Dresden, Germany.—Fifty thousand enthusiasts join in the great demonstration in favor of European peace.

Constantinople, Turkey.—Reinforcements prepare to leave for the front.

Charleston, S. C.—The portion of the Atlantic fleet which has been spending the week in this city, passes Fort Sumter on its way to sea.

Bittefeld, Germany.—The new army dirigible, Parseval, is tested.

Paris, France.—The new fur styles show enormous pillow muffs, long stoles and draped effects in coats.

THE HAREM CAPTIVES (Dec. 9).—A synopsis of this two-reel special release by the Pathe Company was published in the advertisement of the General Film Company on pages 994 and 995 of the issue dated December 7.

THE RECEIVING TELLER (Dec. 18).—After the First National Bank had officially closed for the day, a tardy depositor leaves $10,000 cash with Basil Brady, the receiving teller. Brady takes the money home where he and his wife hide it.

The lure of the gold is great. To break its spell Brady goes to his club. During his absence a starving man staggers into the house in search of food. Mrs. Brady is about to shoot, believing him a burglar, but he pleads so eloquently for a bite to eat that she feeds him. Suddenly a noise is heard. The stranger takes the revolver; Mrs. Brady lowers the light, and they wait. A masked man enters and the stranger fires, wounding him in the arm. Mrs. Brady tears the mask from his face and discovers—her husband.

GLIMPSES OF MONTANA (Dec. 19).—The vastness of the agricultural industry in the great northwest and the advances made in the mechanical aids to farming are shown in this film. Great tractor engines do the plowing, rolling, planting and harrowing in one operation. Enormous grain elevators are a common sight in the agricultural districts. There are scenes at the famous copper mines, showing the loading of the valuable ore, and interior views of one of the numerous smelters. Nothing seems to stop the onward march of the railroads. After leaving Great Falls, Montana, the ride is one of unusual beauty. Ahead of the train rise the blue, transparent-looking peaks of the Rockies. Passing the magnificent Gate of the Mountains the view turns into an immense amphitheater of rock which nature has painted in a beautiful combination of never-fading tints.

SIDI HADJI MOURSOUCK (Dec. 19).—A vaudeville number of the first class. Unusually interesting and entertaining.

THE LAST PERFORMANCE (Dec. 20).—A synopsis of this special two-reel subject by the Pathé Company is published in the advertisement of the General Film Company given elsewhere in this week's issue.

A SIMPLE MAID (Dec. 21).—When a beautiful woman has a mind for evil there is sure to be trouble. Olga Fulton, a maid in the household of Mrs. Morley, steals some jewels. The butler is in love with Olga. To prove his devotion and to save her he confesses to the crime and is sentenced to a year in prison. The wily maid continues her ambitious career and soon has young Donald Morley infatuated. Mrs. Morley is bitterly opposed to the match, but even she is won over by Olga's charm and a day is set for the wedding. When the day arrives the butler is released and straightway he goes to visit Olga. The maid is anxious to be rid of him and while they embrace she places a necklace in his pocket. She then loudly accuses him of theft. Young Morley enters the room. He silences her accusation with the declaration that he has witnessed the entire performance from behind a curtain, and, happy that he has, in time, discovered the character of his bride-to-be, he orders her from the house.

C. G. P. C.

A RIVAL OF CARUSO (Dec. 17).—Why will people try to be something they are not? Everybody does it. Whiffles does it. He wants to give his sweetheart the impression that he is a fine singer and as he has no voice he employs a capable tenor to supply the music from behind the screen while he makes the necessary facial expressions. In the midst of a song the voice ceases, but Whiffles goes on without it much to everybody's amusement.

METAMORPHOSES (Dec. 17).—The most famous magician is outdone in this film, for, by the simple means of a wand and an empty glass, toys are transformed into animals, animals into flowers and flowers into a bevy of beautiful girls.

A FARM HOUSE ROMANCE (Dec. 20).—Max's uncle, tired of supporting the wild youth, sends him to the home of his wealthy friend, a farmer, who has two daughters—object matrimony. The farmer wishing to marry his eldest daughter, who is quite homely, disguises his young and beautiful daughter as a servant. But Max has an eye for beauty and accordingly wins the girl. There is a lot of fun, however, before he succeeds.

THE DIONNES ON THE HORIZONTAL BAR (Dec. 20).—A team of daring acrobats whose work on the bar is hair-raising to say the least.

EDISON.

THE PUBLIC AND PRIVATE CARE OF INFANTS (Dec. 16).—The hardest of all work for a widowed mother, who has to make her own living, is to care for her children while doing her work. What mistress of a home would want a cook or maid with her young infant around, the mother having to divide her time with her young and her work? Yet when the mother has to work, what is she to do with her young when she is so handicapped? She should board her baby with some mother who is capable of caring for and feeding another child than her own. Individual attention is what the infant needs.

In this picture the mother has twins, one she boards with a foster mother and the other is put into an institution because the foster mother will take only one. The mother of the twins is compelled to do this because she cannot get work so handicapped. The work of the care of infants in an institution is shown and the only fault to be found is that the individual attention that an infant must have is lacking, owing to the fact that a nurse in an asylum often has as many as fifteen babies to care for alone. That is where the infant suffers. It is not, however, due to any fault of the nurses', but to conditions. In this case the fostered child lives while the institution child does not. Seventy per cent. of asylum babies succumb while seventy out of a hundred live where individual care is exercised.

LADY CLARE (Dec. 17).—Lord Ronald comes to Lady Clare bringing her the gift of a doe. They are betrothed and soon to be married. Their meeting is watched by William and old Alice, the nurse, his wife in evident satisfaction and later the nurse comes to Lady Clare to congratulate her "that all comes out so just and fair" as Lord Ronald is really heir to all the great lands and she is not really the Lady Clare. She confesses that the old earl's daughter died in her arms and that she substituted her own child, who grew up as Lady Clare. But Lady Clare will have none of this plan, that she states and decides to go to Lord Ronald and tell him, releasing him from his engagement, even though it breaks her heart. She dons a simple garb of an humble girl and crossing the fields reaches his estate and tells him her story, and then we find that Lord Ronald is worthy of her love for he laughs at the tale and in words of the poem tells her that if she is not the Lady Clare and he is the rightful owner they two will wed tomorrow morn and she shall still retain her place in the world.

AN OLD APPOINTMENT (Dec. 18).—Beginning in New York we see an old millionaire reminded by a torn postal card of an appointment made in his youth to meet a schoolmate on the seventieth birthday of each. The postcard gives no address, that part of the writing being torn off. The old man starts across the ocean to find his boyhood friend. Beginning at the "Old Commissionaries" in London, where he fails to find any trace of his friend, he goes to the "Old Clergy," a beautiful place in Regents Park, only to be again disappointed as the records do not contain the name of the man he seeks. Then he tries the Old Chelsea Hospital for old soldiers, but without success and it is suggested that at "Old St. Cross," a little way out of London, he may get a trace of him, but again he meets with a disappointment. Finally he goes to the Old Charterhouse, the home for retired professional men, makes inquiries and finds his friend.

WHEN JOEY WAS ON TIME (Dec. 18).—Joey is an office boy in a downtown establishment. He is looked upon as a good-natured, half-witted sort of a fellow and is liked more for his quaint ways than for any degrees of intelligence. His mother has considerable difficulty to awaken him in the morning and have him leave in time to be at the office when he should. On this particular morning he is passing along the street where some new buildings are being erected. Just ahead of him is a mother and child. He hears some squabbling on the scaffolding and upon looking up sees two men having an argument as to which shall have the right of way with their burden. Thinking the life of the child is in danger from falling debris he calls to the mother to look out. Seemingly she does not hear. Joey rushes forward, grabs the child and kneels beside some barrels just as a large plank and trash came down. The barrels serve as protection and as Joey covers the child with his body, she is not hurt.

Joey's clothes get a few bad rents, but regardless of this he pushes his way through the crowd and hurries to the office. There he is quickly summoned before his employer and after being severely admonished for being late, it being his second offense, is discharged. The child rescued is the daughter of Joey's employer and as he is about to leave after receiving his pay, the mother and child enter the office to tell the father of the excitement of the morning. The little one recognizes Joey as her rescuer and he is also identified by the mother, the result of which is a complete change in the attitude of his employer. The remarkable suit that Joey wears to the office the next morning causes the rest of the force to open their eyes in admiration.

THE FIRST SETTLER'S STORY (Dec. 20).—This tale is filled with human love and tenderness of the hearty frontier man for his girl wife and shows the tender struggle of the woman to be a helpmate to the man she has followed into the wilderness, where together they build their little home and fight that awful struggle of isolation and loneliness, where it means miles and miles to their nearest neighbors. Together they fell the first log of their little home and so on with patience and love each one carries out his daily work, and at eve by the camp fire with the wife's head resting upon the husband's knee they talk and plan of the future of their little home, which is in the building. At last it is finished and the rough interior is made beautiful in a simple way, by the hands of the woman.

Never a cloud has entered their lives until one day the cows go astray. The husband comes home wearied with his daily toil, harsh words are spoken, supper is eaten in silence; it is their first quarrel. What a tragedy it is to those who love! So through the long night and at the breakfast table the silence between the two continues and when John leaves with never a good-bye kiss the wife's heart is wrung and it is little that John knows that it is the last chance that he will ever get to kiss the woman he loves in life.

That eve when he returns from work he finds a tender little note saying the cows have gone astray again and that she had gone to bring them home. A fire breaks out in the forest and so through smoke and flame and burning brush she searches and finds the stray cattle and brings them home, but when he finds her she cannot answer to his call, nor feel the kiss that she so longed for at the morning hour. The flames had done their work, the cattle were safely home and the dead body of his young wife lay cold and still in his arms and so the picture ends with the First Settler telling his tale of tender human pathos.

A PROPOSAL UNDER DIFFICULTIES (Dec. 21).—Dorothy, a much loved young lady had two suitors, Bob and Dick, both of them lack the courage to propose to her. Bob calls on her fully determined to pop the question and while alone in the drawing room decides to rehearse his proposal. Just as he utters the words "Will you be my wife" the house maid, with matrimonial aspirations, happens to enter the room and accepts him before he has time to explain. Bob's embarrassing position is relieved by the ringing of the front door bell only to be renewed the next moment by coming face to face with Dick, his rival, whom the gushing house maid has just ushered in. Now ensues a battle of wits between the two men, each trying to get rid of the other.

Dorothy finally makes her appearance and the situation can readily be imagined. They smile and glare alternately making their position awkward, but exceedingly laughable. Meanwhile the house maid has descended to the kitchen and informed the chef, her admirer, that all is off between them as she is about to marry a fine gentleman. The chef, an impulsive individual is not so easily jilted and rushes into the drawing room with a carving knife seeking revenge. Dorothy, however, sternly commands him to return to the kitchen. In explanation the house maid claims that Bob's proposal to her aroused the chef's jealousy.

This tangles matters up completely, and when the maid discovers that the proposal was not intended for her ears, she struts from the room to the kitchen below arriving there just in time to prevent the chef, her admirer, from committing suicide.

Dorothy, Bob and Dick are still having a three-cornered struggle in the drawing room. Finally Bob clears the matter up by repeating the words he rehearsed, assuring Dorothy that they were intended for her. Dorothy really in love with Bob, accepts him then and there much to the chagrin of the other suitor who has to be satisfied with being best man.

A. B. C. COMPANY, CLEVELAND, OHIO

who lives with her invalid sister, Adele, finds that she must make an important decision. She finally decides that her duty is with the sister and she therefore writes to Robert as follows: "You know that I love you, but my duty is with Adele. This is your great chance. Go and God bless you." That night Robert comes to the little cottage and meets Kathleen on the porch. He draws forth the note and asks if her decision is final. When he finds that she cannot be moved he exclaims, "Only your sister stands between us!"

In the little sitting room Adele hears the exclamation of her sister's sweetheart and is heartbroken. Robert, informing Kathleen that he will leave at once, enters the sitting room to say goodby to Adele. The housekeeper, passing through the room, sees the young attorney leaning over the invalid's chair and nervously fingering a glass on the table.

When Robert leaves, Adele is found dead. The housekeeper calls attention to what she has seen, and, despite the protests of Kathleen, a police officer is summoned, with the coroner. Robert is arrested.

At the trial it is found that the circumstantial evidence is not strong enough to convict Robert. He writes a note to Kathleen saying that although he has been acquitted many think him guilty and he is leaving for the west on the afternoon train.

In her sorrow, Kathleen takes from the bookcase a book of poems which she has been in the habit of reading to her sick sister. In the book she finds a note, reading, "You have faithfully fulfilled the promise you gave our mother and I am going to set you free. The little powder I have kept for months gently shows the way. Adele." Kathleen hastens to the station and overtakes Robert, who now finds that his name has been cleared forever.

THE MAYOR'S CRUSADE (Dec. 18).—Abraham Fendrick is elected mayor of a western town by the reform party. When he is inducted to office the opposition newspapers continue to discredit his ability to institute reform measures and ask why he does not begin an investigation of Dale's sweatshop. The mayor, being an honest man, is ready and willing to receive information from any legitimate source. Having had no previous knowledge of Dale's sweatshop, he decides to personally investigate. Disguising himself as a laborer he makes application of Dale and is set to work.

Mary Matthews, a young girl employed in Dale's sweatshop, becomes ill from long hours and overwork and swoons at her sewing machine. She is revived and one of the girls is instructed to take her home. Just as they leave the factory an automobile, driven by the mayors son, Royal, passes. Noticing the helpless condition of Mary, Royal stops the machine and insists upon driving her home.

Several days later Mary returns to work. Dale shows his true character and is brought roundly to book by the supposed workman, who is promptly discharged. Mayor Fendrick, returning to his office, has a warrant issued and sends out officers to arrest Dale. Brought to the mayor's office, the sweatshop proprietor is confronted by the supposed workman, who removes his disguise. The following document is presented to Dale to sign: "I, Ralph Dale, hereby promise to remove my establishment to comfortable, light and well ventilated quarters and to regulate the working hours and the wages paid to my employees so as to establish a fair compensation for the work received. These changes to take place within two weeks from date." Dale at first demurs, but is advised he must either sign or go to jail. It is needless to say the sweatshop proprietor complies.

Royal is captivated by Mary's pleasing personality and with his father's consent becomes her favored suitor. With the signing of the agreement by Dale better conditions prevail at the sweatshop and the reform mayor fulfills his mission.

PULQUE PETE AND THE OPERA TROUPE (Dec. 20).—When a musical comedy company visits the little western town, Pulque Pete, a cowboy, is captivated by one of the chorus girls, whom he follows to the station. He endeavors to make her acquaintance and she asks if he has any money. When Pete produces a huge roll it meets the sight of the manager, who encourages Pete to join the company, seeing in him a possible "angel." Pete becomes high-handed and insists that his girl play the star part. The manager sees that he must dispense with the "angel" and awaits his opportunity.

The company plays a return date in Pete's home town and the manager has an inspiration. He informs all of Pete's friends that the cowboy will appear in the role of "The King" that night. The rough westerners visit the opera house in a body and when Pete appears in his kingly attire he is made a target for the distribution of ancient eggs and vegetables. Pete beats a hasty retreat and finally escapes from his pursuers, only to find that he is in the midst of a band of Indians on the warpath. When the savages see this strange creature with his crown and ermine (?) robes, they regard him as one of the Gods, and Pete is obliged to resort to strategy in order to return to civilization.

RUSH HOURS IN NEW YORK (Dec. 20).—New Yorkers will find many familiar scenes in this novel production and non-residents will be able to gain an idea of what the rush hour means in the metropolis. We see the arrival of an early morning ferry-boat at the slip; a glimpse of the City Hall at eight a. m.; the Brooklyn Bridge at sunrise; the boot blacks at City Hall Park; noon in Herald Square, with the many shoppers thronged about the department stores; the matinee-goers in the theatre district; the exit from the subway at 42nd Street and Broadway; the curb market in Wall Street.

THE INDIAN UPRISING AT SANTA FE (Dec. 21).—In 1680, owing to the tyrannical rule of the Spaniards, the Pueblo Indians, under the leadership of Pope, chief of the San Juan tribe, resolved to rebel and drive their oppressors out of New Spain (New Mexico). Jaca, one of the chiefs consorting with Pope, secretly sympathized with the Spaniards and sent his daughter, Maria, a converted squaw, to warn the governor, Otermin, at Santa Fe, of the proposed revolt. Captain Gomez was sent by Governor Otermin on a reconnoisance with a small troop of soldiers, and was driven back by the hostile Indians.

Chief Pope offered Governor Otermin his choice of peace or war by sending him two crosses—one black and one white: the choice of the white cross to mean that the Spaniards would be allowed to march out of the country without being molested; the choice of the black cross to indicate war. Governor Otermin returned both crosses and the Indians promptly attacked the Spaniards. After withstanding a short siege, the Spaniards succeeded in driving off the Indians, but Governor Otermin was compelled to evacuate Santa Fe and retire to El Paso. In 1692, the Indians again became restless and decided to go on the warpath a second time. Maria journeyed to El Paso to acquaint Governor De Vargas of the determination of the Indians and De Vargas at once organized an expedition to re-conquer Santa Fe. He despatched Maria ahead to prepare the way for a peaceful conquest and followed with his troops. The Indians, still in warlike mood, at first refused to accede peacefully and sent a spy to detect the movements and number of the Spanish forces. The Indian spy was captured but treated kindly by De Vargas, who sent him back to entreat the Indians to surrender. While the Spanish forces drew up in battle array before Santa Fe, with cannon in position, the Indians began to weaken. A few of them dropped over the walls and begged mercy of Governor De Vargas. He received them kindly and the rest of the Indians, observing this, abandoned their hostilities. The Spaniards marched into Santa Fe in triumph and Governor De Vargas wrote a proclamation forgiving the rebels.

MAJESTIC.

HIS DAY (Dec. 10).—On a beautiful autumn day, Frank Dane leaves his hotel to go into the woods in search of game. He finds a woodsman caught by the foot in a tree and learns that he fell down the cliff. Frank assists this man and later accompanies him home to his rude hut.

The woodsman has a pretty young wife whom he treats with brutality. When she questions him about the stranger he flings her aside and later Frank sees him beating her. The city fellow is horrified and follows the girl to the woods and insists upon carrying home the wood she has collected. Her husband sees the stranger and his wife together and immediately suspects her of flirting. When he attempts to ill treat her, Frank jumps to her defence. The woodsman grabs his gun and wants to kill Frank, but the stranger bids him put his weapon aside—they will fight it out with their fists. The girl stands aside and the two men pummel each other. The trained athlete from the city soon gets the better of the awkward woodsman and knocks him out. Then helping him to his feet he sends him back to his wife, who waits with fear in her heart, but the big fellow having felt the force of someone else's blows, treats her kindly for the first time in many days. Frank from his perch high on a great rock watches them walk off together, arm in arm.

THE MIND CURE (Dec. 15).—Professor Conner, who is a hypnotist, has a daughter, Pearl. Pearl flirts with several young men and is each time seen by the professor. Some of her young men come to the house and annoy the professor by whistling in the garden. He runs out on one occasion and beats one of them with a club. This, however, does not stop the nuisance, so he determines to try hypnotism as a cure. He writes a letter to his friend, Mr. Cusick, that he will give his daughter treatment, and she discovers the letter. When he gives her this treatment she pretends to be affected by it, and says that she hates all men. Mr. Cusick calls, and on speaking to Pearl has his hair pulled as part of her hatred to the opposite sex. Meanwhile, Chester, the beau she likes best, calls on the professor to be treated for bashfulness, and the professor, after giving him treatment, tells him he will be bold. Just then Pearl enters the room, and Chester, proving the professor's contention, runs off with Pearl and returns showing the professor their marriage certificate. They tell him hypnotism did it, and he has no other course than to give the usual parental blessing.

OH! THAT LEMONADE (Dec. 15).—The widow is not popular with the men. Claude, the village joker, is the only one that likes her. The widow inherits $5,000 and immediately her admirers are legion, the old maid of the town having spread the news. All the men call on her and proceed to make love to her. Meanwhile, Claude, the joker, having had several drinks, determines to call on the widow, also carrying with him his jug of whiskey. The widow is entertaining her crowd and is about to serve lemonade, when Claude steals into the house and empties the jug of whiskey into the lemonade. The lemonade is served and everyone becomes intoxicated. The men fall over themselves in their anxiety to make love to the widow and her $5,000. Claude enters and ejects them all from the room. Posing as a hero before the widow he gets into her good graces, and the prize is his.

THE BLACK SHEEP (Dec. 10).—Jim Brock, a reckless, self-indulgent, but kind-hearted youth, through the jealous machinations of his younger brother, is driven from home by his father. The seriousness of the breach with his parents—to whom he is really devoted—brings the young prodigal to his senses. His years of exile turn out to be his making.

In the meantime, the younger brother, now absolute master of the situation at home, has thrown off all disguises and appears in his true character of the successful and undutiful son who is ashamed of his aged parents. At his hands, and at those of his equally domineering wife, the old folks learn how sharper than a serpent's tooth is the ingratitude of a thankless child. Matters have approached their crisis when the Black Sheep returns unexpectedly. He has amassed immense wealth and with this potent weapon, he resolves to fight his upstart brother and strike him where the blow may prove most effective. The two brothers meet on the floor of the Stock Exchange. It is a death grapple. The ingrate, Henry, emerges from it crushed and ruined. The very home where he has lorded it so insolently passes into the hands of the avenger. Jim loses no time in putting the house in order.

THE POISONED POOL (Dec. 12).—Two young prospectors, finding that the old mine in which they had sunk their entire capital has long since yielded up its last handful of pay-rock, set out together across the hills in search of new fields. One night in the flickering light of their camp fire Rice discovers evidence in the pocket of his sleeping partner, which convinces him that the latter has been successful in winning the love of a girl to whose hand he also had aspired. He masters his first passionate impulse to kill the man. By morning his jealousy has subsided into a dangerously smouldering hatred which is silent and bides its time.

All unconscious of the events of the night and of the peril which now walks with him, Starret continues his quest for gold with the other. One day their supply of water fails them. In their search for a spring they wander far from their camp and are lost. When they finally come upon a sinister looking pool, in the wilderness, young Starret is on the point of collapse. From the incrustations about its rim, Rice sees that the hole is reeking with arsenic. At first he struggles to keep the half crazed Starret away from it. The scene of that night beside the camp fire comes back to him. The man in him gives place to the demon—he flings his partner upon his face to drink of the noxious liquor.

Providence, in the guise of a heavy downpour of rain, visits Starrett. He had fortunately fainted before his lips could touch the poison. Reviving, he wanders back to the camp, and seeing that abandoned he finds his way to Bess Austin's cabin. There an encounter takes place as a result of which Rice returns to the poisoned pool alone—to drink!

THE BUSY BEE (Dec. 15).—A synopsis of this educational and scientific subject by the Eclair Company was published on page 592 of the issue dated November 9th.

FUNNICUS' HUNTING EXPLOITS (Dec. 15).—On the same reel with "The Busy Bee" was originally to be released on November 8, but has been postponed until December 15. A synopsis of this comedy will also be found on page 592 of the November 9th issue.

NESTOR

BEAUTY TAKES A TRAMP (Dec. 9).—Roy Berrick receives an invitation to attend a fancy dress ball. He looks around for a good costume and meeting Dusty Rhodes, a tramp, he copies his dress and makes up as near like Rhodes as possible. His best girl, Louise Camoron, scarcely knows him when he calls for her.

Dusty Rhodes adds to the day's taking at a nearby saloon, burning up the money he received from Roy. He endeavors to get away with a large portion of the free lunch counter, and after rudely jabbing the gentleman, who dispenses beverages to thirty customers, in the eye, he is chased down the street by an energetic copper, assisted by others in search of excitement. Dusty conceals himself in an old ash barrel until his anxious friends have overlooked his close vicinity, when he emerges and saunters off.

Roy leaves Louise at the entrance of the club house, where the ball is being given, in order to fix his beard, which has become loose. Dusty strolls up and Louise pounces upon him (believing him to be Roy), and takes Dusty in. Dusty is delighted.

Dusty and one of the dancers soon seek the refreshment bar and proceed to load up. Roy comes in and is sent by Louise to find her fan in the waiting auto. As he is looking for it, the hot and indignant copper appears and despite Roy's frantic remonstrance drags him off to durance vile.

In the meantime, Dusty has a royal time and Louise thinks he is playing his part far too naturally and is disgusted with him. Dusty gets busy with the glasses and the crockery, and is arrested and run in. Louise follows to the station where the tangle is unravelled.

HOME AND MOTHER (Dec. 11).—Two brothers, Jack and George, both propose to Nance. She accepts Jack; and George, in anger, prejudices his father against her, so that when the young man brings Nance to his home, the father forbids her the house. The young couple go West. They prosper. At home a mortgage falls due, but as they are unable to meet it, George writes Jack, asking for the money. Jack send it; but George, instead of paying off the mortgage, squanders it in gambling. At the gambling house he gets into a quarrel and strikes a man down. Fearing that he may have killed the man, he jumps into the door of a moving freight and is soon on his way West. Arriving at the town where Jack lives he inquires his way to the house. He is joyfully received by Jack, until he finds the letter he has written to his mother in George's pocket. However, on the way out George has had time for thought and is now truly sorry for the part he has played, so upon his confession, he receives his brother's forgiveness. Then Jack hastens back to his old father and mother just in time to keep them from being turned out on the street.

THE MOUNTAIN GIRL'S SELF-SACRIFICE (Dec 13).—The capitalist, Arthur Wilbur, accompanied by his daughter Mary, is spending his vacation in a mining district. They are joined by Kenneth Miller, a mining engineer, who is engaged to Mary. Wilbur is attracted by a mining proposition and promises the promoter, Hill, and the two prospectors, Keller and his son, to look over the property. Kenneth hears of it and persuades Wilbur to let him go in his stead. Hill and the Kellers salt the prospect freely and carefully and are chagrined when Kenneth appears with a letter from Wilbur stating that he will abide by Kenneth's decision.

It does not take the engineer long to decide that the mine has been "arranged," and in his anger Kenneth tells the men they are a gang of swindlers. They attack him, bind and blindfold him, and Old Keller and his son take him to their forest cabin. Here Kenneth meets the pretty and unsophisticated daughter of Old Keller, who pities this good looking, wounded man and tends to his wounds and ministers to his comfort. She falls in love with him and although she learns that he loves another girl, she conquers her sorrow and longing and eventually assists him to escape.

Hill sends a bogus telegram to Wilbus stating that the mine is all that was claimed for it and saying that he (Kenneth) would not be back for some days. Wilbur is satisfied, but Mary, with a woman's intuition, scents trouble, wires the sheriff and worries her father into making a personal investigation. They meet Hill and proceed to the mine where Hill is arrested. They hear a woman's shout and following the urgent call arrive in time to prevent Kenneth's being killed by the Kellers, who have followed the fugitives.

THE AWAKENING OF JOHN BRIDD (Dec. 10).—John Bridd is a hard-hearted, close-fisted man who lives alone and whose pet aversion is a woman. His home shows the severity and carelessness of the grouchy bachelor, until a distant relative leaves a girl of tender years to him for protection. John hates the girl because she is a girl and does all in his power to inspire dislike on her part, but she falls in love with her guardian and in every way tries to awaken in him that love she herself feels for him, but without avail. She gradually changes his home from barrenness to cosiness and comfort and he gradually accedes to her wishes against himself. The women of the little town in which John lives have set their cap for him for years because of his reputed wealth, but he has always stood them off, and now when this girl comes to live with him and continues to live there they are jealous and make life miserable for the girl. They tell her she is the talk of the village because she is living with this bachelor without a chaperon and this drives to girl to desperation. She leaves a note stating her intentions and goes away alone. John returns and finds her gone and then in a moment, his loneliness seizes him and he learns what she means to him. He goes in search of her and finds her worn and tired and lost in the great woods and there wins her back to him and shows her that she has been the one responsible for his great awakening.

POWERS.

A PETTICOAT DETECTIVE (Dec. 11).—Harold reads in a newspaper that his fiance Dolly, has been attacked by a bad man who is holding up women in the isolated parts of the city. He calls on her and announces that he will investigate the matter. He leaves in a pompous manner, and the Rev. Hollister Crimshaw meets Dolly and the attraction is mutual. The minister decides to masquerade in the role of an amateur detective and distinguishes himself as the capturer of the bad man. Harold disguises in feminine garments and sallies forth to effect the capture of the man feared by the women.

Dolly being a strong-minded young woman, arms herself with a formidable hatpin and goes out to wreak vengeance on the purse snatcher. Dolly meets up with Spike and he attacks her only to get worsted in the encounter with his hide punctured by the hatpin. In the meantime Harold has trailed the minister, whom he suspects of being the man sought. The minister penetrates his disguise sufficiently to see that Harold is a man masquerading in feminine apparel and he suddenly attacks Harold and they go to the pavement in their struggles. In the meantime Dolly has Spike down, sitting on him, yelling for help. Harold and the minister struggle towards her and Dolly and the minister recognize each other. The minister announces he has caught the bad man while Dolly contends the honors of the capture belong to her. Harold tries to explain, but the minister will not listen. In the mix-up Spike make good his escape and Harold is escorted to the police station by Dolly and the minister. Once there, Harold is shown up in a sorry plight and the Rev. Hollister Grimshaw walks away with Dolly in triumph while Harold is kicked out of the police station.

THE NATURAL SON (Dec. 13).—The Hamilton family is an old and proud one. John is betrothed to Lucy. Cyrus, the half-wit, meets Lucy and asks her to read for him. She is kind and complies. The poor fellow loves her with a blind and idolizing passion and throws his arms around her, much to her surprise and indignation. John is attracted by her cries for help and rushes on and administers a thrashing to the half-wit. He goes home sore and furious and tells his mother.

Years before she had been a witness to the illicit love between Mrs. Hamilton and Alfred and it is recalled to her by a dissolving scene of a compromising nature. She resolves to avenge the injury to her boy, whom she loves for his infirmity. She writes an anonymous note to Will telling him that John is an illegitimate child. Will also receives a note calling attention to the fact that John is a love child. George and Will both propose to Lucy, but she declines their suits. They notice that John is the favored brother and that he is much beloved by Alfred and their suspicions are aroused, and each has a secret. Finally they show the notes to each other in the office of the brothers. They go to the hag, Mag, and she tells them her story. They purchase her silence with money and resolve to keep the secret, but when they again see John happy with Lucy and the pair receiving the blessings of their mother, they decide to investigate. They approach their mother and ask her if John is the son of their father. She is weak and collapses in their arms. They carry her to her room, summon a physician and when she recovers she motions them to leave her and sends for John. John comes and she tells him that he is a child of love and he is appalled. She falls back on the pillows exhausted and dies before John and George reach her bedside. John tells them he knows all and they repudiate him, as a blot on the escutcheon of the family. He goes to Lucy and tries to release her from her engagement, but she avows she will always remain true to him.

He leaves, goes West, where he prospers in business. He sees in a newspaper that the old homestead is to be sold to satisfy a mortgage and that his brothers have failed in business. He returns to the old town, pays the mortgage, places his unnatural brothers on their feet, and then goes to the cemetery to pay a last visit to the grave of his mother. He meets Lucy there and she clings to him and will not let him leave her. The concluding scene shows them married and living happily in the distant town where he had cast his lot, with Will and his family and George, who has remained unmarried, happy in the old home.

THE WORLD WEARY MAN (Dec. 9).—He is a millionaire, young and a bachelor, with all the treasures of the earth, but is unhappy. One cold night after a brilliant reception at his home, he decides to walk about the city. After a long stroll he found himself near the water front and a child crying. He questioned her and found she had been sent out to sell papers and as the rough street boys had driven her away her day had been a failure and no papers had been sold. He brought her to her wretched room and left her.

The next day he told his servants he was going away to another country and speedily made his way to the little waif's house, where he engaged a room and made friends with her father, a wretched derelict, broken in health and ambition. The world-weary man has found the world still attractive, for with the child as his companion he becomes interested in the amusements of the poor. One day the wretched father suddenly died. This was the turning point in the lives of the waif and the millionaire. He sent for his automobile, and going to her wretched room, where he found her asleep, he put her rag doll in her arms and brought her to his mansion and ever after was a father to her.

AUNT DINAH'S PLOT (Dec. 14).—Dinah Johnson, the Paterson's cook, imbibes too much of the brandy she is using making mince pies, and is discharged by Mrs. Paterson, wife of her employer. Mrs. Paterson, who is very extravagant flowers and personal adornment, owes Dinah $50, which she cannot pay when she discharges her cook. However, she gives Dinah an I. O. U. for the amount.

Dinah calls several times to collect her $50, but is always turned away empty handed. Dinah has trouble getting another position and finally has to take in washing. Dinah gets behind in her rent and the landlord is summarily ejected. In his wild flight through the door he drops a paper, which Dinah picks up and is astounded when reading an article that says: "Black Hand Letter Frightens a Man Out of $5,000." This gives Dinah an idea. She laboriously scribbles a letter, addresses it to Mr. Paterson, mails it and then hies herself to the rendezvous (which is simply a hole in a back yard fence), to await results.

Paterson receives the letter, is almost insane with fear, gets the police. They all go to the appointed place in fear and trembling, and on reaching there simply find Dinah and her I. O. U., which is promptly paid by Mr. Paterson. The police, disgusted with the turn of events, take themselves stationward.

REX.

TO THE CITY (Dec. 12).—Nancy and Bess are living at the farm with their mother. Nancy makes up her mind to go to the city in search of employment and does so. On her arrival there she goes to an employment office, the proprietor of which sends her to a large contractor. Nancy gets a position as stenographer and starts to work. A friend of the contractor's, a man-about-town, Robert Hanson, attempts to make love to Nancy and is repulsed. The contractor, entering the office suddenly, finds Nancy in the arms of Hanson and summarily dismisses her.

At Nancy's arrival at her lodging she finds, to her astonishment, that Bess, her younger sister, has also come to the city. Bess has been discontented on the farm and has followed her sister. Bess applies for work at a studio and is engaged as a model. Hanson, who is a frequenter of the studio, comes across the younger sister, and in turn makes love to her. Hanson buys her a handsome gown and takes her to a Bohemian supper. Her sister Nancy is worried at Bess' absence, and at last makes up her mind to go to the studio in search of her. It is now midnight. Nancy discovers, to her horror, that the studio is closed, but that her sister has gone to this Bohemian supper at Hanson's. Nancy goes to Hanson's and asks for her sister. Bess is surprised to see Nancy, and at last, in response to her sister's entreaties, she consents to leave the house. Hanson tries to detain her, but is unsuccessful. The two sisters make up their minds to leave the dangers and pitfalls of the big city and they return to the country and the farm.

INTO THE DARKNESS (Dec. 15).—Ralph Delano has been blind since infancy. He seeks solace in music. His little friend Betty, calls on him as is her habit, and while his attitude towards her is one of friendship, she loves him devotedly.

One day a rich stranger and his daughter pass the house. They are attracted by the wonderful music of Ralph's violin and enter. They are shocked to learn that he is blind, and the rich stranger offers to send a noted surgeon to operate on Ralph. Ralph is overjoyed and when his little friend comes to visit him again, he tells her the good news.

Two weeks pass. The surgeon removes the bandage from Ralph's eyes, and he sees. He joyfully embraces his mother and for the first time sees Betty. He involuntarily draws back and, while his greeting is friendly, he shows that he is disappointed. He then turns to Helen, the rich man's daughter. Helen and her father leave. Ralph rushes to the window and looks after them. Betty, ignored, leaves the house sadly.

Shortly after this, Ralph receives an invitation to play at the rich man's home. He does so and scores a great musical triumph. Ralph again shows that Helen has made a strong impression on him. Several days pass, and the friendship between Helen and Ralph ripens into love. They become engaged, but one day while Ralph is working at his music, he is stricken blind again. Overwhelmed with grief he writes Helen, releases her from her promise to marry him, and again tries to find solace in the soul of his violin.

A FOUR-FOOTED HERO (Dec. 10).—Jack, Alice and Dandy are a well assorted trio. Jack is handsome, Alice sweet and Dandy is the best horse and friend a man ever had. Dandy takes the honors and a blue ribbon at the Rodeo. Old Bill, the foreman, retires and Jack is given his position. Everyone is satisfied but Pedro, who treasures a grudge against the handsome Jack. His dislike turns into hate when Jack chastises the Mexican for ill treating a horse. He seeks out the Indians and incites them to help him steal some of the Bar "B" horses.

Jack is on guard that night. He is overpowered, knocked senseless and the horses are stampeded and are branded and bobbled. Pedro secrets the branding iron under Jack's bunk. Jack comes to and staggers to the boss and tells the news. Dandy, the horse, unties the hobbles with his teeth and arrives as the cowboys are about to start in pursuit of the horse thieves. Jack talks to him and makes him understand what is required of him, and Dandy leads them to where the Indians and horses are. The renegade camp is attacked, the Indians driven off and the horses are re-taken. Pedro escapes detection, and as they turn in he points to the branding iron under Jack's bunk. He is accused and fortified by Alice's belief in his innocence, Jack rides away full of anger and grief.

Later Jack makes up his mind to unearth the real rustler and returns to the town near the ranch. The boss comes to town to get money for his pay roll and is seen by Pedro. That night Jack sleeps in the open, the faithful Dandy near by. He wakes and overhears Pedro and two ruffians plotting to steal the pay roll. He covers them, but is shot by one of the men from his coat. They take Dandy and leave Jack for dead. Dandy is placed in the corral. He pushes down the corral bars and returns to his master, takes a canteen, which is out of Jack's reach, in his teeth and gives it to Jack. Jack writes a message on his hat and gives it to Dandy, who races off to Alice.

Alice calls the boys. They all ride off following Dandy, who leads them to his master. Jack is taken back to the ranch and unfolds the plot to the boss, who conceals some cowboys in the room where the safe is and some in the bushes outside the house. At night Pedro and his thugs ride up and Pedro enters the room by the window. He is quickly over-powered and his acomplices are covered by the cowboys outside. Pedro confesses to the branding and Dandy is the honored guest at the wedding of Jack and Alice.

A RIDE FOR LIFE (Dec. 14).—Tom Lander, owner of a sheep ranch, quarrels with and discharges a Mexican hand, by name Pedro, who vows vengeance on him. Ed. Hawkins, cow puncher on the Bar "B" cattle ranch, on proposing to Betty Lane, the foreman's daughter, is told that she is already engaged to John Gorman, the owner of Bar "B." Ed. decides to go away and become a sheep herder. He obtains a position with Lander. At this time, word is brought to Gorman that Lander's sheep are on the Bar "B" ranges, and he immediately starts with his men for the village with a placard warning the sheep men to remove their stock or expect trouble. The rival owners meet at the village saloon and trouble is narrowly averted by Hawkins, who takes Gorman with him out of the trouble zone.

Pedro has heard the quarrel and determines to take advantage of it to revenge himself on Lander. He lies in wait for Lander and shoots him. The bullet passes through Lander's watch, stopping it at five fifteen. At the same time Gorman and Hawkins are together at the village. Pedro accuses Gorman of the crime the next day and he is arrested. Gorman tells Betty to telephone Hawkins to come and establish an alibi. This is overheard by Pedro who cuts the telephone wires, but not before enough of the message has been received to start Hawkins on his return trip, from the Oak Crest Range thirty miles away. In the meantime in the courtroom the preliminary examination is being held and Pedro is steadily inciting the sheep party to lynch Gorman. Hawkins pony-expresses the thirty miles and arrives in the courtroom just as the mob have placed the rope about Gorman's neck. The tables are turned and the cattle men decide to do a little lynching on their own account, and Pedro is dragged out.

THE FOOLISHNESS OF OLIVER (Dec. 6).—Oliver Benton, a gay young man of religious parents, who try to get him to marry the daughter of a minister friend, is unceremoniously ejected from his father's home for indulgence in prodigality. He comes into the society of De Lacy, an artist, and Reggie Smythe, a spendthrift. The three men visit a theater at which Sybil Caldwell is playing. Oliver falls in love with her.

At a party given in De Lacy's studio, he (De Lacy), tries to get Sybil to drink a glass of wine, which she strenuously refuses to do. Oliver interposes in behalf of Sybil and after a quarrel with De Lacy, he escorts Sybil home.

Oliver eventually marries Sybil and, owing to unfortunate circumstances, they are obliged to start married life in a poor tenement house. A month later they find themselves on a bread and water diet and are reminded by the landlady that they are two weeks behind in their rent. Oliver cannot obtain employment, but the landlady, a kind-hearted person, whose husband is a waiter in a fashionable hotel, secures a job as waiter in the same hotel for Oliver. It is at this place that Oliver's former friends, De Lacy and Reggie, come, and Oliver is assigned to wait upon them. They tease Oliver over his inferiority and when Oliver returns to the kitchen, old Mr. Benton, who has witnessed the insults heaped upon his son by the two young men, reprimands them for their conduct. When Oliver returns, his father tries to get him to come home, but he refuses. Mr. Benton, seeing that there is no use arguing with him, gets his address from the manager, where he repairs at once.

After his father leaves, Oliver gets into an argument with De Lacy. For this he is discharged. He goes home, where he finds that his father is trying to make Sybil take a sum of money in order that she may leave him. Oliver intercepts and orders his father from the house. Outside the old man repents and returning, begs Sybil's pardon and asks Oliver to return home with his wife.

OWING MORE (Dec. 13).—Bob and Will Burnett are twins. Bob is working hard in Arizona, while Will is doing his best to spend his patrimony in riotous living. Bob finally strikes it rich and not having seen his native town of Rustville in six years, he decides to return home.

In the meantime Will has been having his troubles with his numerous creditors and on the very day Bob is to arrive with his pockets stuffed with money, Will's affairs reach a climax. His morning's mail consists of a pile of urgent duns and he owes his help, butcher, liquor dealer, etc., money. He visits his fiancée, Violet Ames. The Ames home is the only oasis in his desert. Violet has some new photographs, one of which she gives Will, writing upon it a most beautiful and touching sentiment in connection with her autograph. Leaving her with expressions of undying love, Will returns home and then and there meets his Waterloo. No sooner does he arrive in his house than his "finish" begins. His servants come in with their baggage and tell him they are leaving. Before they have half completed the expressing of their private opinion of his methods, his other creditors begin to arrive. The angry crowd surge around him. By a swift "side step" Will escapes from them to his front hall, where he is suddenly confronted by two more angry creditors. Being cornered and at bay, Will is compelled to think quickly and thus hits upon the only method of escape left to him; he tells them he is engaged to marry a wealthy girl and that her father has promised to pay his debts as soon as he is married. This quiets the crowd, and the liquor dealer persuades the butcher to give him the name and address of the lady in question.

After thinking it over carefully, Will comes to the conclusion that he had better hurry up his marriage and sets out forthwith to call upon upon Violet. Arriving at her home he is ushered into the drawing room where he finds all his creditors assembled, confronted by Violet and her father. Led on by the crafty liquor dealer the creditors have called upon Mr. Ames, told him of Will's statement and informed him that they preferred their money at once. Mr. Ames utterly repudiates Will and his claim and orders him from the house. The creditors, however, wish to see a great deal more of him and proceed to lay violent hands upon him. After a desperate fight, Will escapes again from his irate creditors and dashes for the railroad station, where he catches an outgoing train and fades from view. But brother Bob steps from this same train and falls heir to all of Will's troubles, creditors and angry sweetheart seeking her photograph. After numerous personal encounters, with the creditors, the local constabulary, he finally manages to restore the village to its wonted calm, but he retains the photograph, after erasing Will's name and substituting his own.

MILANO.

THE APACHE VOW (Dec. 14).—Eva, a music hall singer, married an aged nobleman for his wealth. After several years of married life, Eva barely tolerates her husband's carresses. Lugi, a poor mechanic, was the sweetheart of the Countess Eva. With the desire for a wife, it was only natural that he mated with a girl of his class, shortly after Eva's marriage to the Count D'Arti. Being sent by his employer to make some small repairs at the Count's home, Lugi comes at dawn of day, accompanied by Nella, his wife.

Eva has just bid the guests at her reception adieu, when Lugi enters the drawing room and prepares to proceed with his work. Recognition is mutual between the two former lovers, but fearing her husband will overhear them, bids Lugi be silent. The Countess, by a subterfuge, gets Lugi into her apartment, where she plays upon his vanity, declaring he should not have married, but have waited for her as her husband was an old man and had not long to live. Nella patiently waiting, is broken-hearted to see her husband amerge from the Count's grounds by a side gate and affectionately bidding a richly gowned and handsome woman adieu, recognizing her as Lugi's old sweetheart.

Nella steals away unobserved, but meets Rossa, an Apache chief. Rossa endeavors to induce Nella to join his comrades. Nella cannot be influenced and feeling she may have been hasty and misjudged the importance of Lugi's conduct, she returns home and does not let her husband know of her suspicions. Lugi filled with pride in the belief that he is beloved by the Countess, neglects Nella and finally, even neglects to hide the fact that he pays clandestine visits to his former sweetheart. The Countess, while tolerating Lugi's secret visits, resents his presumption when he openly appears at her home while she has visitors and orders him away never to annoy her again.

Lugi returns home, where a great surprise awaits him. Nella has left home and a note to her husband informs him she has gone forever. After weary searching, he finally learns that his wife has been seen with Rossa and finally locates her in the Apache chief's haunt. He admits all his faults, pleads forgiveness, but all in vain. Nella has taken the Apache vow, binding her for all time to the clan.

Lugi attempts to drown his remorse in drugs and drink and becomes sullen and revengeful. Meeting the Countess and her husband returning from the opera one night, he follows their carriage and observes the Count leave Eva and enter his club. His resentment inflamed, he plies himself with more drink and drugs to make himself forget, but instead a diabolical plan of revenge enters his mind. He 'phones the Count at his club and informs him that his wife has a lover and that he can verify the fact by going home at once. Lugi forces an entrance into the apartment of the Countess, denounces her and tells her what he has done.

Eva pleads with him to go, offers him her jewels, but even if Lugi wished to heed her plea, it is beyond his power to do so, for in his half drunken frenzy he had taken too liberal a portion of the drug and paid the penalty of his disloyalty by death. Eva also paid a price for the Count had been an interested unobserved witness of the scene between Lugi and his wife. Furious with rage he orders to hasten her departure from his home and presence forever.

THANHOUSER.

BRAINS VERSUS BRAWN (Dec. 15).—Among the suitors of a wealthy widow was a middle aged scientist, and while the woman was glad to regard him as a friend, she did not see how she could ever accept him as a husband. The widow was a great lover of athletics, and one day dragged the professor to witness a meet. As they were about to return, an effort was made to rob the widow, and only because of the bravery of one of the young athletes, was the crook captured and the pocket book recovered.

In a few days in dawned upon the professor that while he might be a big potato in the field of science, he was only a small lemon in the garden of love. Brooding over this one evening, may explain why he dreamed that he was transported to the time of the Caesars, and called upon, to fight in the arena. Brute strength could not save him, for he didnt have it, but he called the resources of science at his aid. He astonished Caesar by offering to fight a gang of gladiators single handed, the only proviso being that he should select his own weapons. The boon being granted, the scientist constructed a number of neat little dynamite bombs, and literally wiped up the arena with his opponents, much to the amazement and satisfaction of Caesar.

When the scientist awoke he regarded his dream as a warning that only by scientific management could he hope to win the lady of his heart. Soon the chance came for him to distinguish himself, and he availed himself of it. The rich widow received a letter signed "Black Hand" calling upon her to pay over $10,000. The scientist promised to rectify matters, but did not go into details. He laid a little scientific trap, and astonished the widow by nabbing the criminal and several policemen while some distance from the scene of action himself. The athlete was confounded, for he was the criminal, and he passed out of the widow's life and entered into the service of the State. The widow then decided to marry the scientist.

THE OTHER HALF (Dec. 17).—A laborer, who lived with his family in a New York tenement, was in better financial condition than most of his associates. Misfortune came upon the man, however, and as the result of an accident, his arm was amputated. When he recovered and applied for his old position, he was turned down because he was physically unable to perform the work. Desperate and hopeless, he soon degenerated into a common drunken tramp, while his family were on the verge of actual starvation and his wife was very ill.

Indiscriminate charity aided this man, but the coins were tossed to him went for drink, and his family did not benefit. Then he came under the attention of organized charity and matters soon assumed a better aspect.

Investigations were made, which developed that he was weak, rather than worthless, and with proper encouragement might be expected to really reform. His sick wife and several of the children were taken to a country home, run by organized charity, where they speedily regained their health and strength. The man secured work he could perform, the wife and eldest daughter taught how to keep their home in order and in a short time the family was again on its feet.

THE RACE (Dec. 20).—A young inventor designed a new type of motorboat which he was convinced would break world records. He showed his plans to a builder who promised to look them over. The next day the papers were returned to the boy with a short message that they were impractical. His hopes blasted, the inventor gave up in despair. Later, through the shrewdness of his fiance, he found that his designs had been stolen by the man to whom he had submitted them. He was unable to prove it, and anyway, as the other man said, the innovation had been patented and the young inventor was out of it.

Determined to have revenge the young man set to work to design another motorboat which would far excell his original model. He was successful, and induced the owner of a shipyard to finance the venture. The new boat was completed in time to participate in the international races and the inventor realized that to win this contest meant everything to him. His backer had promised that if victory was scored he would supply ample funds and was certain that they would both make their fortunes.

On the day of the race, the inventor was making his boat ready, when the man who had robbed him appeared. This person had found that the new boat was a certain winner, and he tried to bribe the inventor to lose the race, but the young man indignantly refused. There was a quarrel and a fight with the final result that the boy was felled to the ground unconscious and with a broken arm. There he lay until after the time for the race to start and when he painfully dragged himself to the water front.

Surprisedly he watched the race, and was overjoyed, yet perplexed to see that his boat was far ahead. It won with ease, amid the applause of a crowd of excited spectators, and then slowly approached the landing place, where the steersman, his face concealed by the disfiguring "racing rig," alighted and approached him. Then the disguise was thrown off, and the inventor recognized the woman he loved.

"I was standing in the crowd," she explained, "and I saw the other boats move from the starting line, but yours was not among them. I ran down to the landing, and your mechanician told me you had gone away, and he didn't know where you were. There was no time to make a search, or to hunt up someone to take your place. Your instruction came in handy, and I was sure that in an emergency I could run the boat better than any other person than you, for I know all about it. The results show I was right, didn't it?"

And the inventor clasped the girl in his unbroken arm, for he realized that he owed, not only love and happiness, but victory and assured fortune to her.

THE DAUGHTERS OF SENOR LOPAZ (Dec. 16).—The simple act of discharging a worthless laborer has marked influence on the destinies of the two daughters of the Spanish merchant, Senor Lopaz. According to the custom of their people, the eldest daughter Madeline is afforded lenient privileges over the younger sister, Ines, and it is the desire of the father that she be the first of the sisters to marry. Madeline is a frequent visitor at her father's store and it is during one of these visits that she first comes in contact with the Senor Trevino. On the same day, Ines, desiring something of her father, visits, the store, and is called to account for her appearing in public, which is against the custom of their people. She also met the Senor Trevino, who immediately becomes infatuated with her beauty and escorts her to her home. Senor Trevino, finding it impossible to court the younger daughter, decides to write her a letter in hope of seeing her again. Accordingly, he sends a messenger with the following letter:

"Senorita Lopaz:
May I call for you at eight to stroll in the moonlight? Humbly,
GUSTAVE TREVINO."

When evening arrives she goes to meet him, but is stopped by her father and elder sister. Ines shows them the letter and the elder sister suggests to her father that she herself pretend to be the recipient of the note and go to meet the Senor Trevino. The father readily acceeds and rebuking Inez, he sends her back to the house. Madeline goes to keep the tryst and carries the deception so well that the young man is forced to show her every courtesy, believing that she actually received his note. At the Lopaz home Inez awakens to her love for the Senor and becomes rebellious of the restrictions placed upon her and plans to run away. She leaves a note for her father, telling him that it is useless for him to seek her and hurries from the house. She is observed by Jose Carillo, the discharged laborer, leaving the house. He seeks an opportunity for revenge and follows her. Out in the open country, he accosts her and seizing her, drags her down the steps of an old ruin, planning to hold her for ransom.

In the meantime, the father has found the note and almost distracted, he hurries to find Madeline and shows the note to her and the young Senor. Trevino cannot conceal his concern and tells the father that he will find her at any cost. Senor Lopaz notifies his laborers of the disappearance of his daughter, Inez, and they all join in the search. Trevino, out in the open country, rushes about calling her name and as he approaches the ruins, hears a faint answer to his call. With a rush he is down the steps and attacks her captor. The laborer is strong and wiry and it is not until assistance comes that they are able to overcome the miscreant.

Trevino leads Ines back to her father, who is so delighted at seeing her again that he readily gives his consent to her marriage to the young Senor Trevino.

THE POWER OF LOVE (Dec. 19).—Old Captain Blount, having retired from the sea, has taken his abode among the fishermen on the coast in order to be near the ocean. As a captain, he had been tyrannical, and now, no longer having a crew to dominate, he tries to direct the lives of his two daughters in much the same manner as he would handle mutiny. Among the young fishermen, Bob Newcomer has found favor with the old "salt" and when he expressed a desire to marry the captain's oldest daughter, Martha, the father told her to prepare to wed the fisherman.

Upon a cliff ranch, two young cowboys, Jack Woomer and Pete Neville, are employed. They had met Martha and Mabel Blount and had learned to love them. Bob Newcomer discovers this and notifies the old captain. Together, they interrupt one of the meetings and the father upbraids his daughters. But the cowboys are not without resource. They go to the village where they secure licenses and then await the arrival of the circuit-riding minister, who makes periodical trips in the vicinity. On the day of his arrival they secure his service and calling the girls are married in the open air. Again the suspicious Newcomer has been watching and hurrying to the captain tells him of the marriages of his two daughters.

Pete Neville and his bride start down to interview the irate father and procure his forgiveness, when Newcomer raises his gun and kills the young bridegroom. Startled at the sound of firing, Jack Woomer and his newly made wife hurry down and come upon the tragedy. Newcomer and the captain have called a number of fishermen and they take Martha from the young husband by force and promise him the same fate that Neville received if he ever comes that way again. Woomer returns to the ranch and calls on the cattle men to return with him and avenge the death of their pal. They start for the beach and are soon engaged in conflict. Mabel, crazed with grief over the death of her husband, wanders away to the treacherous rocks in the ocean. While the conflict is on, Martha sees her husband on the cliffs and hurries to join them, followed by the ever-watchful Newcomer. Woomer and Newcomer fight and Woomer succeeds in throwing his adversary over the cliffs. Reunited, the husband and wife return to her father's home and put an end to the useless warfare, but they are too late. The old captain had fought his last fight and they find him lying in the doorway. Sick at heart they wander towards the beach, seeking Mabel and at an ebb tide they find her where the treacherous ocean had thrown her, for she has gone to join her husband in the land beyond.

SAVING THE INNOCENTS (Dec. 21).—A beautiful and interesting series of pictures depicting the care, comforts and education bestowed upon unfortunate children, who, despite the deformities, learn useful occupations, so that in later years they are self-supporting and not dependent upon society.

MRS. BROWN'S BABY (Dec. 21),—Rejected from a hotel, an unhappy and destitute theatrical troupe took refuge by a railroad station. There the comedian, F. Funnymore, found an old newspaper containing an "ad." He read it to his destitute companions and they beat it madly for the address, for the "ad" stated that a certain Mrs. Brown wanted professionals to assist in a church entertainment. Making a feast of the fruit in Mrs. Brown's dining room, they are finally all hired. The comedian is given the part of a baby. In baby clothes, Mr. J. Funnymore was quite the funniest baby Mrs. Brown or yourself has ever seen. He was a fairly contented baby until Mrs. Brown began to rehearse her part as Leah, the Forsaken. Then Mr. J. Funnymore beat it, beat it hard, in baby clothes and mighty glad he had them.

GREAT NORTHERN.

HIS FIRST PATIENT (Dec. 14).—In this comedy film a young doctor finds difficulty in building up a practice. An elderly society woman, Mrs. Clean, urges him to relieve the pain of her pet dog, who is suffering from toothache, and later he is invited to attend a reception given by his patroness.

At this function Dr. Buchan is introduced to Miss Alice Prop, the daughter of a rich manufacturer. Mutual affection between the two is evident from the beginning and as Mr. Prop has announced that he will be absent from the city for several days on a business engagement.

The young medical man asks Miss Prop to partake of luncheon in his apartments. She accepts the invitation, but in the interim her father returns to his home, having missed a train. Finding his daughter absent he hastens to the house of Mrs. Clean, the hostess at the reception and learns that his daughter has left in company with Dr. Buchan. The elderly society woman dispatches a messenger to the house of the young physician warning him that the father of Alice has returned unexpectedly and is on his way to find his daughter. Upon receipt of this message, Dr. Buchan puzzles his wits and finally conceives the idea of having Alice feign illness. The girl consents to hoodwink her father to this extent and when the latter arrives at the doctor's home, he finds his daughter being ministered to by the physician. An ambulance is called and Alice, still attended by Dr. Buchan, is taken to the home of her father where for several days she pretends to be ill. Dr. Buchan is the regular physician in attendance and during the absence of the father there is much love making and little that suggests illness. Finally Dr. Buchan musters up courage and confesses to Mr. Prop that he is in love with his daughter. He proposes for her hand, is accepted and as a climax the young physician tells of the plot which had been prompted by Cupid. Father forgives and all ends well.

SOLAX.

HEARTS UNKNOWN (Dec. 16).—Grace Preston, is a girl who has many admirers. Her father has plenty of money and gives her everything she desires. Grace is in love with Charles Dewhurst, a suave individual who looks upon the marriage with Grace as a convenience; but later when he hears that Mr. Preston has lost his fortune, he breaks the engagement. Grace's pride is injured and not told by her father that she is no longer an heiress, she decides to marry George Kenyon, her father's secretary, to spite the man who jilted her. Kenyon is not a wealthy man, but he loves Grace for her own sake. He knows that she is no longer a girl with a "dough-bag."

After the marriage Grace is very cold to her husband, because she feels that he married her for her money. When she learns the truth about her fortune she then realizes what a fool she has been. She is about to plead for forgiveness and finds him talking confidentally to another woman. Grace thinks he is making love to her, but in reality he is telling the woman, who is an old friend, his troubles. "Oh! I have nothing to live for," says Grace in despair. She plans suicide, but her husband again demonstrates his love.

FIVE EVENINGS (Dec. 20).—Parents are often to blame for their boys and girls going wrong, because, through carelessness or ignorance, they do not make their home life meet the needs of growing children.

This was the case with the Crawley family. Mr. Crawley smoked and read his paper in the evening. His wife read or embroidered. They did not like to be disturbed. Tom Crawley, forbidden to go out evenings, went up to bed, and crawled out of the window. When Jessie's friends came to see her, no one had a good time.

Affairs were in this condition, when Aunt Lucy arrived. Aunt Lucy was a woman of rare insight, and sympathy with young people. She won Jessie's heart from the first, and between them, they turned the house into a gay and lively place. Even father and mother were stirred out of their accustomed habits, felt quite young again. But Tom was harder to win. He continued to sneak away nights, until through Aunt Lucy, father saw how near he had come to losing his boy, and Tom was saved from disgrace.

PUNCH.

THE BABY AND THE COP (Dec. 19).—Mrs. Brown thinks that she has the prettiest baby in the world, but everybody knows that it is a poor puny little girl with no claim to beauty. A doctor makes a great discovery in the form of a tonic to be placed in the baby's milk. Mrs. Brown gives the tonic to her baby and it starts to grow at a wonderful rate. The nurse takes baby out for an airing and while she is having a little flirtation it grows to be a plump three-hundred pound wonder and gets lost in the park. A diminutive policeman finds it and has his own troubles getting it home to its surprised mother and relatives.

CHAMPION.

THE HONEYMOONERS (Dec. 9).—Charlie Smith, whose father objects to his son keeping company with Rae Meadows, sends his gardner, De Forest Smith, with a letter of instructions to Rae. The gardner is in love with Rae's cook, Bainey, and they, like Charlie and Rae, elope. After sending a telegram to the Grand Hotel, Boston, to reserve the best suite of rooms, Charlie and his wife start to Boston by automobile, while the gardner and Bainey, start by train.

The manager of the hotel is delighted to receive the telegram, but when the gardner and his wife arrive and ask for the best suite of rooms, he turns them down, because they look like country rubes. It is not until De Forest produces his card that the manager gives them accommodation, thinking that it must be he who sent the telegram signed "Smith."

As a couple of notorious criminals by the name of Smith are at large, the inspector of police, institutes a search of all the hotels. The inspector and the police arrive at the Grand Hotel and see the name of Mr. and Mrs. Smith on the register. Just as he is making the arrests, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Smith, who have walked all the way, their machine having broken down, appear and ask for their rooms. Upon producing their cards, the inspector has the four Smiths arrested and taken to prison, thinking they are the bandits. They are left there for the night. The next morning the inspector receives a telegram to the effect that the real criminals have been captured, traveling under the name of Maloney. This, of course, exonerates the Smiths.

RELIANCE.

TOPSY TURVY LOVE AFFAIR (Dec. 7).—At the seashore, Grace Winters and her pretty young aunt meet two charming gentlemen, Dick Van Allen and his guardian, Paul Deacon. The gentlemen teach the ladies to swim and one day Dick rescues Grace. However, Dick thinks his guardian too attentive to the pretty aunt, and a quarrel ensues. They decide to settle the matter by a duel. The clerk is requested to act as second, but he refuses the honor and the French chef is suggested. The chef accepts quite pleased. Dick and his guardian (as the time for the duel draws near), becomes suddenly terror stricken at the sight of any object resembling a gun or pistol. The clerk and the chef get together and devise a scheme by which the pair can fight their duel, but without result. They replace the lead bulets with bread crumbs. The chef directs the duel and at the command of "fire" both discharge their guns and fall; believing themselves mortally wounded. But they discover the truth and as aunty and Grace rush up, have occasion to thank the chef. A minister, who had been in attendance, is pressed into service and a double wedding takes place.

JOE'S REWARD (Dec. 11).—Joe, a prisoner in the state penitentiary, is paroled with the proviso that he remain in his own state. Filled with joy he goes to the country, where he gets work as a farmhand. The farmer, a hard-headed old fellow, learning that Joe is an ex-convict, treats him cruelly. The boy's only comfort is Mary, the pretty eighteen-year-old daughter of the farmer. Her kindness wins Joe's heart and they are soon deeply in love. The farmer learning of this, sends the boy away, but Mary refuses to let him go alone and they elope. They are married, and later Joe learns of some little homesteads to be had across the state border. He breaks the proviso and takes his wife where she will have a home and some comfort. His monthly reports he sends to a friend in the other state and he mails them to the warden. The farmer learning what Joe has done, goes to the jail and tells. Joe is arrested and brought back. But when he tells the warden his story—how he tried to make a living

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of three dollars ($3) cash with order, we will send by express, charges not prepaid, or $3.50 by registered mail, prepaid (Canadian orders by registered mail only), the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

"The Leader" in Calcium Lights

IT LEADS! IT LIGHTS! IT LASTS!

All weak points of other calcium light outfits have been overcome. A few points of advantage "THE LEADER" CALCIUM LIGHT OUTFIT has over all other calcium lights on the market:

More compact. Requires 25 per cent. less oxygen to evaporize the ether. Will not tip over. Saturator inside of generator.

Any experienced operator will tell you these points of superiority are found in no other Calcium Light outfit manufactured.

Others claim their outfit is the best, but they do not tell you why. We claim the LEADER leads them all and we tell you why. In other words, we prove our claim.

The LEADER Calcium Light is positively the next thing to electricity for moving picture machine or stereopticon work and is recommended by all large traveling companies and large moving picture dealers.

Demand the LEADER from your dealer. Drop us a line and we will tell you why the LEADER CALCIUM LIGHT leads them all.

If you are using the LEADER you are using the best money can buy.

PRICE, Complete with Burner, $25.00.

THE HOUSE OF

SELIG

SELIG FIVE-A-WEEK.

Dec. 16th.

OPITSAH—APACHE FOR SWEETHEART

A simple story of Indian devotion and savage constancy. A study in Indian customs. Dramatic in its appeal. Wheeler Oakman, Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton and Eugenie Besserer play the title roles. About 1,000 ft.

Dec. 17th.

BUCK'S ROMANCE

A virile western story with a strong comedy side to it. Clever in every respect. Myrtle Stedman, Lester Cunio, Rex de Rosselli and William Duncan play the principal parts. About 1,000 ft.

Dec. 18th.

THE MILLIONAIRE VAGABONDS

A most unique reverie in that ever lovable land of vagabondia. A comedy of unique situations and unusual circumstances. George Hernandez, Eugenie Besserer and Frank Richardson are in the cast. About 1,000 ft.

Dec. 19th.

Sammy Orpheus, or The Pied Piper of Animaldom

A most interesting and exceedingly unusual subject in which a wandering flute player awes the fierce beasts of the jungle. Produced on the Selig wild animal farm. About 1,000 ft.

THE INVINCIBLE PROGRAM.

Dec. 20th.

THE LAST OF HER TRIBE

A vividly told tale reminiscent of the old San Gabriel Mission. A study of those days when the Indians led the simple life. Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton and Eugenie Besserer are all seen to advantage in this subject. About 1,000 ft.

Gundlach Projection Lenses Guarantee You the Sharpest and Most Brilliant Picture it is Possible to Produce.

If you want to improve your picture just order a lens for trial subject to approval and see the result with your own eyes. If you give the height and width of the screen, the size of the picture wanted and the distance from the machine to the centre of the screen we can furnish a lens of the exact focus for your operating conditions.

Many Exhibitors have found it an advantage to ask our advice about lenses before equipping new Theatres. Do not be afraid of a long throw. No matter what the distance is to the screen we can supply lenses of suitable focus and great illuminating power. All the best theatres in Rochester use our lenses and every customer has been satisfied of their superiority to ordinary lenses. THE LENS MAKES THE PICTURE, and you cannot get the best result out of the film unless you use Gundlach Lenses.

You can order through any Film Exchange or Dealer in Motion Picture Supplies.

Gundlach Projection Lenses will be furnished to order with the following machines subject to a little higher price than ordinary lenses: Powers Cameragraph, The Motiograph, The Simplex, The American Standard, The Edison. Our Lenses are used by the Kinemacolor Co. and a large number of the finest theatres in the United States and Canada.

ITALA FILM CO. OF AMERICA
COLUMBIA THEATRE, N.Y.

$2.50 WILL START YOU WITH THE MOST COMPLETE BUSINESS FORM YOU COULD POSSIBLY INSTALL.

Start the New Year Right by Using a Business "SYSTEM"

The Theatre Record Ledger

Will convince any wide-awake Manager that $2.50 invested in our NEWLY-REVISED THEATRE RECORD LEDGER is positively the best money ever invested. Think of a system which will check your box office with every ticket sold—even the starting and closing numbers of each price ticket—separating the matinee and night receipts; also recording additional sundry receipts (slide and curtain advertising, candy machines, etc.)

For separating and recording expenses, our system is absolutely perfect. Under the headings "Particulars, Total, Advertising, Vaudeville, Salaries, Freight, Express, House Payroll, Rent, Miscellaneous, Light, Supplies and Other Expenses," etc., a careful and saving manager can quickly locate every dollar spent, recording each special day's "Feature Attractions," together with spacing for the weather.

So complete and accurate is the THEATRE RECORD LEDGER that you can quickly turn back from week to week and locate every day's transaction.

Printed on heavy bank ruled, three-colored column ledger paper, size 17 x 21 inches, of 52 complete pages for one complete year's business, neatly bound. The Theatre Record Ledger will be sent to any address upon receipt of $2.50, fully "Guaranteed" as represented or money refunded. Start the new year right by ordering today. Experience is a great teacher —

From every direction we hear the views of successful exhibitors and these HONESTLY QUOTED should be worth a great deal to those who are willing to profit by the experience of those who are successful.

Mr. W. H. Wassmann, of the Crystal & Rex Theatres, Nashville, Tenn., recently wrote:

"I wish to state that your screens are giving great satisfaction, and expect to use them exclusively."

Why does Mr. Wassmann say this? His screens were paid for in full by him; there must be a reason —

Listen, the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN

(a) saves him money in juice,
(b) removes the glare and veil common to other screens,
(c) gives pictures natural and lifelike instead of with a ghostly-white-foggy-cast.
(d) Because his patrons are greatly pleased,
(e) Because he has the benefit of the use of our service department — he is not forgotten after he purchases.

The screen that makes them look like Moving Paintings.

SELLING THE HEIRLOOM ON CHRISTMAS EVE

It looked like a pretty slim Christmas for the Millers. Poverty reigned, and when on Christmas Eve the dealer in curios came and offered a handsome price for the old Delft stove, his proposition was thoroughly acceptable. He in turn had a purchaser, the wealthy Mrs. Leeds, who decided to make it a Christmas present to her husband, a lover of antiques. But little Ethel loved that old stove, and when the movers came she hid herself in it and went too. Of course Mr. and Mrs. Leeds were surprised to encounter the little girl, who soon captivated them and led them to her home. The Leeds made Christmas merry at the Millers' and adopted Ethel to love and cherish as their own.

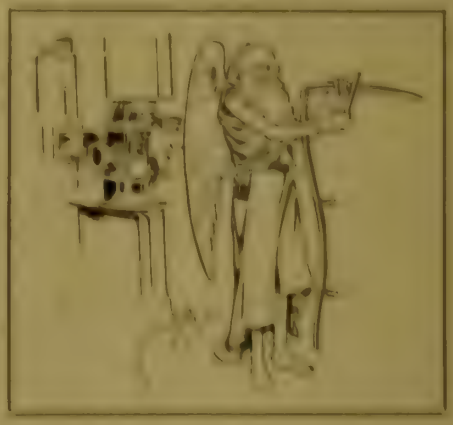
POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH



The Machine That

DEFIES TIME

Strictly speaking, that is not true; for Father Time—"The tomb builder"—finally gets us all. But, we do say this: that every individual part of POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH is composed of the best material that modern scientific knowledge, experience, and money afford, that each part must pass the most rigid test for accuracy and strength.

The result is a machine upon which wear and tear have the least possible effect, and which, with reasonable treatment, will last for years.

Read what George Montgomery, Operator, Yorkville Theatre, East 86th Street, New York, has to say on this subject:

"I am running a Power's No. 6. It was installed here at Nickelodeon opera, and it has run every day since and has never cost a cent for repairs. Another has it over the heads of those known to me only. [illegible] not a record for any make of moving [illegible] machine."

"It [illegible] a splendid, clear, steady picture, and runs like a clock."

The above concerns our No. 6. Since then we have model No. 6A, has been put on the market, to which are to be found many improvements which more recent knowledge affords.

Thanhouser's "The Star of Bethlehem"

Released Tuesday, December 24th

The Newspaper Editorial Said: Even those who witnessed the private production of "The Star of Bethlehem," which the Thanhouser Film Corporation regards as its crowning achievement, and received such a highly favorable impression of the motion picture as an educational force, do not fully comprehend the time, expense and people required, for its presentation. For this production 200 people were required, a month was consumed in its preparation and $8,000 expended before the picture was run off.

The Minister of The Gospel Said: The motion picture is here, it is here to stay; it is a mighty factor in the present-day civilization, it is steadily improving morally and has within it the possibilities of unbounded good. Your picture story of "The Star of Bethlehem" is to be heartily commended It is sympathetic, instructive, forceful and reverent.

The Exchange Man Said: I can book you "The Star of Bethlehem" on or after Tuesday, Dec. 24th, in three reels. We have with it two one sheets, a three, a six and a sixteen sheet.

The Standard Engraving Co. Said: We have 2-column cuts for newspaper or circular use, at 40 cents apiece. (Address 560 Seventh Avenue, New York City.)

The Kraus Mfg. Co. Said: We have 12 8x10 photos for lobby display, at $2.00 the set. (Address, 14 East 17th Street, New York City.)

The Novelty Slide Co. Said: We have slides at 40 cents apiece. (Address 20 East 14th Street, New York City.)

H. J. Streyckmans Co. Said: We have illustrated booklets, on book paper, at $5.00 the thousand. (Address 60 Wall Street, New York City.)

Hennegan & Co. Said: We have illustrated heralds at $2.50 the thousand. (Address Cincinnati, Ohio.)

The Exhibitor Said: I Want "The Star of Bethlehem."

IMP

"THE OLD FOLKS' CHRISTMAS" (Drama).

Monday, December 23rd.

It comes as a ray of comfort. A pleasure-giving Christmas picture that you will like and love.

NESTOR

"POOR JONES' VACATION"—"VIEWS OF THE U. S. CAPITOL"

Monday, December 23rd.

The boss wanted the same girls that Jones had. He could not have them while Jones was around—result—Jones vacation ended. A real lively comedy and an interesting topical.

ECLAIR

"THE STORY OF A KISS"

Tuesday, December 24th.

See the many ruses adopted by an ardent lover to steal a kiss from his sweetheart. You will cheer with glee at the comical situations.

"THE NEW MAGDALEN" (Two-Reel Drama).
Thursday, December 26th.

A sublime dramatization by Herbert Brenon of Wilkie Collins' most adorable story. Beautiful photography, excellent cast and brilliant settings. A positive state right feature.

"AS THE DOCTOR ORDERED"
"A WIDOW'S WILES" (Split).
Saturday, December 28th.

Two of those laughable Imp comedies on one reel. One thousand feet of smiling, laugh-provoking entertainment.

101 BISON

"A HEROINE OF THE PLAINS"
(Two-Reel Western Drama).
Tuesday, December 24th.

Just think of it! A woman tied to a steer which is madly rushing down a mountain side. You will yell with excitement when you see it.

"EL CAPITAN AND THE LAND GRABBERS" (Western Drama).
Saturday, December 28th.

An electrifying Western. Plenty of action. The mad ride to file the land claim is only one of the many thrills.

GEM

"THE AMULET."
Tuesday, December 24th.

A dramatic novelty. One that they will talk about to their neighbors. Good photography, excellent acting.

CRYSTAL

"HER VISITOR"—"THE "ELOPEMENT" (Split Comedy).
Sunday, December 29th.

Two clever farces depicting a series of laughable incidents closely following each other. Sure guarantee of Sunday enjoyment.

"THE BIG WHITE CHIEF"
Wednesday, December 25th.

A medley of Western comedy. You can't conceive of the funny practical jokes the cowpunchers played on Ranchman Davies. See it!

"THE PADRE'S GIFT"
Friday, December 27th.

The most scenically beautiful picture you ever saw. Filled with rapturous emotional scenes and loving situations. You will luxuriate in it.

REX

"A BUSINESS MAN'S WIFE"
Thursday, December 26th.

He was a business man first, his home-life was secondary. The social serpent appeared — she was tempted. But it all ended happily just as you would like it to.

"AN ILL WIND."
Sunday, December 29th.

There is a fervency about it that will bring tears to your eyes. A true-to-life story, vividly interpreted.

CHAMPION

"THE CHAPERONS."
Monday, December 23rd.

Something different in the comedy line. A continuous round of merriment.

MILANO

"HER INSPIRATION."
Saturday, December 28th.

She felt that his success was hers, and when he jilted her the delusion of happiness vanished. Crushed and stunned, she sought comfort in her mother's arms.

"A DRY TOWN."
Thursday, December 26th.

Begone, dull care. Here's a comedy that will chase it and keep it traveling.

"INSECT HUNTING"—"GONTRAN, KIDNAPPER."
Sunday, December 29th.

A comedy that will give you a stitch in your side from laughing. Along with it a rare scientific picture.

POWERS

"WHO'S THE BOSS"—"THEIR CHRISTMAS TURKEY."
Wednesday, December 25th.

Prepare yourself! Take a stimulant along! You will almost die with laughter as this split comedy laughs itself along.

"TOYS OF DESTINY" (Two-Reel Drama).
Friday, December 27th.

It is a real sermon in pictures. The moral is so forcefully presented that it will never be forgotten.

VICTOR

"THE PROFESSOR'S DILEMMA"
(Comedy-Drama).
Friday, December 27th.

The comedy is limitless and the method of presenting it is inimitable. An Owen Moore crowd-getter.

FRONTIER

"TRACKED TO THE SANDIA MOUNTAINS" (Western Drama).
Wednesday, December 25th.

You could not want anything better. Strong story, beautiful photography, gorgeous scenic effects. Innumerable thrills.

HELEN GARDNER

CLEOPATRA

Six thousand feet of sumptuous beauty and exquisite art – absolutely a motion picture in a class to itself – a perfect story

Director-Manager

One hour and forty minutes of thrilling, dramatic interest – a story of the most remarkable woman in all human history

THIS is unquestionably the greatest picture of its kind ever produced. The greatest production of the picture ever accomplished. So much appreciation and praise have been heaped upon it, by audiences as well as the printed opinion of the most competent critics, that there is nothing left to be said, but that it is all but perfect. Miss Gardner's work in it places her undoubtedly abreast of the greatest and most talented actresses in the world. Her support is good. The story moves without a flaw, and tells itself without any assistance from a "lecturer." There is not a dull or uninteresting second in the entire hour and a half required to project the picture. The picture is in a class all to itself. There is none with which to compare it. It sets a new standard in pictures

WITHIN a week of the first announcement, two States had been sold, namely, New York and New Jersey. One foreign country has since been sold, namely, Russia, Miss Gardner's success, her supreme ability is known by man, woman and child all over the world. She made "Cleopatra" [illegible]. Those who witness her in "Cleopatra" will [illegible] as in the case of "Quo Vadis" [illegible] pronounced to be the most powerful stand-out the theatre has ever had. The most beautiful advertising matter ever furnished with a motion picture. [illegible] "look and see" – at your rival to get this picture. You must be quick.

THERE is no question of this wonderful picture either as a work of art or a money-maker. Both facts are already demonstrated. One fact is attested by the applause and appreciation with which every audience receives the picture and by the [illegible] and pronouncing that [illegible] upon it by well-known critics whose written and spoken words are [illegible] from the advertising department (see M. P. World [illegible]). The latter effort is proven by the crowded houses that witness every presentation of the picture. Phenomenal patronage and standing-room-only are what the picture is already accomplishing. It will continue to accomplish the same result for months to come, and from one end of the world to the other. The story is so clearly told and so well acted that the dullest intellect as well as the clearest understanding every value, appreciates every point

EGOTISTICAL EDDIE

A Fable with a Hunch

ONCE there was a Man with a loose Bunch of Simoleons and an exaggerated Idea of his own Ability. He looked over the Neighborhood and decided that the Chickens in his Town didn't have any Place dark enough to Bill and Coo with the Village Lotharios, and that the Antique Population was badly out of Touch with the wide, wide World. So he started a Picture Show on the Main Street of the Burg and began handing out Amusement by the thousand Feet. Incidentally he cleared up all the five Cent Pieces that had been resting in the old broken Teapots so long they were covered with Tannin. Being a patriotic Citizen he showed only Fillums made by American Manufacturers, and he flung Old Glory to the Breeze every morning at Sunrise. All the Signs in the Local Zodiac pointed to Success, but there was a Rat Hole of some sort in his Money Till. The Village Belle after four Weeks blew right by the big Electric Sign on his front Door and took at least fourteen Male Lights with her on her evening walks in the suburbs. Next the old People flagged his Place, and he was left all alone. Something was the Matter, but the Gink couldn't locate it with a Divining Rod, so he sent an S. O. S. call for assistance. About this time a wise Guy, wearing a Red Rooster Pin blew in and handed Egotistical Eddie a Hunch. He told him his Show had just as much Variety in it as the Bill of Fare at the Village Hotel where they served Corned Beef Hash three times a Day every Day, and that while Corned Beef Hash is good, its continued Diet for a couple of Months was Apt to make a Man yearn to meet a nice Piece of fried Ham with a bit of Hen Fruit on the Side. He also managed to get the Idea of booking something beside American Fillums to percolate in the Gink's Gray Matter and recommended C. G. P. C. Products. Now Eddie has 'em all coming and has a big House setting 'way back from the Street to live in, and his Show Ushers wear uniforms with brass headlights. Next year he's going to run for Town Treasurer and have everything his own Way.

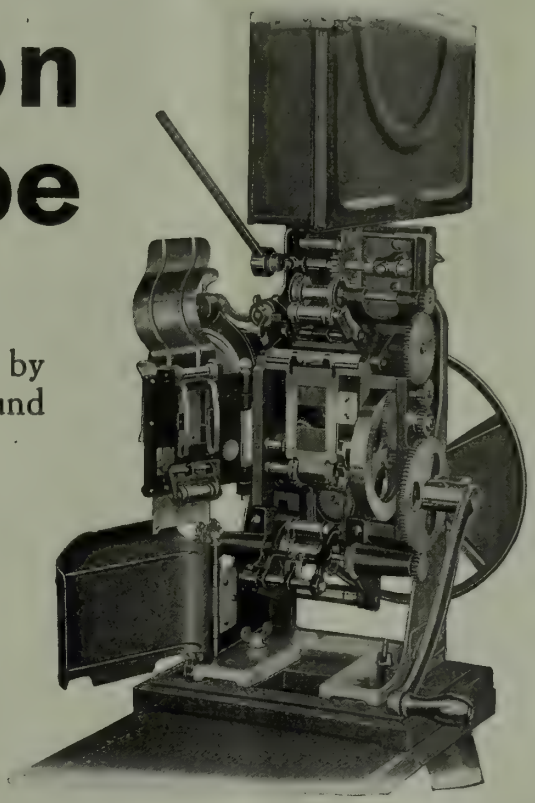
The Edison Kinetoscope

Underwriters' Type "B"



When the crowds begin to drift by your place at night and get jumping around the entrance of the movies on the next block, don't stick an extra arc light out in front and think you've fixed things. Look at the heart of your business — at your moving picture machine.

Pictures look wobbly and spotty and full of specks? Keep the audience waiting for repairs once in a while? No wonder the crowds are going somewhere else.

Ever seen an Edison Kinetoscope? Ever notice how simple and strong it was—how there wasn't any possibility of fire risk in running it? Ever notice the pictures it threw — bright and clear and steady as real life? Ever thought of its economy? Of course you have. Then sit right down and ask us to send you a copy of the Edison Kinetogram and Catalog 500. You'll be glad.

"MADELEINE'S CHRISTMAS"

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 17th

A wonderful heart story, featuring Ormi Hawley, Guy D'Ennery and Henrietta O'Beck.

Hermann Von Schultz, a violinist, attached to the theatre, protects Marguerite, a young amateur, who belongs to the ballet. Marguerite's mother is killed by accident and the good musician, though much older than the girl, proposes marriage. She accepts and in a year a baby girl comes, which is a new joy. Marguerite's friends persuade her that she has married a man too old for her and that her theatrical career would be enhanced if she ran away and accepted a brilliant engagement. She goes, but after a few years finds herself homeless and starving. She returns on Christmas Eve and is welcomed by Hermann and Madeleine, her baby.

"THE POWER OF SILENCE"

RELEASED MONDAY, DECEMBER 30th

THROUGH THE GENERAL FILM COMPANY

Thomas Lowry, a wealthy ranch owner makes his will in favor of his adopted daughter Jane. "The Silent One," a sheep herder of powerful personality loves Jane, and Lowry approves of the match. Robert Sinclair, a nephew of the old man, comes from the East and falls in love with the girl, and "The Silent One" looks on without words. The Easterner with his polished manners fascinates the girl and he tells her of the wonders of his country. Old Lowry dies suddenly and Sinclair tries to steal the will, but is caught in the act by "The Silent One." He then persuades Jane to go with him and "The Silent One" tells her that if she really loves the man to go, but he also advises Sinclair that if harm ever comes to the girl he had better take his own life. Jane goes East with the city man and in a few years her money is squandered, she is reduced to poverty and dies broken-hearted. Sinclair, having dissipated all of the girl's money, returns West to sell the sheep. "The Silent One" traps him and by force of will power leads him to his cave in the cliffs. A desperate struggle takes place and the two men pitch over the cliff to death below. Thus ending the career of good and evil.

> In my opinion nothing is of greater importance to the success of the motion picture interests than films of good moral tone. Motion picture shows are now passing through a period similar to that of vaudeville some years ago. Vaudeville became a great success by eliminating all of the more objectionable features and, for the same reason, the five cent theatre will prosper according to the moral attitude. Unless it can secure the entire respect of the sensible, law abiding public it cannot endure.

the uplift and progress of humanity, are often found to be of broader mentality and have sounder views than some of our clerical friends. This age needs constructive work; the railers and denouncers of things are out of joint with the times.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD deems it an imperative duty to warn exhibitors against showing the films known as the Life and Adventures of Lieutenant Petrosino. In New York the films have been severely criticised in one of the great daily newspapers, which based a crusade against motion pictures on the existence of such productions. In Cleveland an exhibitor was arrested because he insisted on showing these films despite the warnings conveyed to him by the authorities. The films were seized by the police and held as evidence in the coming trial. This "feature" is typical of the many cheap, flashy and sensational reels that have lately been made by some domestic and foreign manufacturers. The exhibitors can do their share in keeping the business clean and respectable by absolutely barring such trash from their theaters.

Aspects of the Sunday Question: I

By W. Stephen Bush

IN season and out of season we have commended, advocated and urged the possibility and the advantages of a proper Sunday entertainment. In many cases we have been able to help in breaking down the barriers of ignorance and prejudice. We have presented the subject to our exhibiting friends and readers in every possible aspect, seeking to supply them with good sound arguments and cheering them on the hard road of trial and experiment.

We firmly believe that the proper Sunday entertainment is legal everywhere, unless prohibited in terms; we know, that wherever and whenever the final interpretation of the law has been sought in the higher courts the victory was with the exhibitor; we realize that nothing will gain more friends for the motion picture, nothing will better increase its prestige and advertise its educational possibilities than the Sunday exhibition.

The fight for a Sunday entertainment requires patience, diplomacy and moral courage of a high order. The first step should be the consulting with able counsel and then there must be a willingness to make a test case, even if one exhibitor or more have to submit to the indignity of arrest. This was but recently done in Ohio, where the exhibitors gained a final and signal victory. It is, however, extremely improbable that the indignity of an arrest has to be suffered in order to make a test case. Where a mere technical violation is concerned and the law itself is at best uncertain, arrest is a pure formality, necessary to have the court of final jurisdiction pronounce on the legality of the Sunday exhibition. Even if the final decision were to be unfavorable, it is a practical certainty that nothing worse than a fine will be imposed by way of punishment. In such a case, with public sentiment behind the petitioners, it will be worth while to try and amend the law by going before the legislature. In many previous issues The Moving Picture World has outlined the scope and general language of bills which in the present state of public opinion would be most likely to become laws.

The fight of one intelligent, courageous and determined exhibitor, on behalf of a proper and suitable Sunday entertainment, must be interesting to all and, as it undoubtedly conveys its lessons to others, we will mention at some length the struggle of a prominent exhibitor in Pierre, South Dakota. This exhibitor gave a show on Sunday consisting of scenic pictures exclusively. To be specific the program consisted of the reels, "The Manufacture of Paper" and "The Making of the World's Greatest Newspaper," together with the Animated Weekly. The exhibitor had fortified himself with an opinion of the Attorney General of the State as to the legality of this kind of an entertainment on Sundays, and this opinion is so strikingly similar to the decisions of the courts in New York and other states and bears out so well the contention of The Moving Picture World, that we reproduce its salient points here. The Attorney General says "* * * If our law was to be construed so as to prohibit the exhibition of scenery by moving picture shows I see no reason why such a construction would not also prohibit stereopticon views in churches illustrating lectures."

This plain and simple analogy holds good everywhere. No one has ever claimed that it was unlawful to give a lecture on Sundays; on the contrary, we know that such lectures are very common. We also know that they are illustrated by stereopticon views and what is the difference between the still picture and the moving picture in the eye of the law? Though there is not and cannot be any Federal legislation on the subject, the laws in the various states, all having one common origin, show a decided family likeness. Take for example the laws in the New England states. Take states, even as far apart as South Dakota and New York, and the same resemblance is still to be observed. All this shows that the exhibitors in one state can always learn something by watching the proceedings in a Sunday campaign in another state.

In the states of the Middle and Far West where the initiative and referendum have been adopted, the question of allowing public exhibitions of proper motion pictures on Sunday can easily and quickly be decided by popular vote. In such states the exhibitors have it practically in their own power to win a victory for the open Sunday. Our South Dakota exhibitor showed rare judgment in focusing the issue on the character of the Sunday exhibition. Therein lies either the strength, or the weakness of the exhibitor. If his Sunday program is made up with due regard to the nature of the day, he has little to fear from the opposition. A man or woman who sees a desecration of the Sabbath in the showing of uplifting and educational films is either a fossil or a fanatic or both. The opponents of the program compiled by the South Dakota exhibitor passed a set of resolutions full of phrases, but utterly devoid of facts or arguments. The educational program disarms criticism and answers objections even before they can be formulated and stated. On the other hand the promiscuous program with its melodrama or "Wild West" must be repugnant as a proposed Sunday show, even to people with no religious affiliations whatever. Happily exhibitors everywhere seem to thoroughly grasp this fact and we notice that in the great majority of cases the Sunday programs can be told by their very composition, which differentiates them from the ordinary show.

If The Moving Picture World thought that the special Sunday program would be but an entering wedge for mixed programs later on, we would not advocate the Sunday exhibition at all. Just how the proper character of the Sunday entertainment is to be secured, whether its regulation may be left to the individual discretion of the exhibitor, or whether it would be wiser to define and regulate this very important phase of the Sunday show by plain statutes is a question which we will consider at some length in our next issue.

It Is to Laugh

By Louis Reeves Harrison

WE are the only creatures on earth that laugh, and the funniest part of it all is that there is very little to laugh at on earth but ourselves. The strangest part of it all is that gravity seems to excite our sense of the ridiculous, even when people in this line of business take themselves seriously. We are deluged with articles, as producers are with scenarios, by people persuaded that they are saying something new and entertaining, and the authors are not always lacking in intelligence, but they tell us solemnly of what is new to them that has been adequately recorded long ago.

Many bright minds have been focused upon the moving picture industry during the past half-score of years; the creative and critical fields have been explored to their boundaries, yet the daily press is just beginning to take impressive notice of the New Art, and periodicals are commencing to publish awe-inspiring articles about it that expand our cheeks rather than our minds. They have all the seriousness of purpose that animated a gentleman in his cups when he came upon two others in similar condition on Madison Square one summer night many years ago.

The two were earnestly discussing a great ball of fire above them, one of the large electric lights then installed for the first time. One declared that it was the sun. The other insisted that it was the moon. They agreed to refer it to the first man who came along, and he was as full as they were. He looked up at it with the thoughtful air of one who is on the verge of an important discovery, then shook his head with the gravity of one who dared not give an important decision without due reflection. "You will have to excuse me," he hiccoughed, "I am a stranger in this part of the country."

That is not a new story, but it may illustrate the wisdom of not pronouncing an opinion on what may appear to be a novelty by those whose powers of observation are befogged by the first glare of light on a subject that reaches their minds. We have yet to learn anything from those who are "strangers in this part of the country," however satisfying their discoveries and efforts to enlighten us may be to themselves, but there is a delightful element of comedy in the way they beat the air. There is a Columbus in the moving picture business born every minute.

There are comedies on the screen that the main part of the audience watch with quiet amusement, and they are not all labeled comedies, either. The comic comes quickly into being when we are all sitting very still, repressing our emotions and concentrating our attention upon what is intended to be thrilling, especialy when the drummer uses his cacophonous instruments. A grunt or a squeak at the wrong time sends part of the assemblage into convulsions, and the toots, bangs, booms and croaks have carried many a poor photoplay over as they have covered many a wretched vaudveal act. It affords us relief to laugh at the absurd rigidity of our attention, at our folly in expecting too much for ten cents.

It might be different if we paid a dollar to see the show. We might feel that we could not afford to laugh at the wrong time. Appreciation then becomes a stern necessity. But when we sit down to be entertained for a couple of hours at the price of a doubtful cigar we experience a "let-her-go" amiability of a drunken sailor on shore leave with six months' pay in his pocket. We don't care what happens. Hence the good nature of the moving picture audience. Something is needed to account for it.

Woman is rarely ridiculed in comedy—it does not please the better class to see her held up to scorn—children are made to do bright and interesting things in the American product, so the poor old meal-ticket is the one usually punched. Man! He furnishes more amusement than all the rest of the world put together. This is largely because he thinks everything he does is of importance. A camera man happened to be on a ship standing by while a great ocean liner sank off the English coast and leveled his instrument at it, but some one got in the way, and he exclaimed in disgust, when he had wasted 200 feet of film: "They will have to do that all over again."

I have written more comedies than serious dramas, but they are undervalued if not indignantly rejected if they portray the humorous side of moving picture production—so widespread is the idea among manufacturers of regulating life as a matter of business routine—yet there is a lot of active material going to seed in the daily experience of most studios. The average director—I have watched many of them work—becomes so intent on developing the situation that he commonly overlooks one of the greatest laugh-making elements of the photoplay.

It is necessary for the outside scenario writer to create or revive a humorous situation in order to peddle his peanuts, but it is next to impossible for him to light up the scene's pictures by his imagination within the limitation of a bare statement of action. He must be permitted to indicate the characterization in comedy. Let us assume that the man in the play is one of those putting on a bold front when he is a coward at heart—a bluffer. He must go at what he pretends he can do seriously as far as the action is concerned, but he must be made to reveal the true state of mind by side glances of terror or twitching gestures of apprehension in order to get the audience on edge for the culmination.

The man of self-importance who assumes a frigid manner in dealing with other men is one of these bluffers. He is afraid of the individual who is tackling him and sets up the Chinese defense of wearing a mask. The four-flusher who tries to isolate himself on an "I-am-holier-than-thou" pedestal furnishes rich material for derision because he is comic without knowing it. Have you ever met him in this business? Perhaps you don't go around as much as a critic of photodramas!

Just as tragedy quickens our sympathies and rouses our sense of justice, comedy has its serious uses in checking human vanity. Photoplays are tremendously educational when they drive along the right lines, though they may not be so tagged. The owner cannot see how a live man can stand being else than a producer; the actor pities those who do not receive mash notes from the unthinking; the director exhibits a deep sense of injury when his borrowed plumage does not excite wonder—there are balloon-heads all along the line. It is for the playwright to prick the bubble in comedy. Let us laugh at ourselves.

Equivocal situations furnish the best material for light comedy, those that threaten to break down every moment and are patched up again just in time are best suited to stage presentation, but the value of original plots on these lines is so high that I have urged those who select photoplays to look more kindly upon those dealing with amusing phases of human nature. To see ourselves as others see us is the best gift you can "gie" us, says Bobby Burns.

To the Exhibitors of Greater New York

NOW that the New York Evening World has run out of amunition with which to pound the picture theaters it has kindly directed the attention of the public toward the proposed Folk Ordinance for the regulation of the theaters, which has been lying in committee in the Board of Aldermen of Greater New York for the past year; left there by its friends who have been hoping for the time to come when they might successfully urge its passage.

While picture men in general may be smarting under the peculiarly unfair attacks of The Evening World they may thank the activities of that paper for a renewal of interest in the Folk Ordinance and for the resumption of effort on the part of its framers to urge its passage.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is in position to say with authority that Alderman Folk and his associates in the Board of Aldermen have decided to bring the matter up for passage at a very early date and that there is now on an active campaign to arouse public sentiment in its favor, that wavering aldermen may be induced to cast their votes in the affirmative when the ordinance is presented.

We will not attempt at this time to rehearse the many excellent provisions of the Folk Ordinance. Every motion picture exhibitor in New York is familiar with its provisions and knows what benefits it will secure to him. There is need, just now, for much determined effort by exhibitors to see that members of the Board of Aldermen are duly and strongly impressed with the great need for the passage of this very wise and equitable measure. The opposition to it is strong and determined and will fight to the last ditch. But only selfish and personal interests of a few are arrayed in that opposition and these should not be permitted to stand against the needs of the people at large.

In a fight of this character the seven hundred picture theater owners of Greater New York, backed as they are by thousands of influential citizens, should, by concerted action, exert a force that will bring results.

Now is the time to bring that force into action, Now is the time to get together that the necessary power may be brought to bear to put the Folk Ordinance through.

A call is being made upon the exhibitors of Greater New York to get into the fight in earnest NOW.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING?

CONCERNING PROGRAM ADVERTISING.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 30th, 1912.

Moving Picture World, New York City.

Gentlemen:—As you have had your say in regard to advertising in ball programmes, etc., I sincerely hope you will grant me a little space in your valuable paper to express my views. The said article may be all well and good in some cases, but not in all. I am at the present time chairman of the ball committee of Local 181 of the M. P. O. P. U., and we have for the past several weeks been soliciting advertisements for our programme, and we are not working any hold-up game. We wrote to the majority of the firms connected with the motion picture business and stated that we thought an "ad" in our programme would be a help to them and honestly believe same to be a fact. We do not claim that an "ad" in our programme will be as much benefit as one in your paper, but do claim that an "ad" in our programme will bring more returns to the advertiser in our territory than an "ad" in your paper will bring from the same for this reason: Everybody connected in any way with the business from the managers down, attend our balls and all receive a copy of our programme while there are numerous ones who never see a copy of The World. Our programme is a souvenir and is kept by everyone receiving it; not a cheaply gotten up affair to be thrown away after the ball.

At the next meeting I will inquire of our secretary and if he still has them I will send to you three letters from firms who advertised last year, stating that they had received business through their "ad." So if it helped them it must have helped others.

We want it understood by all that we don't want charity or anything of the sort, but want to give everyone full value for their money. If we wanted the expenses of our ball paid, we would not go to the expense that we do to put up a programme, but would put up a cheap one, or else just ask the manufacturers to contribute to our expenses.

And why, let me ask, do you pick out the operators, why not mention the exhibitors; they have balls and solicit "ads" for their programmes. Are you afraid to knock them? There are just as many operators buying your paper as exhibitors. Such articles as this should best be left unpublished, as it will make you no friends, but cause you to lose lots that you have, as it looks to me, and hundreds of others, including some of your advertisers. That it is just a game to try to stop manufacturers, agents, etc., from advertising in anything but your paper, and that possibly their "ads" would be larger if they done so, but this you cannot do as the firm who has a wise advertising manager, knows that it pays to advertise in these various programmes, provided they are not a few pieces of pages pinned together that will be thrown right away, as the exhibitor or operator who is going to purchase anything is going to buy advertised goods.

This is longer than I intended, but you will greatly oblige my organization and myself if you can find space to publish it, but I never expect to see it published in your paper, because any one who would publish an article of this sort, knocking the people who help support them is no doubt afraid to publish a call down of themselves.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) N. BASIL MORGAN,
Chairman, Ball Committee,
Local 181, I. A. T. S. E.

1407 Mosher Street.

We are just in receipt of the above letter from the Chairman of the Ball Committee of Operators' Local No. 181 of Baltimore, Md., who takes exception to our editorial on the subject of program advertising soliciting in our issue of November 30th. We believe the printing of this letter will show even more clearly than we could in any other way, the condition against which we spoke.

Since writing the above named editorial, we are in receipt of five more letters from Operators' and Exhibitors' Ball Committees from different parts of the country and also were favored by a personal call from a representative of another large Western operators' local, all looking for advertisements in ball programs.

The reason that we first called attention to this matter was through receiving a telephone call from one of the large advertisers in the industry. He stated that something certainly ought to be done, as, in his own case, the thing had "got to be a nuisance," to use his own words. Judging from his remarks over the telephone, the ball committees of the different exhibitors' and operators' unions throughout the States take the addresses of advertisers from the trade papers and write to all of them, expecting copy in each case.

In the letters we ourselves have received the price per page runs all the way from ten dollars to twenty-five dollars, and it does not take very much figuring to enable anyone to see that the proposition becomes an impossible one even for a large advertiser. There are too many local organizations.

The contention in the above letter as to the value of advertising needs no comment from us. The advertising in the trade papers, reaching thousands of exhibitors all over the country every week, would not be as extensive as it is if it did not bring results.—Ed. Moving Picture World.

MRS. JOE HAMMAN,
As "June Dew" in Kleine-Eclipse Picture, "The Red Man's Honor."

"Sammy Orpheus"

or

"The Pied Piper of the Jungle," by the Selig Polyscope Co.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

SELIG has a novelty comedy subject (in which wild animals and aboriginals of the African jungle contribute to the merriment of the spectator) to serve as a prelude to the joys and festivities of the Christmas season. It is a single reel, bearing the title, "Sammy Orpheus" or "The Pied Piper of the jungle," and will be released Dec. 19.

This subject will have an especial appeal for children, but adults and old folks as well will find in its novel make-up much that will excite their risibilites. Such subjects tend to relieve the monotony of dramatic offerings, and if we had more scenics and other educational films, in addition, to vary the programs, so much the better. There is a dearth of comedy at present in picture theaters, and manufacturers should make every effort to meet the demand.

The subject under review was produced in Los Angeles by Colin Campbell, from the scenario by Lanier Bartlett. While it is difficult in such a case to avoid episodical treatment, the incidents are well linked together and Sammy's adventures keep one in good humor throughout. One has to laugh at the recollection, when all is over, that Sammy has not once partaken of food during his exciting experiences; his love for the notes from the pipe of Pan having banished hunger, even when a good meal was near at hand.

But Sammy is not the only creature moved by the mellow notes of his magic wind instrument. Like the famed piper of old, he sways human beings and rats at will, and, unlike that great magician on the nursery, he puts under spell lordly lions, huge elephants, fierce leopards and other wild animals of the jungle. To hear Sammy's music is to be siezed by an uncontrollable desire to dance. The bodies of men, women and animals glide and sway in rhythmic unison with his compelling notes. Big "Toddles," the pride of Selig's Western animal farm, does not keep time by swaying his massive trunk only, he actually dances a hornpipe, and seems to enjoy it as much as he does his favorite table delicacies. The rats are moved to such a sense of security that two of them nest on the crown of Sammy's hat, while another sleeps on his shoulder.

Sammy's inordinate love of music brings him into trouble with his sweetheart, as the opening scene shows. The girl tries vainly to secure first place in his affections, and places herself in one scale against the magic pipe in the other; but alas! to her mortification, she is but a feather in comparison, and when she leaves him forever, he simply shrugs his shoulders and looks fondly on the beloved instrument.

He is next seen in his forbidding apartments, where he finds a note demanding that he pay his rent or get out. He is forced to take the latter alternative, but is attacked by his landlady, and only escapes a sound drubbing by playing his pipe. The music causes the woman to dance, and while she is thus held in thrall Sammy takes to his heels.

He then resolves to seek a more hospitable clime, and we find him a stowaway on a vessel bound for South Africa. Down in the reeking hold, he suffers the pangs of hunger for days, being obliged to abstain from music until the ship is well out at sea, lest he be returned homeward on a passing vessel. The limit is reached, however, and the captain and the crew are startled one day, by a simple melody that floats sweetly through the musty air of the open hatches. The men cease work and begin to dance hilariously. The captain commands and threatens them, but all to no purpose, and he himself soon joins the gliding, swaying throng. Then Sammy is brought out of the darkness and is turned over to the cook for replenishment. While that worthy is preparing the meal, he is forced to keep time to the magic music, and the entire crew is once more under the spell. The vessel is now near the coast of Africa and the captain, in despair, decides to throw Sammy overboard. A life preserver is tied on his body, and the captain orders one of the crew to push him over the rail into the sea. As the current carries him out of view, Sammy is seen floating on his back, a seraphic smile on his face as he continues to play the magic pipe. What befell him among the cannibals and the wild animals in the jungle would better await the story as told by the pictures.

Gauntier Feature Players

Leading Members of the Famous O'Kalem Players Form New Producing Organization.

NOTHING has happened in the little world of photoplayers that will create so much comment as the announcement made in the advertising pages of this issue of the formation of The Gene Gauntier Feature Players Company. Miss Gauntier and her associates in the new organization had been connected with the Kalem Company for the past five years—from the beginning of that company when it started out in a very small way to make pictures under most trying conditions until its recent production of the subject "From the Manger to the Cross," which promises to eclipse all previous achievements of moving picture manufacturing.

The story of these years of striving for and reaching the very highest point in picture production would be of absorbing interest. Some day it may be told, but just now our readers are most concerned with the future plans of Miss Gauntier, that delightful little woman who has become so popular with the picture-loving public the world over.

Associated with Miss Gauntier, as director of the new organization, is Mr. Sidney Olcott, who is but little less renowned than Miss Gauntier herself; Mr. Jack Clark, who has appeared as Miss Gauntier's leading man for several years past and whose splendid work as a picture artist has been often and favorably commented upon, and Mr. Allan Farnum, scenic artist. This is the nucleus of a strong company of photoplayers now being formed by Mr. Olcott for the purpose of producing multiple-reel feature subjects.

That this organization is capable of undertaking the larger things in the way of picture production it is only necessary to look at the past record of its leading members. To Mr. Olcott belongs the distinction of being the first director to take a company away from its home studio and maintain it in a field for a considerable period. He also piloted the first company to leave America and to make pictures in foreign countries, notably the trip of the Kalem company to Ireland and Germany. This achievement under his management was so successful that a second and larger venture was undertaken under his direction, and this was quickly followed by the now celebrated tour to Egypt and Jerusalem, the success of which has been fully proved, and the honors of which must be evenly divided between Mr. Olcott and Miss Gauntier.

MISS GENE GAUNTIER,
Leading Woman of the Gene Gauntier Feature Players.

With this notable record to their credit it would seem to be reasonably sure that the Gene Gauntier Feature Players will produce a series of pictures which will have as great a vogue as anything that has been done by them in the past.

The organization of Miss Gauntier's company has only just been completed and it is, therefore, too early to make any definite announcement of the scope of its plans. In a general way it may be said that the character of work in which Miss Gauntier has been so successful will guide her future efforts, with the exception that the scope of the work will be broader, the subjects more comprehensive and more satisfying as has been found true of most multiple-reel features. The company will work in America and abroad. Arrangement has been made to produce more pictures along the line of such as the extremely popular "The Lad from Old Ireland" and other Irish successes. Various parts of Europe will be visited as the occasion offers and every effort will be made to beautify the productions with novel settings. Miss Gauntier and her company are enthusiastic over the prospect and promise to show their friends and admirers something to talk about.

The new company is very fortunate in its selling arrangement. As also announced in our advertising pages, Warner's Features will attend to the distribution of the product. Mr. A. Warner, president of Warner's Features, has become interested in the Gene Gauntier Feature Players Company and will look after its business interests. This decision was reached by the promoters of the new company after a careful study of the situation in America, upon which it was found that Mr. Warner's connections, his standing in the trade and his plan for the distribution and sale of pictures promised the best results. It was, indeed, the possibility of making such a connection that encouraged Miss Gauntier and her friends to take the step they have, despite many flattering offers made them by other manufacturers.

While it will be a distinct disappointment to the managers and patrons of licensed theaters to learn that they are not to have Miss Gauntier and her associates with them at regular intervals, there is much satisfaction to be had in the knowledge that they promised to do even bigger things than in the past. As among the women who have gained distinction in the world of photoplayers, there is none more versatile and capable than Miss Gene Gauntier.

MOTION PICTURES IN NORTHERN MEXICO.

San Luis Potosi is the center of distribution of motion picture films to Northern Mexico. The local branch of a Mexico City house (P. Aveline & A. Delalande) receives its supply twice a week from the capital and dispatches films daily by express to points on the northern frontier and the Pacific and Gulf coasts. The San Luis Potosi distribution also extends south to Guanajuato.

Motion picture theaters are flourishing at the present time in spite of some interruptions in the schedules due to train delays. The larger cities support several enterprises of this kind, and there is scarcely a town of 5,000 inhabitants that does not maintain one, with daily changes of films. In the smaller towns of this district humorous subjects seem most popular, while in the city of San Luis Potosi views of artistic character are more desired. Recently films showing the progress of the Panama Canal work met with an excellent reception. Fleet and army movements are always popular. Presentations of operas and of well-known dramatic works are preferred above either melodrama or humorous sketches in this city.

The motion-picture theater occupies an important and serious part in public entertainments in this district. The Mexican is naturally given to graphic representations and novelty, and the price of admission to the motion-picture salon suits the purse of many people. Foreign visitors who can not speak Spanish resort to these theaters as a form of public amusement in which they can participate.

The leading motion-picture house in the city of San Luis Potosi is superior in structure and equipment to most similar enterprises in the United States and gives three "tandas" each evening, the house usually being full to its capacity of 250. The business has every appearance of being prosperous and permanent.

The Star of Bethlehem

A Three-Reel Thanhouser Subject.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

IN undertaking to film a biblical subject a producer assumes a serious obligation. He becomes in a measure the trustee of the motion picture art. It is evident that more, far more than ordinary pains must be taken to rise to the demands of such a task. A director may be able to preside over the making of a routine release, but at the same time be wholly lacking in the requirements of the higher work. It is within the bounds of the possible that an average director may produce something creditable in the filming of a sacred picture it he puts himself under expert guidance in all questions of history, atmosphere, costumes, manners, customs, etc. If he is willing and able to learn, his directing abilities may be of good use even in a purely biblical subject. Without such expert guidance however it is very clear that he is much like a ship without a rudder; he drifts but does not navigate and the chances are that he will strike the rocks of disaster with a more or less fearful impact.

The Thanhouser Company has in the past shown much of that fine skill in details, which is the one certain hall-mark of quality. In their Dickens production they established a new record in the art of filming popular and classic fiction and left every rival far behind.

Scene from "The Star of Bethlehem" (Thanhouser).

In this three reel production I have been able to discover but few and faint traces of the old skill. I fully realize that some latitude must be allowed to the producer of a sacred historical picture—if he succeeds in creating a true atmosphere and keeping within the limits of the probable, he is doing all that can under ordinary circumstances be expected of him. I do not think that the producers in this instance have succeeded in either respect. The settings have not been well chosen. This applies both to interior and exterior settings. A modern clothes rack looks out of place in the cottage of Joseph and Mary. Nothing could be more marked than the difference between our architecture and that of the East. It was therefore unwise to obtrude a particularly modern style of building in so many scenes.

There were two guides, which should have saved the producer from at least every glaring error, one was the plain text of the Bible and the other was the Christian tradition as it may be found pictured in the paintings of the masters. Every Christian painter has conceived the angel Gabriel as a messenger of cheer and consolation. To show Gabriel clad in armor and weaponed with a sword is contrary both to tradition and to common sense. A glance at any picture of the Annunciation should have prevented such a mistake. The plain text of the Bible makes the angel charged with the heavenly summons enter Mary's home; in these pictures the angel appears to Mary on the way from the wedding and in the presence of Joseph. The character of Herod is misconceived and poorly acted. Aside from the historic fact that Herod was a broken old man at the time of the birth of Christ while the pictures portray him as a man in his prime, it is entirely incorrect to show Herod listening to the wise men in full view and presence of his court. The text of Matthew expressly states, that Herod spoke to the wise men privily. The producer had a wrong idea about the significance of the census ordered by Rome. Why Herod should be distressed upon receiving notice of a census proposed by the Roman authorities is not at all clear.

Defects of this nature are most disturbing, but they are not the only nor even the worst defects. There is too much melodrama. A constant succession of prayerful and devotional poses and attitudes on the part of the actors is entirely wrong. Piety and devotion do not show themselves that way in real life. Joseph and Mary were human beings and not incarnations of cheap chromos. To be sure their conduct was characterized by a single dignity, but it was a natural, not a stilted and forced dignity.

Great liberties were taken by the director with the quotations from the text of Matthew and Luke. The words of Mary, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord," etc., were spoken in her home in Nazareth in response to the sweet and solemn greeting of Gabriel, while in the pictures they are uttered in the manger at Bethlehem apropos of nothing at all in particular. The angel who brought the glad tidings to the shepherds was a lay figure with its eyes averted from the shepherds.

Here and there, notably in the scenes at the court of Herod some managerial skill was displayed in the handling of the crowds, the photography was good and the costumes were on the whole fairly acceptable; but this must constitute the fullest measure of praise which can be conscientiously given to this production.

The producer who essays the filming of a big subject in the present state of the cinematographic art must come to the task with a complete equipment and with capable directors and capable experts. He must expect to have his productions compared with the best that has been achieved up to the present time. There must be no step backward.

NEW "PEARL WHITE" POSTER.

Miss Pearl White, the popular star of Crystal films, is being featured in one of the most beautiful posters ever made. It is the first five colored poster on an individual performer that has been made and is a credit both to Miss White and to Crystal films. This poster can be used at any and all times by exhibitors showing Crystal films and any exhibitor in the United States and Canada desiring one can have one absolutely free of charge.

Exhibitors are advised to immediately avail themselves of this opportunity to get this beautiful poster of Miss White and to send the name of their theater to the Crystal Film Company, 430 Wendover Avenue, New York City.

The Two Portraits

Two-Reel Vitagraph Photodrama by Rex Beach.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IN a summing up of merits accorded by all standards of criticism this play stands high among the year's productions and among the first best of the Vitagraph program. It is a powerful story devised by an author who knows his business and revised by some one familiar with photoplay requirements. That is the starting point of success, without which all struggle towards superior quality is as vain as it is discouraging.

Next there has been an admirable selection of types and the acting is well balanced. Most of the opportunity falls to two leading men in a violent struggle between combative characters from beginning to end, and both Roger Lytton and Earle Williams respond with a ferocity and determination so realistic that I am safe in saying that no such conflicts have ever been seen on the actual stage. All the sense of personal wrong that leads human males into combat with each other becomes swallowed up in a savagery of attack and defense that ran riot in the blood of primitive man and made him the most ferocious fighter on earth.

Masterly directing is visible throughout, and I suspect that Mr. Blackton as well as talented director Ince had a hand in it. The exteriors are a source of perpetual delight, one or two far stretches being among the most attractive I have ever seen; there are oblique views and charming interiors. I had just witnessed one of the greatest fire scenes ever exhibited on the screen and was amazed to see one equally thrilling though merely given as an obligatory part of the story.

While the plot is not entirely modern, it trembles on the edge of one of those facinating sociological problems which are beginning to engage the attention of novelists and playwrights all over the world. A man of tremendous determination undertakes to punish another who has done him an injury and it is shown that he only represents a thought that has been crystallized from untold ages of human experience —he is only a creature of circumstance.

All of us who think at all, have come to instinctively recognize that a man's fortunes, the measure of his life, and even the quality of his complicated character, result largely from exterior influences not created by him and over which he has so little control that he usually struggles in vain contention against them to the end of his days. When, therefore, he attempts to regulate the distribuion of punishment and reward according to his individual desires, irrespective of surrounding careers, he collides with that unseen and unmeasured force, the power of circumstance.

While the leading subject of this story is not modern enough to be included in the brilliant field of applied sociology, it is so highly dramatic and replete with thrilling situation that it compels interest, and the taste and consistency displayed in its exposition place it high above the nauseating abundance of "My-God!" melodrama now being shovelled out on tired audiences. The production as a whole, considering that the motif is a high one, constitutes a distinct advance in dignity over all plays of its kind.

A handsome young artist paints the portrait of a society woman and becomes so absorbed in her that he lightly regards the rights of the husband who has undertaken the responsibilities and penalties of marriage. He also fails to consider that she has been raised to a throne inviolate as the mother of a little girl. The husband resents the implied insult of the portrait painter's raw attentions and the men become involved in a quarrel which they agree to settle with a pistol duel.

The woman is at first flattered by the idea that the men are ready to fight to the death over such poor spoils as her wavering passion, but intervenes at the fatal last moment her death the course of the artist's existence is one of gradual success until he becomes famous and very much more of a man than he was in his unbaked youth. Meanwhile, the motherless little girl, an unconsidered thread in the pattern, grows up to be a lovely young lady with a weed of hate planted in the rich soil of her heart by her father—she is taught from childhood that she must avenge her mother's untimely death.

Extreme tension is set up when she goes to the artist's studio under veiled identity to have her protrait painted and lures him by every refined art known to her sex into a blind infatuation. She draws him into a maddening intimacy while compelling his entire respect, arousing his ardent desires while holding them in check by some delicate acting and fixing his attention upon a familiar strain of music, The Rosary, as a clever woman sets her personality by some subtle and individual perfume.

The artist is no longer master of himself when he follows her to her own home, her identity still undisclosed, but he hesitates on the threshold. Her social position is greater than he dreamed, as manifested in the character of the house she habits. His acquired common sense hesitates, but his native passion impels him to enter, and he accompanies her to a handsomely furnished reception-room. There he declares himself in no uncertain terms and so arouses her sentiments that she is on the verge of according him response—he has kindled a flame within her.

Her father, who has been in concealment during this scene, secretly reminds her of the purpose of what she has been doing and she flouts the man she has completely won, leaving him with only a faint show of regret as she passes out of the room. Her father now appears and gloats over the younger man's supreme humiliation, and a fierce struggle ensues with two wrongs to right instead of one. A lamp is overturned, but the men fight on amid the flames in desperation until the older one succumbs and is left in a helpless condition. There he dies, he who cried "Vengeance is mine," while the artist saves the daughter.

There is an unusual and remarkable fine termination to the photodrama which had better be left untold in what is intended to be merely an appreciative criticism, something worth the study of those who imagine they are satisfying American audiences with commonplace. Instead of letting down at the end the photodrama holds by a strange and new tension to the last moment.

NEW THEATER FOR MILES CITY, MONTANA.

As soon as the architect's plans can be drawn and the contractor's bids settled, work will commence on one of the handsomest moving picture theaters in Miles City, Montana. The architect's sketch so far shows a very elaborate front and an interior that is perfect in every detail. The seating capacity will be about 450. The name "Liberty" has been selected for the new house. The structure and equipment will represent an expenditure of almost $20,000. Mr. A. J. Merril will be the proprietor and lessee and Mr. Roy B. Gill will be the manager.

SIR THOMAS LIPTON POSES FOR SELIG.

Sir Thomas Lipton, who acknowledges he is a moving picture fan of the most pronounced type, forgot about being the world's greatest yachtsman for an hour November 27 at Pasadena, Cal., to become a central figure in a moving picture feature produced by the Selig Polyscope company.

Arrangements for Sir Thomas' appearance into the world of "movies" was made through Charles E. Hughes, a Los Angeles newspaper man who conceived the original plot. The photoplay will be entitled "Inspired by the World's Greatest Yachtsman."

The feature was taken at the beautiful grounds of a large winter hotel in Pasadena and when Mr. Hughes, accompanied by James L. McGee of the Selig company under whose general direction the picture was taken, arrived with their party, they were surprised to find that Sir Thomas had some original ideas about photoplays himself. It had been the intention of Mr. Hughes and Mr. McGee to have "Baby Lillian" Wade, who is well known to the profession, appear with a character man in that part of the feature where Sir Thomas first enters.

"Now let me offer a suggestion," said Sir Thomas, "Why not have two children in our little cast?" Mr. McGee cast his eye along the line of interested spectators but Sir Thomas was first to note a child that appealed to him. The consent of a parent who was proud to have his offspring "work" before the camera was obtained, and rehearsing was begun. Sir Thomas was careful to see that his entrance was a most effective one. He did not display the least nervousness and finally when the camera began to click seemed to greatly enjoy his role. A little yacht was used as a "prop" for "Baby Lillian" and a doll for her assistant. "Daddy" Green who had the character role was playing with the children when the great yachtsman appeared and to the delight of the camera man, Sir Thomas made his presence count in every foot of the film. The titled Britisher gladly welcomed the idea that to insure faultless camera work the role be again acted.

"A test of the film showed the photograph faultless," said Mr. McGee two days after the first work on the picture was begun. It will be rushed to completion under the immediate direction of Lem Parker and is expected to be a good foreign seller as well as a great domestic offering. Private copies will be sent to Sir Thomas Lipton and King George. The yachtsman was so delighted with his successful appearance that he sent an autographed photograph of his yacht Shamrock, to Mr. Hughes for presentation to the Selig company as a memento. It was sent to Mr. W. N. Selig for his private collection.

FOREIGN MAKERS FEW AT VIENNA.

An international "Kinematographic Exhibition" was held in Vienna, Austria, from October 18th to October 24th. The cinematographic papers report that but few foreign manufacturers exhibited or attended at the exposition, but that the general public interest was remarkably great, an admission of about fifteen cents being charged. The exhibition was visited by members of the imperial house, one of the Austrian archdukes taking his children with him to see the marvels of the cinematograph at close range. Among the exhibits shown were models of moving picture machines from the first crude attempt to the best modern types. The oldest model is scarcely twenty years old, but looks very archaic indeed alongside of the modern machine. The principal foreign exhibitors were the Gaumonts and the Pathes. The latter firm exhibited a small moving picture apparatus for household use and this machine aroused the greatest interest among the visitors to the exhibition. The novel apparatus was operated by a representative of the Pathe's and worked well. It is said that these small machines will sell at about $50 apiece and that a special and somewhat cheaper grade of films will be made for them.

Palace of Flame

Three-Reel Itala Feature.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

PROBABLY the most remarkable view of conflagration ever shown on the screen, exhibiting a palatial interior throughout a process of gradual destruction, picturing exciting incidents of rescue, this photoplay is decidedly superior to those that ordinarily portray mechanical devices of ingenuity because of fine acting and the interesting story told. It is highly dramatic without being too closely associated with the highly incredible. Its sensations are not drawn from the old box of stale tricks.

No one is run over by an automobile nor plunged into a raging torrent. No girl escapes from the clutches of the villain, and I could not see that any one of the characters exclaimed "My God!" Most melodramas are produced for the especial edification of the easily excited ash-cart driver or built to burst the bosom of Bridget Buckwheatcakes and principally concern the stage carpenter, with acting as an afterthought and appreciation of the artistic lost in the shuffle.

The story opens with a deliberate injury done to an honest manufacturer; the straight role is played by Commendatore Ermete Zacconi, called "Andrea" by a fiercely jealous rival, Evaristo. The latter instigates Tonio, professional incendiary, to set fire to Andrea's factory and writes the date of the event on his personal card. Tonio inflicts the simple injury, while Evaristo makes it more hideous by presenting evidence that Andrea committed the crime. The latter is tried and sentenced to a long term of imprisonment.

After eliminating his competitor, the jealous rival is moved by the plight of the prisoner's homeless little girl and takes her into his own household. There she grows up as his charge and, during her father's long term of imprisonment, becomes the object of ardent love on the part of Evaristo's son, a complication promising retributive justice from the outset.

Andrea escapes from prison after fifteen years of embittered existence and finds his way to a den of crooks, a wine cellar, where Tonio is the master spirit. Tonio has retained the compromising card of Evaristo and uses it at intervals to blackmail the wealthy manufacturer. The exposition now reveals more than one threatened career. The contact of Andrea with Tonio points straight to bitter if not tragic retaliation upon Evaristo with the love of the latter's son and Andrea's daughter intervening as a powerful check upon any and all schemes of vengeance.

A very natural and consistent development of the story is now followed to the end. Evaristo lives in one of those palaces that are to be found in all important Italian cities, great mansions with gates forty feet high and superb entrance halls. One of these, an important feature, is shown as the leading scene of action. There are broad staircases of marble, arched ceilings, gilded columns, ornate vases, crystal lusters and sculptured figures, the whole in finely executed design, built in this case to be destroyed by fire.

Tonio visits Evaristo to extort money by intimidation. He uses the incriminating card and agrees to sell it for a large sum of money. He acts treacherously as the exchange is about to be made, attacks Evaristo and gets away with both money and card. He returns to the wine cellar flushed with success and wine and enters upon an orgy. In a burst of drunken triumph he exhibits the cash to Andrea and the card drops to the floor as he does so. Andrea picks it up and notes the name in association with the date, the latter being that on which his factory was burned.

We are now treated to a high quality of performance, that of soul revelation, a kind that exposes the secret working of a human mind, such as made incomparable Duse a radiant evening star. Andrea gradually comes to realize that Tonio was the incendiary who destroyed his factory and his existence as well, with envious Evaristo as the arch criminal. He leaves the cellar in rage suppressed and goes to the grand palace of Evaristo. A terrible scene ensues with a strange result.

During his years of imprisonment and humiliation Andrea has come to recognize man's inability to formulate opportunity, control destiny or successfully combat the power of circumstances. He is shown his own daughter, now a sweet young girl, and Evaristo's son together in the garden planning a domestic happiness to follow their union. The wronged man's soul is torn by conflicting emotions, an inward struggle the more effective because delicately evinced, and he nobly relinquishes his own reestablishment for the sake of his daughter's happiness. He destroys the incriminating card and leaves the place in submission to the inevitable.

Tonio in the cellar is wakened from his drunken stupor by falling off his chair. He is foxy enough to make sure that he has not been robbed. He finds his cash undisturbed but the card, his only card to play against Evaristo, has been taken from him. He suspects some secret agent of Evaristo and goes to the latter's palace. He makes a vain attempt to force an entrance, then effects one through a cellar window. He comes upon a pile of combustible material, touches a match to it and escapes.

The conflagration that ensues is the high scene of the play. It is shown in various places and from different points of view, but the piece of resistance is the grand hall and marble staircase. Flames eat their way gradually in this noble structure, while Andrea, having nothing to live for, defies death in magnanimous rescue. He appears carrying his arch enemy as the stairs crumble slowly and fall into a veritable furnace beneath. The scene is thrilling and sensational on the screen and is a masterpiece of accurate timing and ingenuity.

Evaristo is so seriously injured in the end that he lies at the point of death; still Andrea preserves silence. The arch villain, in a moment of deathbed repentance, establishes the innocence and paternity of Andrea, uniting the wronged father to his daughter and righting a situation for which his uncontrolled greed was wholly responsible. The ending of the play is one of great power and unqualified moral beauty, the motive being that of heroic self-sacrice on the part of a deeply injured man, a sacrifice to the happiness of the coming generation.

Aside from the magnificent and well chosen scenic effects, spectacular in the extreme at the crisis, the acting in the leads is remarkable, that of Tonio being a marvel of truth in knavishness, and that of Andrea of high finish. Ermete Zacconi desired to have this enduring protrayal made of his art, a discovery, it is said of Eleonora Duse, in whose company he played. His performance has the rare quality of delicacy characteristic of the great Signora's art, and might be studied to advantage by other interpreters of the photo-drama as well as those who appreciate what is refined, discriminating and in the best of good taste. His acting and the splendid motive give dignity to the whole presentation.

HOW TO PUT ON THE PASSION PLAY.

The Passion Play remains one of the great moving picture classics. It is always seasonable, but at this time of the year it is in special demand. If you are about to show it in your theater you will get the benefit of years of experience by ordering the little book "How to put on the Passion Play" prepared by W. Stephen Bush and printed by the Chalmers Publishing Company. It contains valuable musical suggestions and a complete lecture for every scene. Lectures and suggestions for the proper presentation of "Dante's Inferno," and "The Crusaders" may likewise be had from the same source. Price of each book is one dollar.

"The Bridge of Sorrow" (Gaumont)

Two-Reel Special Release.

IN this State right subject portraying the evils flowing from the act of a man more concerned about getting rich than he is of the lives of human beings intrusted to his care there is one scene which stands out. It is not related directly to the drama. It is of a mountain view, a railroad running through a canyon. Scenically and photographically it is unusual. The camera is placed at the front of a rapidly moving train, but on a very steady platform.

Albert Bardon launches a new corporation. It is designed to build and equip a railroad through the Pyrenees. The crossing of a mountain stream requires the building of a great bridge. The company establishes fine offices in Paris for the purpose of stock promotion. There is the customary glowing prospectus distributed, inviting the attention of investors. Money flows in, and the railroad is built. The line is opened with a formal celebration. The venture has every prospect of being a huge success. The price of the stock bounds upward.

When everything is running smoothly and Bardon is on the high road to wealth, the station master of the bridge division sends a warning to the promoter and president of the company that a flaw has been discovered in the great structure and that there is grave danger. He recommends that traffic be stopped immediately. Bardon is in a quandary. He realizes that if there is any hitch in his train service the price of the stock will drop. His wife pleads with him to do the honorable thing—to stop everything until safety is assured. Bardon compromises by first unloading a block of stock. In the meantime he has sent word to the official in charge of the bridge that the danger is exaggerated. When his financial fences have been placed in order he sends word to stop the trains and issues a notice that the traffic on the bridge division has been temporarily stopped. The telegram reaches the station master just after a train has passed. The official rushes out, but he is too late. The bridge collapses and the train dashes to the rocks below. It is done in miniature, but the scene is effective.

Bardon in his home hears the newsboys crying the story of a great railroad horror. According to the extras there have been fifty killed and two hundred injured. Bardon goes to the offices of the company, where he finds a grief-stricken crowd clamoring for news. His wife follows to the offices, where she upbraids her husband for his criminal neglect. While she is talking, a government commission, sent to gather data in regard to the catastrophe, is waiting at the door of the president's office. The chief overhears the reproaches of the wife. On the strength of what she has said Bardon is arrested.

A year later we see the wife in plain surroundings. She has spent her fortune in an attempt to alleviate some of the sufferings of those bereaved by the disaster. Bardon is in prison. The pardon which so often is extended to men guilty of criminal negligence, to put it mildly, reaches the president of the corporation who has caused so much sorrow. He comes to the home of his wife. Through the instrumentality of the little daughter of the couple a reconciliation is effected.

A STUDIO BEAUTIFUL.

A large tract of land has been purchased by President S. S. Hutchinson for the American Film Manufacturing Company at Santa Barbara, California, and local architects are designing extensive improvements, which will be ready for Mr. Hutchinson's approval next January, when he will again visit California to supervise the improvements. The entire tract will be made beautiful and artistic. There will be nothing ramshackle about the place. Eight or ten buildings artistically grouped in settings of lawns and flower beds will constitute the studio and laboratories of the several companies now engaged in the production of the "Flying A" releases. The American Company intends to make this a model and the finest of its kind in the country, and no expense will be spared to this end.

It is understood that architectural effects will be striking. The space between the curb line and the property will be a grass plot with ornamental trees. There will be an ornamental stone and iron fence and the enclosure not occupied by the buildings will have lawns, flower beds and artistic winding walks and shrubbery. The arrangement will be such that scenes may be taken on the grounds with mountains in the distance. The company will be within a couple of miles of the wild open country required for Western and spectacular plays.

Doings at Los Angeles

Reel Club Formed at Los Angeles with More than Forty Charter Members—Other Interesting News.

FORTY-THREE men, the majority of whose names are widely known throughout the motion picture world, signed the charter which was drafted at a meeting just held in this city when the Reel Club of Los Angeles was organized. The Los Angeles club is formed along lines almost identical with those of the Screen Club of New York. Membership is to be confined to persons connected with the producing branch of the business and to writers connected with publications devoted to the industry.

The meeting, which was held in Brink's Café, was the outgrowth of a movement to form a California branch of the Screen Club, but sentiment seemed to favor a separate organization and led to the other name being adopted.

Fred Mace called the meeting to order and was later chosen as temporary chairman with every prospect that his position as president will be made permanent. George H. Melford, director of the Kalem Glendale company, consented to act as temporary secretary and Charles Giblyn was authorized to take charge of the organization's funds until permanent officers are chosen.

A commmittee appointed to take the necessary steps for a permanent organization, which includes obtaining articles of incorporation, consists of Mace, Melford, Frank E. ("Spectator") Woods, T. H. Nash, P. C. Hartigan, Frank Montgomery and Joseph DeGrasse.

Before the meeting adjourned, C. A. ("Doc") Willat, treasurer of the New York Screen Club, was given an opportunity to make a speech.

Only those who were enrolled at the first meeting will have the honor of being charter members. Additional names will have to go before a membership committee in the usual way. The full list of the charter members is as follows: Charles Avery, Russell Bassett, William Bertram, Al. E. Christie, Joseph DeGrasse William C. Dowlan, Charles Elder, Frank Ford, Arthur Forde, Tom Fortune, Charles Giblyn, P. C. Hartigan, Harry Harvey, Dell Henderson, Thomas Ince, Edgar Keller, Charles Kessel, Joseph King, David Kirkland, Harvey Leherman, Edward Lyons, Donald W. Macdonald, Fred Mace, Arthur Mackley, Ray S. Manker, George H. Melford, Frank Montgomery, Lee Moran, Lee Morris, E. L. Morrow, W. Ray Myers, T. H. Nash, Harry Otto, Henry W. Otto, P. M. Powell, Mack Sennett, J. B. Sherry, Richard Stanton, R. T. Thornby, David Wall, Raymond B. West, William E. Wing, Frank E. Woods.

Universal Celebrates.

December 3 was Universal Day in Los Angeles, when the whole town turned out to do honor to the concern which has given this city the largest motion picture plant in the world and has probably contributed more than any other single factor toward making this the largest producing center in the United States.

The occasion was the formal public opening of the Universal Company's Oak Crest studio in the San Fernando valley just outside the city limits of Los Angeles. The company kept open house all day and had sent special invitations to the governor of the state and his staff, the mayor, council and other city officials, the Chamber of Commerce and other civic organizations and to all the people connected with the various branches of the motion picture industry in this vicinity.

It was estimated that more than 3,000 persons visited the plant during the day. Business was abandoned by the Universal people and all hands participated in the entertainment of the guests of the day. It was a royal entertainment as everyone testified afterward.

According to an announcement which has been made by Wesley G. Gilmour, business manager of this section of the Universal Company, all of the Eastern companies of the Universal are to be moved to Los Angeles as rapidly as possible—within the next few months. Before next summer there will be from seventeen to twenty companies working either at Oak Crest or at the Gower Street studios which the Universal Company owns in Hollywood. Extensive enlargements are now in progress at Hollywood, and the Oak Crest studio is already so large that it astonishes visitors.

An "All-Amateur" Picture.

Just to show what a director can do when he wants to, Rollin Sturgeon, director of the Santa Monica Vitagraph company, this week produced a 1,000-foot reel without using a single real motion picture actor. The production is a comedy called "Polly at the Ranch." There are four characters in the cast not one of whom had ever appeared in a picture before in an important part. One was the property man employed at the studio. He played the male lead. Another was the stable boy, a third was a cowpuncher who is on the payroll as "scenery," and the fourth was "Polly," a small girl who lives near the studio and had importuned Sturgeon to let her be "a real actress some time." The studio run of the film showed that Sturgeon managed to evolve a cracking good comedy, fully equal to anything that is being put over by any of his competitors.

Brevities.

The omission of the name of the author of a forthcoming release of the Vitagraph, in the monthly bulletin issued by the company for December, has caused some mystification and some resentment in this city. The release is "The Hat," which was made at the Vitagraph's Santa Monica studio several weeks ago. At that time it was treated as a matter of news in this department because it was a strong dramatic story in which only a single character appeared—"The Girl," played by Miss Mary Charleson. Los Angeles felt that this unique production reflected some credit on the community for three reasons, because Miss Charleson belongs here, because it was produced here by Rollin S. Sturgeon, and because the creator of the original idea is a local newspaper man, William E. Wing. The omission of the Los Angeles man's name from the advance description of the film, which was released December 19 was particularly noticeable because the names are given in the other releases.

Los Angeles is to acquire another motion picture studio to add to its already large collection, between now and the first of the year. Stanner V. Taylor, representing the Monopol Feature Co., of New York, is here for the purpose of obtaining a location for a company and erecting the necessary buildings. The company, it is said, has definitely decided to locate here, and it only remains to pick a suitable location. Mr. Taylor is accompanied by his wife, who is an actress and is known professionally as Marion Leonard.

Sir Thomas Lipton visited Los Angeles last week and before he left was prevailed upon by Mack Sennett, of the Keystone Company, to pay a visit to the Keystone plant at Santa Monica canyon. After he had reached the studio Sennett broke it to him gently that he was to be photographed before he got away. Despite his title, Sir Tom is a good sport and a democratic chap and he stood for the hold-up without a murmur; in fact, he walked through three scenes and acted a part under Sennett's direction and then improvised a scene himself, later giving Sennett the idea for the remaining scenes of the original story. Sennett regards it as an exceptionally good stroke for the Keystone brand and Lipton probably realizes that it will be a boost for the tea.

It will probably be ancient news by the time this reaches New York, but we have just learned, through the local studio, that Lillian Russell has signed up a contract with the Kinemacolor company whereby she is coming to this city to work in a series of pictures. She will have to come here because one of the conditions she insisted on in the contract was that she should work under the direction of David Miles, who is in charge of the company's Los Angeles studio.

E. H. Allen, assistant director with Thomas Ince at the Kaybee company's Santa Monica canyon studio nearly lost his eyesight permanently when he leaned over a powder keg supposed to be empty, with a lighted cigar in his lips. There was about five pounds of giant powder in the bottom and a spark dropped into it, blowing the blast into Allen's face. Fortunately he closed his eyes in the nick of time, and the burns were less serious than painful.

William Paley, the former Nestor camera man, who is an invalid as a result of of a fall and a subsequent infection, is still a patient in the Columbia hospital in this city. Fred Mace and members of the Masonic Order have been looking after him, but he is in hard circumstances and is facing a gloomy future. He is advanced in years and will probably never recover his full powers. Rather substantial checks have come to Mace from The Moving Picture World and Nicholas Power, and a few smaller checks have been received from a few of his many friends scattered all over the country, but the total fund is not sufficient to provide for his immediate needs and Mace is planning to make an appeal to the motion picture people of the United States for financial assistance.

OBSERVATIONS
BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

LIKE a clap of thunder from a clear sky a crusade has been launched by the police authorities against a certain class of motion picture houses in this city. The hand of the law has fallen upon certain exhibitors, who have evidently ignored the pleadings, advice and warnings in these columns, as well as the admonitions of their fellow exhibitors and of the authorities. Complaints have been made by exhibitors of the stringencies of certain laws, and the evils perpetrated under them and time and again this publication, through these columns and others, have made pleas in their behalf for fair treatment. But it seems this was wasted time and labor, so far as it applied to certain exhibitors. The developments of the past week make this quite apparent. Some people who have been pleading for protection and complaining of persecution, it seems, have been dwelling in open defiance of the law.

Several arrests have been made in the Brooklyn district for violations of the law. Whether or not they were justifiable is not to be determined here. The cases are before the courts. Thus far all the arrests made have been for violation of the law prohibiting the admission of children under sixteen years of age to picture shows, unless they are accompanied by parents or guardians. Many arrests of like character have been made heretofore, and the accused exhibitors have come forward with the statement that they were innocently led into the violations by children misrepresenting their ages, or by some adult serving as a guardian merely for the purpose of gratifying the desires of the children, although entire strangers to them, and leaving them without guardianship after getting into the houses. In some cases of the past, the managers have succeeded in proving they were imposed upon. In others, the courts have imposed penalties. The cases now before the courts seem to be quite different from previous prosecutions. The spontaneous discoveries and arrests that characterized the latter do not seem to attach to the former. In other words, it seems that the authorities have not acted upon what they accidentally discovered, but upon conditions they had been informed of and went out to confirm. Most of the previous arrests were made by agents of the societies for the protection of children. This time they were made by detectives of the regular police department. One detective charges that he saw tickets sold to and accepted from a boy who looked to be no more than twelve years old and who was accompanied by a girl of ten. At another place the same detective on the same day saw tickets sold to a boy and girl, each said to be fourteen years old. And at a third place he saw a boy of fourteen and a girl of ten buy tickets. The ticket sellers and takers at each place were arrested and paroled for examination. It is a pretty close call between the ages of 14 and 16 years and when the cases are taken up it may be shown that the detective made the very natural mistake of underestimating the ages of some of the children; but when it is a matter of twelve years and under, the cases take on a more serious aspect. The stretch is is a little too much.

There is one aspect of the crusade that indicates the press has at last become disposed to limit its exposures and attacks to picture houses they believe are violating the law, and not make a blanket charge, by which the public may become influenced against the exhibitors who are obeying it. There is an indication that the press is learning more of and being brought closer to the motion picture business in a favorable spirit, and in the near future its representatives will mingle with and treat the people engaged in it with the same spirit of fairness and geniality that they accord those engaged in other lines of legitimate amusements. In starting the crusade the names and street numbers of the picture houses were given, and details of the violations stated quite clearly. The charges made were that children under the legal age were freely admitted and the films shown were of improper character. One article referred to about a dozen places located in Manhattan. Irrespective of what merit there may be in the charges, the press is to be commended for abandoning the former method of getting attacks before the public. The press has never been condemned for its attacks upon motion pictures and the houses in which they are produced. Issue has only been taken with them because they have heretofore shown no inclination to discriminate between guilty parties and the law-abiding and legitimate exhibitors. The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is in hearty accord with the press and authorities in anything they may do to clear the field of that which should not exist, raise the standard of motion pictures and make stronger the confidence and admiration of the public in and for them. To this point nothing is more timely than the sentiments expressed by Mr. M. A. Neff, the president of the national body, when in a recent address in Boston he said: "Organize and co-operate, that you may assist in eliminating the undesirable conditions which have crept into the motion picture business. We have been unjustly criticised by those who know the least about our business and are least qualified to censure or condemn. . . . Eliminate suggestive and immoral pictures. Bring about a healthy, clean condition."

It is also gratifying to note the stand the courts have taken on motion pictures and their places of exhibition in connection with the present crusade. More than once exception has been taken in these columns to statements of sweeping character from the bench. They seemed to go hand in hand with the policy of the press at the time and called for pleas for discrimination and fair play, that the innocent and law-abiding exhibitors might not be injured in their business and the skeptical might not be improperly supplied with ammunition with which to continue or renew unauthorized and unreasonable attacks. Justice John B. Mayo, of the Court of Special Sessions, now sitting in the Children's Court, is strong in his condemnation of "bad films." He says lurid, sensational stuff in some of the picture houses is leading hundreds of children astray, but good films in houses properly conducted have a splendid mission. "They can get pictures of that character without difficulty," the Justice is quoted as saying. He adds, in an interview with an Evening World reporter, "Until we banish the bad films from the shows, the only way to meet the situation is by enforcing the law prohibiting children under sixteen from being admitted unless accompanied by parents or guardians. This law is being violated constantly. Some of the places adhere to it, others pretend to, but many fail even to make a pretense."

Reading between the lines one can see that the municipal authorities are pretty well in touch with the situation and that the present crusade is not a spontaneous one. Justice Mayo's statements are given additional force by another official, whose name is withheld for the reason that his statement was not given out officially. He was applied to for information by a well-known exhibitor who, when he heard of the arrests, wanted to know where he stood. He said: "I am conducting my theater in compliance with the law, but I realize that at some time or another I may be imposed upon, or through some mistake I may be drawn innocently into a violation with respect to the admission of children. Is there any suggestion that can be given me with regard to this? I would like to find out now and not get it after my people, or myself, get arrested."

The official replied: "There is no suggestion only that the law be complied with. I will volunteer this. Neither the authorities nor the courts will be technical in the matter and any exhibitor who is doing his best to conduct his place as he is expected and required to do need have no apprehension. Yes, this crusade is on for results. The law regarding children is to be strictly enforced and the film question will be taken up later. In what form I do not know at the present time. Of one thing you may rest assured, the action of the children's law is only a forerunner of a more important step. In the present arrests, unfortunately, the employes are the victims because they have done the actual selling and taking of tickets. When the film end is taken, I presume, the exhibitors will be proceeded against."

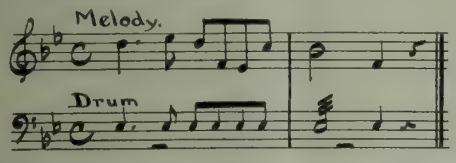
In further conversation the official was told by the exhibitor that it was a difficult matter for exhibitors to tell just what film subjects might be considered objectionable by the authorities and that in most instances they are obliged to take what the exchanges offer them. To this the official replied: "That matter will be adjusted in time. The complaint now is against lurid, sensational films, as Justice Mayo has put it. You may not know, but the authorities do, and have evidence to show that many of the pictures complained of are not censored."

Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E. SINN

Tips on Improvising.

MISS T. R. W. wants to know what I mean by writing a "figure" in several different forms (melodies), and saying the figure can be written for a drum as well as any other instrument. The article in question, said a musical figure, is the form or shape of a phrase; not the melodic form, but the rhythmetical; three different melodies were given on one figure, and three on another to illustrate. Possibly this illustration will make it plainer:



The figure in the drum part is the same as in the melody—a dotted quarter and an eighth note, then a group of four eighth notes in the first measure. A half and a quarter note and a quarter rest in the second measure.

For the benefit of Miss T. R. W. and others I will say that "Tips on Improvising" was begun in the issue September 28, 1912, of the Moving Picture World.

These opening letters are not to be construed as harmony lessons. It is necessary to use a few technical terms and explain something of the nature of chord construction and progression to make intelligible what is to follow. These things can not be learned by simply reading of them. You must practice them. You must write them down and play them and memorize them so that the chord inversions and chord progressions (at least the few given here) will become almost second nature. Rhythmic form and melodic form as well as modulation are important to improvisors.

The following is from Frank W. Ryan, A. B., Lawrence, Kan., and is entitled "The Basic Principles of Picture Playing":

"The writer has read a number of articles in the Moving Picture World under the heading, "Music for the Picture," and herewith offers a few of his ideas gathered from a wide experience not only in picture shows, but as pianist in vaudeville and with stock companies.

"1.—There can be no definite fixed rules for playing, as one pianist may find utterly impracticable the ideas of another. There is one fundamental principal which is always effective; be original. Every pianist in this town plays either the 'Tanhauser' or 'Lohengrin' wedding march at all marriage occasions. I don't. I play something different."

"2.—Be able to change keys intelligently. There is in most cases no necessity for a series of diminished 7ths and 'barber shop' chords in order to change key; let your ear be the judge. It often sounds best to change abruptly than to wander off into an aimless maze of modulation. It is like a man trying to think of a good excuse to say something instead of coming to the point.

"3.—Be able to memorize. No one should try to play for pictures unless well prepared with a big repertoire of music committed to memory. Make it a point to learn several pieces each week.

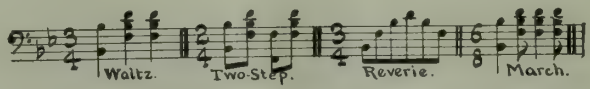
"4.—Plan your work. Get a small card and write down the list of pieces you are going to play for your program; this teaches system and fixes the plan in your mind.

"5.—Master the principals of melodic expression. Regardless of all that has been said on the subject of harmony and counterpoint, melody is the main thing; one kind of melody expresses one idea, and another a different one.

"6.—Familiarize yourself with the rules of chord successions. Most players know this intuitively. Common sense is the best guide.

"7.—Make the work seem easy; it really is easy. There is nothing mysterious about improvising and modulating.

"8.—Be able to play a given melody in several different kinds of rhythm. Here are examples of some of the different rhythms:



As the chords are the same in each measure, the same melody can be changed to suit each.

"9.—Play the kind of music your audience likes to hear.

"10.—Take a real interest in your work. Make your task a pleasure. Play the picture just as if it were your own show. Always do your best.

"11.—Compose a few pieces of your own and write them down. It may be difficult at first, but it will soon come easy and with a little practice you can improvise.

"12.—Take a day off and go hear some one else play for the picture; you will thus gain some valuable ideas and learn some of your own weak points.

"In conclusion it might be well to say that although picture playing is not very well paid, it has always been a pleasure to me; each picture presents a new fascination in working out a proper accompaniment. In my case the work is only a stepping stone to higher things."—Frank W. Ryan.

These may be "basic principles," though I think they would be better described as "hints" or "opinions." I don't get your first proposition, though. I believe if ideas are practical at all, they are practical to all. They may be distatseful to some, but hardly impractical.

Suggestions for music to the Cines two-reel picture: "AT NAPOLEON'S COMMAND."

First Reel.

1. "Heartsease," (Moret), two scenes; soldiers seen deploying through woods, change to light march tempo crescendo until: "Two Years Elapse."
2. March (camp scene), when she enters.
3. "Partant pour la Syrie" (old French song), until title: "She Tells Andre of Her Past Life, etc."
4. Second number ("Perfume") from suite "My Lady's Boudoir," by L. L. Moore (Witmark), until title: "Andre's Mother Warmly Welcomes, etc."
5. First number from same suite ("Chiffon") until: "Four Years Later."
6. Third number ("High Heels and Buckles") from same suite until: "The Emperor at Fontainbleau."
7. March (3 scenes), until title: "The Evening of the Introduction."
8. Gavotte, until title: "The Emperor."
9. Marseilles. Begin softly, crescendo at his entrance and diminish at his exit; change back to gavotte until: "Juliette Recognizes in Marshall Vidar, etc."
10. Agitato till end of reel.

Second Reel.

1. "Under The Harvest Moon" (Witmark), 3 scenes; then:
2. Soft march until title: "The Challenge."
3. Semi-mysterious—martial suggestion; the introduction to Suppe's overture, "Pique Dame," is on that order. Moniuszko's overture "Halka" offers a fine theme for these scenes. Begin at poco piu mosso (after first 12 measures) and play as far as un poco piu lento (4 bars before agitato) and keep repeating until title: "I Am the Best Judge."
4. Here you may accent the march swing of the number or change to march—piano; not too pronounced as the situations are now bordering on the Agitato order. "The Eve of Battle."
5. "Partant pour la Syria," with march effect in accompaniment, softly until title: "Visions of Glory."
6. Marseilles—very softly, and crescendo for changes, until the Emperor and staff seen on horses.
7. Hurry p. and f. (for battle) at title: "Salute of the Colors" fortissimo until title: "Juliette Searches for Her Husband."
8. Plaintive music until: "Long Live the Emperor."
9. Marseilles, very soft; try and give it a plaintive effect.

The Moving Picture Educator

CARELESSNESS.

Because we must believe that film makers are educated people, this note is headed carelessness, instead of ignorance.

In the course of but three pictures the writer noticed the following unpardonable errors, in sub-titles: In one the word poisoned was spelled "poisened," the letter e seeming so peculiarly conspicuous as to call everyone's attention to its unlawful use. In the next instance, "Springtime Come Again," appeared, instead of "Springtime Came Again"; there are some uncultured people who have a habit of saying "come" for "came," but when it is remembered that the films are privately censored in every good factory before being released, these errors are so glaring as to call for special attention. If the errors were discovered and set forth with a "let them go, no one will find them out" idea, such a course is an insult to an educated public, especially hurtful to young children. It is difficult to work for educational cinematography when photoplays go forth with such conspicuously placed evidences of need to "begin at home"; when a teacher is ignorant or careless, the fault increases in the scholar. It may be well at this point to say that errors in sub-titles are common, especially when translated from the French, German or Italian, the words chosen being too often crude and unexpressive, may this criticism prove timely and efficacious. This same carelessness or indifference to details also appears too often in the dress and appearance in actors, in the everyday picture. In a recent Irish picture the Irish woman living in semi-poverty, because of a drunken husband, is clad in rough and somewhat ragged garments, and with dishevelled hair, etc.; but, also, wearing a pair of fashionable high-heeled patent leather oxford ties, and apparently silk stockings with underskirts showing below the ragged dress of first class texture. In a coal mine scene a man has been imprisoned some forty-eight hours, he is in agony, and writhing in torture, his scanty clothes torn, his face, arms and hands, begrimed with coal dust and sweat; a perfect picture equal to the occasion, only that his hair is as smooth and unruffled as if in a ballroom, perfectly parted down the middle, carefully brushed down on each side, not a hair out of place, it was really so apparent that many laughed outright; such half make-ups are so ridiculous that they destroy all expected realism in the picture. A modern pulley-suspended barn door appeared on an old Spanish stable, advertising its out-of-placeness, in a very marked manner. Will all interested please take note that moving pictures are now in an educational sphere and carelessness will not be tolerated any more than ignorance.

EDUCATING THE EDUCATED.

What One Exhibitor Did.

The exhibitor who recently sent to a minister in his town who opposed the pictures a whole lot of copies of the Moving Picture World, with the religious and educational features marked, did a wise thing. Ignorance is lack of knowledge, and is pardonable only when the true enlightenment is not forthcoming. When, however, the light is given, to remain still in the same attitude as before is a crime against reason.

Happily in this instance the exhibitor not only disarmed his opponent but supplied him with better weapons of warfare against the very foe of injustice he had previously been blind to. While we commend this exhibitor, our commendation must be congratulatory upon his following out the very course laid down on this page. From time to time exhibitors have been advised to pass on their trade papers to others with emphasis on its educational features; in this case that advice was followed, both in spirit and letter, with the result predicted.

Educated people are the most readily convinced, when a right and proper proposition is placed before them; the very status of the moving picture to-day proves this. If in the realm of "campaign work" the Moving Picture World has had any ambitions, it has been in a "Campaign of Education" and to-day takes great pleasure in the results obtained.

It would be easy for the doings of this particular exhibitor to be followed a thousand times, (even then only one in some fifty or perhaps a hundred exhibitors would be thus engaged) with equally successful results. Often our best friends are our converted enemies, their whole viewpoint being changed, they see as we see, and often also, become more ardent than we ourselves originally were. Ministers and other educated people are ready and waiting to see and help along everything that helps all classes, and the more they can be told of the good features of the moving picture, the more loyal will be their support.

THE CINEMATOGRAPH IN SURGERY.

To chronicle anything concerning the great and helpful powers of the cinematograph is no longer astonishing. Some time ago there was in session in New York City the Clinical Congress of Surgeons of North America. Their discussions on the ability and powers of modern surgery were indeed wonderful. Perhaps the most important member of the Congress was Dr. Alexis Carrel, this year's winner of the Nobel Prize for surgery.

In the interest of surgery and for the benefit of the many surgeons assembled, many important and unusual operations were performed. The one demanding most attention was that by Dr. Carrel in the most unusual and extraordinary operation known as coupling blood vessels.

As it was found impossible to admit but a small fraction of the doctors present to witness the operation, the cinematograph was requisitioned and pictures taken of this most wonderful surgical work. Afterward, in moving pictures, the whole details were reproduced upon the screen before the assembled congress. Further than this, by aid of these films, this same operation can now, and forthwith, be shown in all hospitals and medical colleges where this most advanced surgery may be instantly learned. The great benefit to the medical profession throughout the world is only a part of the good acquired by these pictures.

Suffering humanity is immediately helped, the work of this great surgeon becomes at once beneficial to the entire world, crowding the advantages of years within the power of days. It seems impossible to conceive anything more wonderful than this instantaneous auxiliary to science which the moving picture has again proved itself to be, taking any occasion, even of the most minute and complex, magnifying it and making it immediately known and helpful to the whole world.

PROF. CARL HOLLIDAY WITH GAUMONT.

That men of higher education are finding field for their culture in the motion picture industry is evidenced by the engagement by the Gaumont Company of Carl Holliday, B. S., M. A. He now fills the newly created office of Director of its Educational Department. This department will do business with schools, elementary and advanced, churches, etc. The subjects included will be Applied Science, Botany, Geography (both physical and industrial), Zoology, History, the Industrial World, Travel, Architecture, Agriculture, Horticulture and Biblical and other religious subjects.

Mr. Holliday, who is a brother of Frank E. Holliday, Managing Editor of the Gaumont Weekly, is well equipped intellectually for his duties. Who's Who for 1912 tells of his having studied at the Universities of Tennessee, Virginia and Chicago, of his professorship of the English Language and English Literature in the University of Virginia, Southwestern University and Vanderbilt University. He is the author of ten books on literary, historical and sociological subjects. McClure's, Leslie's, Smart Set, Uncle Remus, American Educational Review, the Book News Monthly and numerous other magazines and newspapers have published his many writings.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A Busy Night.

THE Arcade Theater, Tientsin, bunches its hits at times and lately had "Attacked by a Lion" and "The Trainer," the first showing a fight between a man and a lion and the latter a fight witn a tiger. It is worthy of note, by the way, that the Gaumont "Attacked by a Lion" runs 1,370 feet, though we could get but a thousand feet over here.

The Arcade celebrated its third anniversary September 27th, when the full band of the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers supplied a special musical program. In a card the theater calls attention to the difficulty it labors under, being situated out of the beaten path of travel and catering to the small European population, but announces that it has arranged for 30,000 feet of film each month with a due proportion of features. It is the only theater in North China to hold its own, and we think that its lavish advertising is largely responsible for this result.

Plenty of Paper.

The Berkeley Theater, Berkeley, California, can take fourteen one-sheets, two three-sheets and a six or eight-sheet and yet have the lobby absolutely clear of frames, as the accompanying picture will show. The house is a part of the Turner and Dahnken circuit and is specially built for photoplay display, seating about 1,000 and needing the capacity. G. E. Thornton sends in some late programs which depart from the usual in that the inside of the four-pager is given over to the features while the back page gives the weekly program by days, four reels of Licensed subjects being used. The text is well and brightly written, but the typographical display might be bettered. A lighter line body type should be used and more attractive faces could be had for the display lines. A heavy monotone is all right for the calendar, but for the description it is too black and is apt to tire the eyes. Brief chats with the players, not credited to the Motion Picture Story Magazine, as is proper, and other gossipy matter where space affords, helps the interest getting.

Changed Lids.

Carey Wilson, of the Criterion Theater, Rutherford, New Jersey, who used to wear the funniest fuzzy hat in the photoplay business, has gone over to silk hats, but not because he got mixed up with the motion picture end of the Wilson campaign. But better news than that is that they have cut out vaudeville at the Criterion and are doing better with straight pictures. They used a rather good grade of vaudeville at that, but not good enough to go with the photoplays they got, so they cut out the song and dance stuff and put the money into the big reels. They broke records with "As You Like It" and "Monte Cristo," and have the Bernhardt "Queen Elizabeth" booked. An election show at increased prices made a hit and some money with all seats reserved.

Captain, Cook and Crew.

S. E. Wall, of West Jefferson, Ohio, has been putting the town on the map. Outside of the town limits it was known mostly to railroad people and postal clerks, but Mr. Wall saw a chance to start something and he not only started it but did most of the finishing. He can tell it better than we can, so we give him the floor. He writes:

> I am sending you herewith some information that may be of interest to small town managers.
> West Jefferson is a village of 1,200, located 15 miles from Columbus. I run three nights a week, seating 485 in the opera house; use Independent service. Quite recently a Columbus photographer purchased a moving picture camera and then I got busy. I had a talk with him and we came to an agreement and then I began booming "moving picture day" for West Jefferson, ran ads in the local paper, and in the three London, Ohio, papers and got some good write-ups among the news items in the Columbus papers, got out some big scarehead bills announcing pony races, chasing greased pig, foot races, etc., all to be taken in moving pictures.
> About this time the business men began to sit up and take notice. I called on each merchant in town, about 35 of them, and explained the proposition and asked them if they were willing to put their shoulder to the wheel to the extent of a couple of dollars each toward providing entertainment for the crowds I expected to pull into town on this day; the balance of the subscription to go toward paying for the film, which I explained was very expensive. The result was rather indifferent. The merchants had never attempted anything in the way of a street carnival and were rather dubious of the success of the project owing to the smallness of the town. After another canvass of the town I got their promise to attend a meeting that night in the mayor's office for the purpose of going over the situation with me, and at the time set for the meeting six of them had responded, the balance of them were conspicuous by their absence; the few of us who were there got together and appointed committees to look after the different events, appointing, of course, many of the absent ones. I continued to boom the big day in the press, on the curtain and on the street and when the Big Day did arrive it found more people in West Jefferson than had ever been there before at any one time. The streets were crowded, but the committees had failed me dismally —probably having never heard the old adage "never put off till to-morrow, etc." They did put it off and when the to-morrow came with its big crowds, the committeemen being mostly storekeepers were busy waiting on increased trade and had no time to bother with greased pigs or foot races. When I arrived at noon (I live in Columbus), I found nothing done. It was up to me to make good all that I had promised the people—while the camera men were getting street scenes I was mustering up a bunch of school children to get their pictures in the fire drill out of the school building and while that was going on I was forming an automobile parade. During the automobile parade I was getting the pony race ready, also the bicycle and foot races, and while the camera was working on these events I had a man preparing a greased pole for the boys to climb to get a bright shiny dollar placed thereon. The greased pig was the only event that failed to materialize but everybody had been entertained and were more than satisfied and felt well repaid for their journey to W. Jefferson to see the moving picture camera.
> When it came to collecting the subscriptions, the merchants were in some few cases like they were as committeemen—nothing doing, but I didn't care for that for the following Saturday I showed the pictures and that's where I got mine. I broke all records, cleared a nice piece of money and everyone thought it was the greatest thing that ever happened to the town, and if I did have to hustle some, I feel that my efforts were not in vain for it was an event that got the town and incidentally the theater, talked about all over central Ohio. As a means of putting a small town and theater on the map and drawing big crowds I think local moving pictures are way ahead of anything else. But if any of you try it don't depend too much on the average small town business man. If you do you will find yourself mustering up the street fair single-handed in about two hours' time.

Getting It Back.

It's tough to start something for the general good and then be left to handle a big job all alone, but we think that Mr. Wall will not have reason to regret all his hustle. The fact that the others failed and he put the matter through single-handed counts for much in a small town where everyone knows all that is going on, anl the generalship that wrested success from defeat will react in favor of the house and the management. No matter whether the town be one of 1,200 or 12,000 the man who does things wins respect and it's worth the hard work to be identified as a hustler.

In the Editorials.

Time was when the only editorials the motion pictures ever drew were denunciations. Here's a part of an editorial from the Ridgewood, New Jersey, Herald:

INFLUENCE OF MOVING PICTURES.

> There have been a good many persons in Ridgewood who have opposed any plan to have a permanent moving picture place in this Village. They have honestly felt that the influence might be bad. They were doubtless influenced by the fact that there have been, in the past, many exhibitions of moving pictures that should not have been shown. Our Village Trustees and Commissioners have recognized this feeling and have refused each application for a permit to establish a moving picture theater here.
> But the efforts made by the Ridgewood Amusement Company to give high-class "movies" at the Opera House, and the present exhibitions given by Manager Woodend are proving that our people will patronize such exhibitions. This is not surprising, for the influence of the exhibitions is good.
> It would be difficult to over-estimate the educational influence upon old as well as young of that remarkable production, "Columbus Discovering America." Looking at these pictures, it was difficult to realize that they were not scenes of actual, moving life. Columbus was exactly as our fancy, helped out by ancient and modern artists, had pictured him, and there was not a person in the house who did not follow his fortunes with breathless interest. We venture to say that to everyone who saw those pictures on Saturday, the "Discovery of America" has become a living, palpitating fact, rather than a bit of dry history.

See If You Can Do It.

There follows nearly half a column more dealing with the effect of the pictures on the saloon business, no doubt the inspiration being inspired by Mr. Woodend. If you run the right sort of a house in a small town, you can get the same sort of editorial mention. Why not try for it? Show the editor some of the big things that have been done. Get him to become a regular and you can get better advertising than you could buy if you took whole pages. Sometimes we wonder if exhibitors realize that the best advertising doesn't have to be paid for in money. It takes a little time to work up and time, of course, is money, but if you have more time than money, spend some of it for advertising. It's worth the trouble and it's not as hard as you think it is. Try and send in the result.

By One Who Knows.

The advertising is laid out by someone who knows the business. Cuts are freely used, both portrait and scene cuts being employed, there is a balance between the large and small type and the matter is attractively written. It is not a matter of space alone that makes advertising. A good man can do more with four inches than another can with forty, but given both space and matter, the advertising is bound to draw.

Advertising space costs too much money to waste on poor construction. Make your catchlines telling, pull up the titles where they can be seen, emphasize the big points, and tell just enough of the story to bring the people to the theater to get the rest. Find out about the big points, the special features of the release and boom these up. If wild animals are used tell about them. Four thousand inches a year is a lot of space for a five cent house to use, but it must pay because the space is not wasted.

Makes Its Own Pictures.

Quimby and Quimby, of the Casino Theater, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, send a photograph of a prairie schooner which they use in advertising Western releases with good results. They write that they use the Universal service, taking first run on the Animated Weekly and supplementing this with their own pictures of local events. They write that they have made pictures of fire department practice, the Tillicum Club in its new home, the parade opening the Kootenai Fair and other local events. The camera, printer and darkroom equipment were made by their operator, Friend F. Baker and negative and positives are developed and finished right in the theater instead of being sent East to some company. This avoids delay and enables prompt showing of the subject. The local film is called the Casino Baby and the slogan is "Watch it grow." A local film in a town of 7,500 people is evidence of hustle all out of proportion to the population. We think Mr. Richardson would be interested in a photograph and description of the equipment if Mr. Baker will be good enough to go to that trouble. He's always strong for anything that booms the operator and this is no small achievement.

To further show their hustle the managers add that they believe in the topical and educational pictures if properly advertised.

Shaken, But Game.

There have been politics and in plenty up in Exeter, New Hampshire, where J. C. Rathbone, of the Exeter Opera House holds forth. But you can't keep the hustler down and Mr. Rathbone is one of the best hustlers we know. He writes:

> Am sending the enclosed just to let you know that Exeter is still on the map though badly shaken, politically speaking. We sure had a tough time here and the poor picture shop was almost annihilated along with the G. O. P., so much red fire and heated air there were. This town was the bone of contention. It was Rally, Rally, everywhere but not at the Opera House. In self-defence, we resorted to Features—all we could get and made as much noise as possible; plenty of billboard work, as high as 150 sheets in some cases followed up by screen, window work, newspapers and heralds. The specials themselves were only worth the extra money demanded because they gave one this opportunity to do some real advertising and our business easily doubled by their use over ordinary nights. You will observe we are breaking them gently into an advanced rate and it works well and at the same time hurts no one's feelings.

Baseball Talk.

It's a pity we cannot give all of the samples, for they are breezy and effective. This baseball slip, given out about the time of the World's Series, is out of date for another season, but it's worth remembering. As a change from the more formal announcement it is of value, and it is live without being too slangy:

WORLD SERIES CHAMPIONSHIP
Feature Picture Program
TO-NIGHT

That is about as good a term as we can adequately describe to-night's program at the

EXETER OPERA HOUSE and do its merits full justice

Monday, October 14, 1912
HERE'S THE BATTING ORDER

THE GIRL WITH THE LANTERN. Selig.
A railroad story that will keep the fans in fever heat (a hard hitter, average about 900).

WHEN A MAN'S MARRIED. Essanay.
Always good for a home run.

A TRAGEDY OF THE DESERT. Special Kalem feature, two reels.
No World Series program would be complete unless these great International producers were presented. We look for some clever work in this double header to-night, and baseball grammar hardly suits. Gene Gauntier and Jack Clark make a strong battery and the team work throughout is "some class." "THE SUBSTITUTE" gets into the game at the last minute and will spring a surprise as is often the case.

Raising the Price.

The house has been a five cent theater and in raising the price the admission for the first few features was placed at the old sum with an additional fee for reserved seats. Then the reserved seat scheme was dropped and the entire house made ten cents for the features. We hope that Mr. Rathbone keeps the price up.

He took advantage of the fact that Martin Chuzzlewit was released in England in advance of the American release to copy in his advertising the comments of the English press, at the same time laying stress upon the fact that the subject was prepared for the Dickens Centenary. It makes the picture no better, but it assuredly does increase the interest.

How's this for one announcement: "The Orleans Coach," "Tragedy of the Desert," "Martin Chuzzlewit," "Coming of Columbus, "A Nation's Peril" and "The French Spy"? Going some for a town like Exeter. They were run between October 10th and November 29th, to say nothing of the Pathe baseball release and "The Lady of the Lake."

The point is that Mr. Rathbone got caught in the whirlpool of politics and instead of laying down and putting up his feet to have his legs tied, he let out a bigger roar than the Bull Moose or the old reliables and got the people in anyhow. He simply refused to be licked—and so he wasn't. It's easy enough to fight if you have the nerve and once you take the plunge you'll be surprised at the nerve you'll develop.

Made Election Pay.

Geddes and McLaren, who operate the Sylvan and Princess Theaters, Chelsea, Mich., decided to make a little money out of the election. The ticket of which they speak was printed with a line for the holder's name and was not transferable. But their letter best speaks for itself. They explain:

> I am enclosing an "Election Night Special" ticket; which scheme we used to advantage. The ticket will explain itself. An ordinary night's business in our house runs about $15, and this stunt brought us $50, so we think it's not so bad. We run ordinarily a ten cent show, but we charged a quarter on Election night, smoking was permitted after 9 o'clock; strictly a stag affair. We sold out our seating capacity before 7 o'clock and got a lot of men in who never came before. Our special wires cost about $10, so we figure that we came out $25 to the good. During the time the returns were slow in coming in, between reels we called on several in the crowd for songs and when 1 o'clock came 200 went home feeling that they had spent a good election night, even though the result was not to their liking. We feel confident that we have made a lot of good patrons as well as a little extra money, by the use of this scheme.

That extra $25 was good money, but the best part of the scheme was that two hundred men went away with the feeling that they had had a perfectly good time and they went home sober, which probably influenced their wives in favor of the picture show as well. Perhaps you can use some modification of the scheme for a special New Year's Eve celebration. If you get one of those slides with a clock hand and flash it on the screen just before twelve, moving the hand if possible or else holding it back until the exact stroke, you can get a good effect, particularly if the orchestra is on the job. In many places smoking will not be permitted in a picture theater, but that is merely a side issue. For the holidays let them all come and fix up a better-than-usual program.

The Detective Story.

There is a certain demand for the detective story, but the detective story is not easy to write and unless you can write a good one there is no use in writing one at all. The trouble with the detective story is that as a rule the processes of detection are mental rather than visual. The deductions that lend interest to the fiction story cannot be produced in action on the screen and there is left what may be termed the physical detective story in which the processes of detection may be determined with reasonable clearness in action. Moreover the detective story differs from most others in that the audience should be kept in the dark as to the real culprit until the last few scenes. It is better, even, to throw suspicion on some other person and leave the audience in doubt until a sudden turn of events enables the detective to clear the suspected person and indicate the guilty one in the same action.

All of this involves a nicety of construction that is beyond the powers of the average writer. It calls for an intricate planning, an exact control of events that brings the double denouement at the proper moment, the preceding events being so planned as to make the revelation clear while the audience is kept in doubt as to the real criminal. More than this the story must be written with due regard for the rules of the censor board in the matter of crime. All told the detective story is a good thing to keep away from unless you have a special gift for this sort of thing.

He Knows Better.

Recently we commented upon a letter we had received which led us to believe that the writer destroyed such scripts as were not found salable. We suggested that they be held to be worked over at some future time. It seems that we read a wrong meaning into the letter for now comes a protest which runs:

> I have been puzzling ever since I read your caption to my letter how it was I gave you the impression I destroyed manuscripts. I have never done such a thing, and am too old a literary man (as well as being a minister), to ever destroy anything I have written. No matter how poor it may be everything written has the germ of an idea or it would not have been written. That germ may prove useful some day and he would be a sorry man who had thrown away labor.

Never throw away an idea whether it is a full plot or merely a situation or bit of action. You never can tell when you'll need it and more than once the ugly duckling has turned out a swan. Keep everything and you'll be able to use it some time.

Here's a Wrinkle.

Here's a new one on us and perhaps it will be new to you. It comes from Steve Talbot; the man who can't seem to put heroines into his photoplays. The beauty of the scheme is that you keep your good ribbon fresh for scripts and do not beat it all out in practice work. A nice, clean impression from a new ribbon counts for much in the appearance and in this way you can keep your good ribbon for your good work. We do not like the idea of a copy ribbon for the completed script. Record ribbons and black record ribbons alone should be used for work that goes out. The copying ribbon is all very well for home work because it lasts much longer, and a purple ribbon will stand two or three times the work a black will, but the appearance of your script is more important than the fractional part of the saving of a copy over a record ribbon, so use the black record for finished work, no matter what your practice ribbon may be.

Here's the Talbot scheme. His letter ran suddenly from black to purple and he wrote:

> Just ran into my "practice" ribbon, which reminds me that the wrinkle may be a new one. I submit it anyway for what it's worth: I always have two ribbons on the machine, a strong blue (have found blues or purples much stronger than black copy), and a black copy. I put the black on the right hand spool, and pin the free end to the end of the blue, which I wind on the left hand spool. Then when I am drafting a plot, or mapping out my scenes, characters, etc., I use the blue, letting it wind onto the right hand spool as I use it. When I am ready to make the final copy for the editor, I wind up my blue ribbon, and have a new, clear black to do it with. I have written five complete scenarios with the black I have on now, and several letters, and almost half the length of it is untouched. The blue has been on about three months and has been written over from end to end, probably a dozen times. You see it is still in condition to give me a clear copy to work over, or revise, but hardly good enough to submit.

Revising Scripts.

"What is the best way to revise a script?" asks a correspondent. It's not much of a question so far as length is concerned, but an entire issue of this paper could be devoted to a reply without exhausting the subject, for there are almost as many methods as there are writers.

There are many writers, some of them trained men, who cannot revise their own material. They find it easier to write a new story than to touch up on old one. They are more fertile in plot than in situation, and once they have developed an idea it must stand or fall as it is. This, of course is not revision, at all. Others can hold to one factor of the plot and make a new story by using this as the starter for an entirely new development. This is rewriting rather than revision, but it is simpler than revision and sometimes works as well.

Real revision means retaining much of the present development but removing the weak points and replacing them with stronger work.

To do this it is necessary to approach the story with an entirely open mind. Forget the reasons and arguments that led to the first form of the story. Look at the script much as you might regard the work of another. The more thoroughly you can forget your personal interest in the first development the more successful your revision will be. First regard the story as a whole. Read it through for the general effect. Contrast cause and effect, study the sequence of events, note the weak points and the strong and get a general idea of how the story lies.

If you are able to revise you will have a general idea of the layout of the story. You will realize the good and the bad. You will have noted which scenes are correctly placed and which are out of order. Note the new arrangement and write in new scenes to replace those removed and put in proper sequence those scenes that are set too soon or too late. Now, if your continuity is correct, take each scene by itself and study it closely. Examine each detail of action in its relation to all the other details of that scene and the plot in general. Mentally discuss with yourself the advisability of each action. Seek for something that will bring out the idea more graphically. It may be that some detail needs to be brought out and made more plain or, conversely, some action may have been given undue importance. Give each movement its proper value. If you overaccent you lead your audience to expect more from the action than will develop. If you slight a situation it does not make a sufficiently strong impression. Very often by rearranging the values of the factors of a scene you can virtually remake your play without changing the relation of the scenes.

The Mask.

Someone wants to know what a mask is, and perhaps there are others who share that curiosity.

If you've a camera and will remove the lense, using a sheet of white paper for a ground glass and pointing the lense toward a window, you will note that in place of the rectangular picture you see on the ground glass you have a circle of picture. In the camera the lense throws this circle of light, but the plate comes well within the limits of this circle and registers only that part of the picture.

In a motion camera the strip of film, unlike the plate, extends above and below the edge of the circle of light and if the lense were not masked in the edges of the circle would cover part of the frames above and below the one being fully exposed. To get rid of this excess a mask is used, usually a metal plate so cut as to permit only the single frame to be acted upon by the light, the excess striking the metal instead of the film.

As a rule, this mask, or cutout, gives a rectangle one inch wide and three-fourths of an inch high, but the mask may be cut to any form within these limits. It may be given a keyhole shape to suggest that the scene is what the servant sees when she peeps through the keyhole. Perhaps it is cut like a very round figure eight on its side. That's when you see the colonel raise the binoculars to his eyes and you look through them, too. A circle serves for a spyglass effect and a mask with hairline bars suggests that you are looking through the window. That's what a mask is and you write it:

"Indian camp seen through binoculars." Then the cameraman gets the mask.

Why Technique?

Every little while someone rises to ask why stress is laid upon technique when the idea is what sells the play. The simplest reply is that it is technique that enables the author to present that idea in its most attractive form, but there is another reason.

Suppose that you have an idea that is almost but not quite new. You have given a new twist to an old situation, but you have done your work in slipshod fashion. The new turn may interest the editor, but if he accepts the story he will have to make an entirely new script from your amateurish effort before a production can be made. The story is not good enough to warrant all this extra work. The script is returned to you.

If you had sent it in in such a shape that all the editor had to do was to pass it over to the producer, it might have gone through. There is no time to put in the technique, but if the technique is there a sale will be made. You'll be selling twenty dollars' worth and throwing in the old part of the idea. If you'll look at it in that light, perhaps you'll see the need of technique. The man who sells the most scripts is the man whose scripts do not need much editing.

Even the novice may now and then hit upon an idea or situation so novel that the editor will be willing to supply the technique to match, but there is such a plentiful supply of well developed ideas these days that the editor prefers to buy technique along with the idea.

In explaining why he paid more for the scripts of a certain writer a director declared that it was worth an extra ten to have a script he could put right in hand instead of working over it a day to get in shape. That's what technique does.

Measuring Length.

In spite of all that has been written on this subject it still seems to worry a lot of writers. It doesn't seem to do much good to say that the measure of a photoplay is the foot-second, but that is the only measurement there is. Roughly from twenty to thirty-five scenes make a thousand foot reel, but some twenty scene photoplays might make three thousand feet and we wrote a forty scene play the other day that could go inside of 600 feet, so the number of scenes is merely the roughest kind of approximation. The foot-second test is the only safe gauge and here we have the personal equation of the director to gauge, but this variation is so slight that, as a rule, it may be ignored.

Foot-seconds mean that under normal conditions one foot of film is passed through the camera or projection machine in one second. Some short-sighted managers cause their operators to shoot the films through at the rate of a foot and a half a second so that the program may be run through in short order and a waiting crowd admitted to the seats made vacant. On the other hand, others try to stretch the show by running more slowly. You can tell from the speed of the action when this is done. When the characters seem to glide or float instead of walk the projection is too slow. When a man seems to yank a girl out of an auto instead of assisting her to alight the projection is too rapid. But when the action seems normal get a seat where you can get a light on your watch and time the scenes with the second hand. You can time only every other scene, but that will be sufficient. If you have a cheap split second watch or timer (you can get them for six or seven dollars), it is better yet, but the second hand will do if you have quick eyes. Time the scene and note the action. If a certain scene runs twenty seconds note the action that can happen in twenty seconds. Now when you write action of about that length you will know that you have used twenty feet of your possible thousand. You can't do it with just one twenty foot scene. You must see many twenty foot scenes, and thirty foot scenes and fifty foot scenes and so on, but if you stick to it long enough you'll know about how much to write for each measurement or how long your written action will take. When you get a pretty good idea of how long the action takes, reverse the process. The first time the subject is run guess at the number of feet in every other scene. Note it on a paper. Sit through a second show and this time use the watch. Put down the result and see how closely you have come to it. In time you can come pretty close to the actual length.

Train yourself to see the action in your picture. Have a mental picture of the scene as you write it or visualize it after you have written it. If you say that "Jane enters and comes to Dick," see Jane come through the door and across the stage to where Dick is. See each action as you want the producer to do it and then see how many seconds have passed since you started to visualize. Translate seconds into feet and you have the length of the scene. Mr. Merwin, who writes in every action because he writes mostly for one director whose methods he knows, writes in every action and comes close to the full length. You cannot do as well as that, but you can come close enough. If you find you cannot gauge the time, do as the beginner does. Write out the idea and leave the rest to fate and the director. If you keep at it long enough you can simply write your stuff and come pretty close to the proper length by instinct and without the aid of a watch. But remember that the measure of a photoplay is feet and not the number of words.

Clean Up.

If we read the signs aright there is going to be something said about the crime picture presently. Don't get caught with a lot of blood and thunder stuff on your hands when the storm hits, if it does. It is easy to write a crime story and that is why so many of them are written. They are easy to stage so they get over, which is why so many are taken, but if you steer clear of murder and burglary, you'll be surprised to find how many pleasant topics you may discover if you work hard enough and the story that depends more on heart interest than the commission and detection of crime makes by far the more lasting impression. Anticipate the new year by making a resolution that you will not use crimes as motifs for your stories. You'll not regret it.

The Two-Reel Market.

Pretty soon there is going to be a brisk market for two and three reel material. There is little market yet because the free lances are sending in one reel stories expanded into two. The director says it's not strong enough and so he goes and builds up a reel into two himself, creating the impression that that is what is wanted. If you can write a two reel story that is interesting in every foot of film you are going to come pretty close to selling it, but it must be better than a one reel idea if you want to get it over.

If you have had sufficient experience with one part subjects to sell a fair average, try the two and three part stories. Start with a one part story that is so full of meat that you can't quite get it inside the thousand feet limit. Build it up. With the extra time at your disposal in the two part story you can build up the dramatic situations and make them stronger. This is the secret of writing two reels. Do not pad with hot air. Pad with meat.

Tabbing Them Up.

Here's a suggestion for the man who wants to go at things right and who has difficulty in remembering things. It is no more nor less than a production chart.

Get a large sheet of wrapping paper and rule it lengthwise for the companies, grouping them by their releasing affiliations. For convenience arrange them alphabetically; Biograph, Edison, Essanay, etc., then Bison, Champion, Crystal, etc., and American, Gaumont, etc. Now draw horizontal lines to mark off the sheet in squares. Label these squares at the top with a classification of plays, drama, comedy, farce, purpose, and whatever else you will, splitting these classes into finer subdivisions. The last square should be left for remarks. Now take your back numbers and turn to the stories of the films. Start three or six months back, according to your patience. Read the story of each concern and check it in one of the squares. Make a small straight line and when you have four make the fifth score a cross line, so that each block represents five productions of that class. It is best to use a dozen or more classifications such as dramas, western, society, underworld, costume and the like. When you have done you will have a reasonably accurate chart of that company's productions. If they have twenty Western dramas out of fifty releases, it is but reasonable to suppose them a good market for Western dramas. If they have but three society dramas it will argue a poor market. Improving on the plan use a black pencil for the first three months, a red for the next quarter, a green and then a blue, returning to the black for the next year. If in the remarks column you enter such peculiarities as "Likes plays with plenty of riding" or anything else that attracts your attention, you will have a complete tab on the company production and can place your product with greater certainty.

Typewriters.

Two correspondents want to know what make of typewriter is best to purchase. The best make is the one you like the best. We swear by one make, but have to hire another kind for our assistant and a chap who comes to see us is certain that both together are not equal to one of a third brand. If you get a machine you like you've got the best machine on the market. Get into a rental agency some time and try them all. Then take your pick. As well ask us which brand of smoking tobacco is the best. We think that a visible writer is better than one with a type pot, but that is about as far as advice can safely go.

Inquiries.

NOTE.—No question can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of studio addresses, kept up-to-date, will be sent if a stamped and addressed return envelope accompanies the request.

M. W.—We do not reply to questions by mail. If you do not read this paper you are scarcely entitled to replies. Mr. Walthall was Miss Pickford's stage husband in both "My Baby" and "The One She Loved." Not being a fortune-teller we cannot state if Miss Pickford has left the pictures "forever." Consult some local astrologer. Read back for the "dark brunette," and after this call them by role. The question was answered correctly a few weeks ago, but the inquirer did not ask for a dark brunette. A recent issue answers your inquiry as to Miss Leonard. She is with Monopol.

M. M.—Elmer Booth was opposite Miss Pickford in the play you name. The Essanay cast does not give names for "The Girls from Grassville." It just lumps the girls and the boys. Herbert Rawlinson was Bud in "The Girl and the Cowboy." "The lover and the other girl" is too vague. Mr. Anderson was out of the films several weeks on account of an accident. Watch for Edwin August in coming Powers'.

DALLAS.—Miss Dorothy Bernard is now playing stock, but the Biograph Identifier is not informed just where. He will try and locate her.

NEW SUBSCRIBER—Look in the index to advertisers for the first question. Do not price your scripts unless you are an exceptional judge of values. Most companies use but one rejection slip. If they want to ease the bump they add a written line. "Not available" may mean anything from "rotten," with a capital letter and three exclamation points, to "sorry we can't take this, but it is not in our line." There are some fifty or sixty reasons why a script cannot be taken and one polite phrase covers them all.

J. D.—That was a pretty postcard, but we do not answer on postcards. "Fra Diavolo" was a Solax special release. It was not dated. It came out in the early summer.

C. H. B.—An inquiry regarding three members of the same company and that company working in your town, is regarded as a crude piece of press work. You can find out by applying to the studio if you do not already know. Very frequently we are stung with press inquiries, but this is a trifle too obvious. No inquiries regarding these people will be answered in future, whether the request comes from the home town or otherwise.

A. S.—Wilfred Lucas was the sailor in "A Sailor's Heart."

COPE.—We understand that Kalem was made in Virginia. It was not made around New York City.

J. A. C.—A year is a long time in pictures. The player is not named in recent Melies casts.

NAOMIE—Why not use the same title Kalem did? Then we'll know what you mean. Miss Lawrence has not formed any connection at this writing. We do not know if Miss Brunette is permanently with Victor. We do not reply to questions as to relationships. This goes double—to questions five and six. Miss Pickford is with Belasco.

ROSEBUD—In Nestor's "Making a Man of Her" the men were Jim, Donald McDonald; Lem, Eddie Lyons, and Jack, Lee Moran. Nestor is working in Los Angeles. The addresses will be sent if you will send for the list of addresses advertised.

M. J.—Kay-Bee has gone into the Biograph class, but we have not yet found a Kay-Bee Identifier.

C. J. W. J.—Who is the Miss Mary Fisher you ask for? Don't you mean Miss Margarita Fisher? She is playing with the western Universal.

STRICKLAND—Tom Moore is said to be a brother of Owen Moore.

M. M. E.—No company makes a specialty of Jewish pictures. Several have made pictures of American and foreign Ghetto pictures. Vitagraph seems to have been the most successful. You might try them.

H. B. D.—The story was copyrighted, even as you suggest. We do not recall the magazine.

M. E. S.—See recent issues regarding the first question. We do not see the logic of the argument. Send your pictures to the leading companies and go down the line. Start at the top, providing you send only to those companies using the style of script you have to offer. The smaller companies are no more liable to take an idea from a novice than what you term the larger companies. There is no particular reason why you cannot gain success writing evenings only, but if you'll take the advice of an old-timer, you'll plan to work in the morning. Go to bed at eight and get up at four if you have to, but come to your work with your mind fresh. Some few work best at night, but most writers do better work in the morning, when the mind is clear. Take just a cup of coffee and go to work, then breakfast.

C. B.—If you see this, send your address. We have a rather good half-tone of the lady of the Glass Coffin. It will do until you can get a photo. Lost your letter. We do not file inquiries.

L. D.—Frank Fernandes had the title in Melies' "The Remittance Man." Ray Gallager had the lead in "True Till Death." Would have answered sooner, but we had to query the Melies Company.

G. M. B.—Our Biograph names are not the names on the English post-cards because few of the English post-cards are correctly named. That's why.

O. F. K.—We gather from recent casts that Jack Halliday has replaced Edwin August in the section of the Lubin Company in which Miss Hawley is the star. Miss Evelyn Selbie seems to be playing with Mr. Anderson, but this is not yet official. It was she who played in "The Ranch Girl's Trial."

O. H.—Write relative to the scripts. You should get some sort of action by now.

Comments on the Films

"THE NEW YORK HAT" (Biograph), Dec. 5.—A picture of a few human beings. They live in a small country town and seem to center around the village church. It doesn't shut its eyes to the frailties of mortal flesh; but it is optimistic, good natured and leaves a pleasant taste, indeed, it is a picture among pictures to entertain, encourage and amuse. It is wonderful how the Biograph producer gets his many different characters, for hardly can the players be recognized so sure are they in their assumption of the peculiarities and semblance of people not themselves. One marvels that they are; but seeing them, he is not astonished to find them acting humorously.

The scenario behind this picture of the little girl (Mary Pickford), of a miserly father for whom the minister bought a new hat, because her dying mother, knowing the father's stinginess, had given him a little money to get her a "few bits of finery," isn't strong in its primary idea; but it has been mighty well worked up. Then the motivation of the characters is so clearly drawn and the humor of them so often convinces laughter that the audience gets satisfaction. Clair McDowell plays an old spinster, Mae Marsh has an unimportant part.

"THE DAWNING" (Vitagraph), Dec. 6.—A special release feature picture in two reels that surely is more dignified and more artistic than nine-tenths of the stuff shown along Broadway and at two dollars a seat. It takes up a delicate question but deals with it in a wise and wholesome way that will be commended by those in the community whose opinion is most valuable in the long run. Such a picture is worth while and justifies the producer's care, something he can take pleasure in.

The story is of people in society. A young girl (Leah Baird) loves an artist, but her mother wants her to marry a man of wealth. There's a lover's quarrel and she marries, out of pique, her mother's choice and is discontented. Later, as one playing with dangerous fire, she poses in Carmencita costume for a drawing by the artist. In this scene Miss Baird is exceptionally strong. She makes what comes of it most convincing, and shows how truly an artist she is. The outcome, showing her husband's worth against the artist's who gives way to his passion, makes her fall in love with her husband. It is surely a feature of the real kind.

"TWIXT LOVE AND AMBITION" (Lubin), Dec. 5.—A picture featuring the work of Ormi Hawley and Edwin August. Its object is to waken sympathy for two lovers, held apart by the woman's ambition (she is an opera singer of note) but needing each other and dreaming of each other in their separation, which both at heart deplore. A child, the nephew of the man, is the means of bringing them together in a fairly emotional scene. Buster Johnson is the child. The drowning scene must have seemed real to him. Miss Hawley made all speed in getting him out from under water.

"THE SHERIFF PRO-TEM" (Melies). Dec. 5.—We were somewhat astonished at the freshness with which this often-used Western situation was developed. Miss Mildred Bracken plays a moonshiner's daughter who rebuffs a certain unpleasant character of the neighborhood. The men, to be revenged, brings the sheriff pro-tem to get her father. This man is wounded by the father and Mildred cares for him until she finds he has a warrant. The tough neighbor who has been hanging around, appears and in the consequent struggle she is herself wounded. It is an interesting picture.

"A FOREST FIRE" (Edison), Dec. 6.—People who see this picture of a forest fire which is not a spectacle, but a tragedy, will be more careful how they leave camp fires to devastate a whole community and wipe out many a poor settler's all. It is a picture of a real forest fire. The mill that burns and the settler's cabin that is consumed were not stage-sets; and the Edison players have acted not a story but just a scrap of real life at the edge of the burning to make it effective. It certainly is effective.

"A FREIGHT TRAIN DRAMA" (Selig), Dec. 5.—Winnifred Greenwood gives one scene to this little drama of life in a railroad-side shanty that, after we have seen it, quite persuades us that the whole story is real. She plays the wife of a shiftless, lazy, ex-railroader and is exasperated to the point of firing him (Frank Weed) out of the house. Margaret Carle, who plays their daughter, seems too old for one scene that needed a child of ten and lacks experience, although she promises well. This child climbs into a stationary freight car for some bits of kindling and is carried off. This adventure brings her in contact with her father who has just heroically saved the express train, and the two go home together. In the cast are Thomas Dixon, Charles Barnes, Julius Frankenburg and John Lancaster, as yeggs who attempt the train-wrecking. T. J. Commerford, Walter Roberts, Mace Barnes and Wm. Stowell are railroaders.

"A RACE WITH TIME" (Lubin), December 9.—A railroad melodrama in which a station master's pretty daughter makes a plucky ride on a locomotive and saves a contract for the road. The competing road had set a villain to work and, but for the girl, who drives alone and gets the mail bag in on time, it would have been lost. The love story between this girl and the president's son buttresses the incident and after her exploit the romance finds pleasant sailing. Alice Joyce plays the heroine; Tom Moore, the president's son; Logan Paul, the president, and Stewart Holmes, the section hand of the other road who holds up the train crew who were to carry the mail. It is a well put together piece of work, has some fine views and makes an interesting offering.

"FOOTBALL DAYS AT CORNELL" (Essanay), Dec. 5.—There is no doubt of this picture's being a sure offering; it will please everywhere. There's a very laughable little comedy in it played by college boys and acted remarkably well. A large Broadway audience thoroughly enjoyed it.

"A TENACIOUS LOVER" (Pathe), Dec. 5.—A farce with a clever female impersonation. There is some audacious humor in it and much of it is undeniably funny; but if it had been condensed it would have been much more effective. Surely no one would call it stale; for the tenacious lover, summarily dismissed by the girl's father, dresses up and gets a job in the family as wet nurse to the girl's baby nephew. The child's grandfather demands that the milk be tested. The sample bottle is filled in the kitchen and the laboratory report accuses the wet nurse of having bovine tuberculosis.

"ALMOST A MAN" (Essanay), Dec. 4.—This broad farce raised some laughs in a crowded house. The best work was done by Billy Mason as the dummy. It seemed absurd or approximating an imposition to put men of the ability of Steppling, Missimer and Cashman in such parts as those in which they are here cast.

"MIKE'S BRAINSTORM" (Selig), Nov. 22.—This story of an elephantine playmate makes real comedy. Thomas Santschi as a comedian is a success—so much so that this reviewer suffered from a distinct pain in the jaw not once, but several times in the course of the picture. The elephant also was right with Santschi. The work of the big animal is of the best. There were several scenes that stand out—for instance, where the elephant with a load of the villagers on his back goes into the stream and rolls over; where again he takes a wet stroll and shakes the riders into the water; where he helps himself to some of Cobbler Frank Clark's bananas, and in retaliation for a summary rebuke goes to the town pump, fills his trunk with water, and thoroughly ducks the shoemaker; and where he tries to get into the saloon and wrecks the establishment, bringing the building to the ground.

"THE CURIO HUNTERS" (Vitagraph), Dec. 4.—A very laughable sailor's yarn by Mrs. Marshall P. Wilder. It has all the naivete of a story spun on the lazy end of a dock by an old salt, and will wholly capture any one who loves a yarn. The place is on a South Sea Island where the natives are good to a plaster god. Little Bill, a sailor (Marshall P. Wilder) and his two mates (Hughie Mack and Ned Finley) stroll into the deserted, thatched temple. Bill likes what's in the bottle on the god's knees and his two mates leave him on the grass throne taking the plaster god away with them. What comes of it will surely amuse and Director Ralph Ince deserves credit for a success. The late George Ober has a role and Robert McWade also.

"THE ELECTRIC LAUNDRY" (C. G. P. C.), Dec. 3.—An automatic laundry which makes many laughs. It is all trick stuff and represents infinite pains.

"PARIS AND ITS MONUMENTS" (C. G. P. C.), Dec. 3.—On the same reel as the foregoing are these fine views of Paris. The subject takes the larger half of the reel, but it does not tire; on the contrary, the scenes are all of great interest, especially so where the view of the tomb of Napoleon dissolves into the figure of "The Little Corporal."

"THE MANTLE OF RED EVANS" (Selig), Dec. 3.—A not very dramatic picture of a girl, daughter of a dare-devil gunman, who finds two other men posing as the notorious dead-shot and makes them explain. Aside from one clown character that is a drawback, the picture is well acted and smoothly told. But it would have been better if the fact that the girl was Red's daughter had been made clear at first. The picture seems to be aiming at something we don't know what until we find out and then the picture is finished. Myrtle Steadman really makes the picture a good offering although many of its hotel scenes, well acted as they are, leaving out that clown, are very pleasing. Marshall Steadman is the hotel keeper; C. E. Reeves the first who assumes Red's name; Florence Dye, the hotel maid.

"WRONGLY ACCUSED" (Eclipse), Dec. 4.—A picture aiming at pathos and in which a child plays an important part. It is very interesting, but fails in making a deep impression, chiefly because it never comes very close to the heart of life. It was produced to tell rather than to illuminate the story. A game keeper has wrongly accused a poacher of attempting to kill him. The man escapes from confinement and brings his child to the owner of the shooting ground. The game keeper is present, but is afraid to swear on the "head of this child" that the poacher is guilty, so he is set free. The backgrounds and photography have made some very pleasing scenes.

"THE LATEST ADDITION TO THE U. S. NAVY" (Edison), Dec. 4.—A picture of the newest New York, our big superdreadnought. The audiences here seemed to like the offering.

"THE WINKING PARSON" (Edison), Dec. 4.—Page Spencer, the author of this good laugh-maker, deserves credit. It gives William Wadsworth the kind of chance he likes and he has bagged lots of fun for us out of it. He is much more important than any one else in it; but Alice Washburn also is very comical and the whole cast supported the situation perfectly. Bessie Learn is the parson's maid. Mrs. Wallace Erskine is a widow, one of his parishioners, and is Alice Washburn's rival. Wm. West is a doctor; Bigelow Cooper, a deacon; Yale Boss, a boy and many others just as worthy of being named.

"HIS LITTLE INDIAN MODEL" (Pathe), Dec. 4.—Betty Gray and W. J. Johnston play the leads in an Indian and white man story that isn't at all convincing, but has one or two new things, among which is a crystal gazing squaw. A white girl loves a white artist who is painting Indians. His Indian model is really his sweetheart's sister. The white girl comes to the village and her sister, jealous on account of the artist, throws her over a cliff. The crystal gazing reveals the history of the white Indian girl and, with other means of identification, proves her sister to the girl she nearly killed.

"STRUGGLE OF HEARTS" (Lubin), Dec. 3.—The writer of this scenario deserves very little credit. The situation is old although it is newly dressed. It is not convincingly nor very humanly developed. A minister is made to help an escaped convict. Later, the man he helps to evade the punishment a jury throught him worthy of and for the crime of murder that he confesses to but excuses, wins the affections of the minister's sweetheart. Harry Allen is the writer. Clara Williams plays the girl; Edgar Jones, the convict and Burton King, the minister.

"WHEN HELEN WAS ELECTED" (Selig), Dec. 4.—A woman's rights farce in which a man's wife is nominated to run against him in a mayoralty campaign and is elected. She turns out to be not twenty-one yet, so can't serve. It is a dry picture with only a few laughs, and the acting is its worst drawback. The wife, Phyllis Gordon, is very pretty and pleases; but her husband is ridiculous to a displeasing degree. Mrs. Gertrude Dunbar, an exaggerated suffragette, made most of the laughs; her hen pecked husband, George Hernandez, made, so far as we could see, all the rest. Wheeler Oakman, Fred Huntly, Eddie James, Frank Clark and Mrs. Katharine Pardee are in the cast. It was produced by Lem Parker.

"A DAUGHTER'S SACRIFICE" (Kalem), Dec. 4.—A farm country melodrama, rather conventional both in outline and in spirit, but in part well acted. It holds attention closely and gives well sustained dramatic suspense, because it is well constructed. A shiftless farmer steals from his landlord and is found out. The daughter has to marry this man to save her father from being sent to prison. After the wedding her sweetheart, in despair, leaves for the city, where he prospers and, later, is able to rescue the poor abused wife, whose husband is accidentally but conveniently killed. The most interesting figure is the shiftless old father, played by George Middleton. Alice Joyce is the daughter; Stewart Holmes, the landlord; Tom Moore, the sweetheart, and Hazel Mason, the girl of the village who is left waiting at the depot by the landlord's death.

"THE DRIVER OF THE DEADWOOD COACH" (Kalem), Dec. 7.—A typical Western drama with a fresh incident somewhat more clever than usual. This consists of the novel way Bad Bill takes to obtain possession of the contents of the express box. He is riding the stage in a large box so arranged that he can abstract the gold without being seen; it will then be with him and be delivered with himself and the box in the safe place to which he has directed it. This would have worked out all right had not the stage driver's boy gone out to get a snap photograph of the stage passing the house. The money is missed at the express office and the driver is accused, but the negative, on being developed, shows Bad Bill leaning out of the big box and with his hand in the small one. This incident, in spite of the very conventional trimmings with which the central situation is surrounded, makes an interesting offering. The characters are merely figures. William H. West plays the driver; Jane Wolfe, his wife; Judson Melford, the boy; Gertrude Short, the little lame girl, and Paul Hurst, the desperado.

"THE ESCAPE OF GAS" (C. G. P. C.), Dec. 16.—A Max Linder farce that is uproariously funny. It is quite Continental, and wasn't made for church socials, but it is not very vulgar, and it most certainly is a laugh maker.

"HIS MOTHER'S HOPE" (Edison), Dec. 7.—A picture that manages to make clear the subtle methods of mental activity, and most dramatically. The first few scenes lacked plausibility; they were conventional and poor. They show how a mother and father lost their only son. The mother dies, but asks to have the boy's room kept just as it was. When the actual story opens the boy, not knowing who he is, has grown up, is married, has a son of his own, and is out of work and in despair. He burglarizes his father's house and is caught. From this point the action leads to a mutual recognition. It is not done suddenly or crudely, but step by step, through mental association, faint impressions at first grow naturally, and by what they are fed on into convincing memories. In making the development from misty ideas to palpable fact real to the audience, the producer deserves high commendation. We don't think it could be made clear to the gallery; we are sure it was over the heads of some in the audience, but to the imaginative it was like food and drink. George Lessey, as the father, and Barry O'Moor, as the son, bear the burden of the work, but Bessie Learn helps a good deal. Gertrude McCoy plays the mother; Louise Sydmeth, a governess; Marty Fuller and William Porter play the two boys.

"THE SUPREME TEST" (Essanay), Dec. 6.—Frances Mason plays the only strongly presented character in this picture of a young newly married couple of wealth and social position, but the influence of her work goes through the whole production. She is a most insinuating siren who lures the young husband almost to shipwreck. Chance favors him twice, and he and his wife are reunited. If Frances Mason's acting (even the spectators can feel her seductive charm as she puts all the power of her sex into the scenes) can so favorably affect the picture, how much finer it would have been if either or both of the young people had been able to act. Whitney Raymond and Evebelle Prout, both very young still, are in appearance just what was needed for the man and his wife. Frank Dayton, Beverly Bayne and Helen Dunbar have lesser parts. The siren makes the picture very effective. Its sets and scenes are pleasing, and its producer surely deserves credit.

"THE AWAKENING OF BIANCA" (Vitagraph), Dec. 7.—A little love story of the Italian quarter by Horace Kramer, who has provided a fresh and romantic situation quite in line with the character of the peoples of Southern Europe. Zena Kieffe plays the heroine, and her crowning glory is a wealth of black hair which flows down her back. Charles Kent takes the part of her father, and one of his push-cart salesmen in the fruit business is Nicola, played by Leo Delaney, who is deeply in love with the hair. Hal Wilson, a very good Jewish character, wants to buy the curls, but it is not until after her father has fallen on hard times that she is willing to give them up. By this time she meets Giuseppe (Charles Edwards), with whom she has fallen in love, and who is willing to have them sold. The awakening comes through Nicola's willingness to give up his whole capital to save her the indignity. Zena Kieffe is her own charming self, but is never a true Italian, nor is Charles Kent. Both are unaffected and do competent work, but Leo Delaney's work gives good Italian atmosphere to the story. The work of Charles Edwards also helps in this. Charles Kent, the producer, has made an interesting picture, but it isn't up to the best Vitagraph standard.

"JINX'S BIRTHDAY PARTY" (Biograph), Dec. 9.—A farce, but it is not a very great success as a laugh-maker. The chief trouble seems to be the lack of convincing acting. Mr. and Mrs. Jinx try to get out of giving a party after they have sent out the invitations. Mr. Jinx fails to mail the recall notes, and when the guests begin to arrive, each with basket lunches, his wife makes him pretend to be sick. The trick doesn't work; the party goes on. Poor Jinx is a sad spectator at his own birthday shindig.

"SHE IS A PIPPIN" (Biograph), Dec. 9.—On the same reel, a farce on a rather screen-worn pattern about a wife who was insanely jealous. It is not a very funny offering.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY No. 50," Dec. 9.—The best item this week is a good view of the crown prince of Montenegro, Prince Peter, who is shown in an animated conversation. Emperor William of Germany is seen at the unveiling of the statue to Caspar de Coligny, the great leader of the Huguenots in Catherine Medici's time in France. There also are the usual number of very interesting items.

"THE SIGNAL OF DISTRESS" (Vitagraph), Dec. 9.—A picture dealing with the sweetheart who didn't know that her lover had a sister. There also is not a great deal that's new in the way it is worked out. It has this advantage: Florence Turner plays the lead, and "Jean," the Vitagraph collie, is used very pleasingly in bringing the two lovers together again. There are also some very pretty backgrounds. Yet it lacks distinction. Miss Turner has very little chance to show her powers, and Tom Powers, who plays opposite to her, didn't seem to fill the bill convincingly. Edith Halloran plays the sister. A large audience watched it closely and seemed much interested. The use of the dog helps the offering very much.

"A SOLDIER'S FURLOUGH" (Lubin), Dec. 7.—This picture has a situation—a rather crude one, but enough to make the offering exciting. It fails to make its intention clear soon enough, and is in its early scenes awkward; it seems both stiffly acted and the scenes come jerkily. When the soldier on furlough begins his pursuit of "Jim the Squaw Man," which, by the way, is to make him overstay his time, the action holds. We saw it twice, and in both theaters the spectators made at its thrilling moments exclamations, sometimes profane, which show that it was certainly getting over. It isn't as good as this company's best work. Its author is Romaine Fielding, who plays a minor part—the soldier's brother shot by Jim. Robert Adair plays the soldier, and he certainly doesn't lie down on the rough and dangerous work that his part demanded. George Miller plays the squaw man, and is just as brash in his acting as Adair. Julio Moreno also has a part.

"TOO MANY CASEYS" (Vitagraph), Dec. 6.—It has been said that one touch of nature makes the whole world kin. There was a hearty laugh in a big Broadway audience when Pat Casey, picking up a big "can," presumably containing beer, gives it the well known whirling motion designed to put a "head" on the amber liquid. There are many amusing situations in this bit of comedy. William Shea, in the role of a real "Irisher," is sufficient to guarantee hilarity. He is well supported by Charles Edwards, George Cooper, Florence Ashbrooke and Kate Price.

"CORK AND VICINITY" (Vitagraph), Dec. 6.—On the same reel are these views of Queen's College and Blarney Castle and street scenes of Cork.

"A QUESTION OF HAIR" (Selig), Dec. 6.—This reframing of a subject that has been worn bald contains nothing essentially new or amusing, either.

"JOHN COLTER'S ESCAPE" (Selig), Dec. 6.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this bit of Indian drama. There is shown a new way to run the gantlet.

"THE SPENDTHRIFT'S REFORM" (Pathe), Dec. 7.—Paul Panzer is featured in this drama, which contains some strong situations. There is good photography and fine tinting and excellent settings. The story is of a man who is brought to the verge of downfall through the temptations of club life. He cannot resist the desire to gamble—in spite of the fact that he always loses. His reformation follows the recovery of his wife from a pistol wound inflicted by her father when she is attempting to get money for her husband from a strong box. The father mistakes his daughter for a burglar. A good release.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S LOVE AFFAIR" (Essanay), Dec. 7.—A Western story, notable neither for plot nor for settings. The son of the ranch owner and the foreman of the ranch are in love with the same girl. She favors the foreman. The son obtains the discharge of the latter, and forges a note from the girl ending the engagement. Later the son marries the girl. In an altercation the husband shoots a man. The former foreman, now sheriff, goes to arrest the murderer, who confesses his part in the separation of the two lovers. As the eyes of the gunman close in death the arms of the wife are put about the neck of the sheriff.

"HAREM CAPTIVES" (Pathe), December 9.—A two-reel special drama, taken in North Africa. Its hero is an Englishman who has fallen in love with a girl of the country, Ourida. Unfortunately, the girl's sister, Fatima, has fallen in love with the man herself and makes trouble all along the line. In her jealousy, she even goes to the point of having herself and sister abducted. They are carried off and sold as slave and it looks as though the older sister's wiles would keep the Englishman from effecting a rescue; but in a dramatic climax she is foiled. The backgrounds, now beautiful, now impressive, add much to the offering as entertainment. This is fortunate, for the story is not very significant and would have been better in one reel. The acting is conventional.

"A MARKED MAN" (Cines), December 10.—The audience watched this picture breathlessly. It is a well-acted well-made offering and, in its big scene we see a maniac who we have been told makes a specialty of infanticide in a house alone with a little girl of about eight and her baby brother. The child is a fine actress and beside this we have grown fond of her because of her pleasing ways. These things not only convince us that her plight is real, but make us take a poignant interest in it. Everything in the action is made clear and plain. A police warning notified us that the "marked man" was at large and we recognized him as soon as we saw him. He enters the little house as to a refuge from his pursuers and the child treats him kindly. The bread knife is there and he feals at the same time a longing to kill her and a sense of awe and love for her. The struggle between these two makes the drama vital. Very interesting. A good offering.

"ANNIE CRAWLS UPSTAIRS" (Edison), December 10.—James Oppenheim, the author of this interesting study of the human heart, has shown the spiritual side of his mind rather than the artistic side. In complexion it is very much like Jerome K. Jerome's "The Fourth Floor Back." Not dramatic as a whole, it contains five incidents each dramatic in itself, but each really a repetition. Little Annie is a cripple and in the picture she symbolizes human kindliness. Her sunny heart changes evil into good, unconsciously, wherever she goes. She crawls up stairs, five flights; at each landing she comes on people whose hearts are at variance; there's a struggle going on in every instance and the cause of this is some form of evil that is blinding a human mind so that it can't for the time see clearly. Annie is like a light; when she comes, the victim is cured of blindness and recognizes the evil for what it is. In every case her good is shown as overcoming the evil. No, it doesn't convince at all; but it deals with pleasing things. Annie is played by Helen Coughlin; the part didn't need acting. Robert Brower and Mrs. C. J. Williams play her parents; Edna Flugrath and Mrs. Wallace Erskine are the people on the first floor; Bigelow Cooper and Mrs. William Betchel are on the next; Gertrude McCoy and Harry Beaumont are lovers at odds on the next; Elizabeth Miller and Edna Hamel are on the next and Barry O'Moore is on the fifth floor.

"THE SHADOW OF THE CROSS" (Essanay), December 10.—Poor acting keeps this picture from convincing religious atmosphere on the one hand and from true romance on the other. It is a love story written by a monk in his diary and illustrated by dream memories which in their Spanish setting are plausible enough; but the players have made them melodramatic (all climax) to the point of being ridiculous; at certain moments this is incontestable. Told in romantic language, the story is poetic; in the cold picture, it is not.

"DOCTOR BRIDGET" (Vitagraph), December 10.—The author of this picture hands one out to the doctors or rather to the quacks. There's a back-cut too for the people who employ such. The center of the picture isn't Biddy, played by Bunny; but the cherished son of her employer who is being killed by too much care and attention. Harry T. Morey is too old for the part and fails to add to the fun very much. He gets sick and five doctors are called in, successively. The last and most amusing of them is Hal Wilson, the hydropath. Biddy has been nursing a growing disgust and takes Dr. Wilson by the ear, the family being away. Her cure is to make Master Harry work with the promise of a good dinner for reward. From the time Dr. Wilson comes until Biddy effects her cure, it is a very laughable offering. The author is Arthur F. Clark and the producer is Frederick Thompson.

"A LUCKY FALL" (Lubin), December 9.—The lucky fall lands a prospector's wife in the middle of a rich claim. Her husband was away seeking gold on the hills and here it was right near home. What comes of her finding it makes a dramatic picture; for a scheming assayer deceives her as to its value and tries to buy it from her for a mere song. Her husband's home-coming in the nick of time, his finding out what is up and the steps he takes to save his wife from the foolish transaction keep us in suspense for the while. The offering is interesting.

Independent

"HIS DAY" (Majestic), Dec. 10.—A picture of the northwest, taken in a pretty ravine, through which runs a mountain torrent. It concerns a trapper, rather brutal, his abused wife who is something of a slave, and a hunter on a vacation in the woods. The story is not made as clear as might be, but "his day" seems to refer to the fact that the stranger and the trapper's wife were something more than friends for a day. Her husband licks him and after that becomes more affectionate to his wife. The picture is poorly acted by the heroine. The men play their parts vigorously. It is not a truly strong picture.

"A MIDNIGHT ELOPMENT" (Keystone), Dec. 9.—There is a good deal of old stuff in this elopement story. The principals are young and pleasing; but do not convince us that they are in love. It was produced for the sake of the farcical doings. The funniest thing in it is when a man gets shot in the seat of the trousers. We can't call it good entertainment.

"A FAMILY MIX UP (Keystone), Dec. 9.—On the same reel is a farce in which Fred Mace and Mack Sennet play two husbands, each of which flirts with the wife of the other, but neither knows that the woman he's with is the wife of his friend. They happen to come at the same time to the same restaurant. The mix-up is very convincing, for who can blame the other? It is much cleverer than the first part of the offering.

"HE WANTED TO SEE, BUT HE PAID DEARLY FOR IT" (Itala).—A short French comedy, concerning a man who bribes a maid to let him spy on her mistress as she dresses. She is forced to hide him in a tubful of water. Broad comedy.

"WIDE-BRIMMED HATS ARE FASHIONABLE" (Itala).—This short comedy offering is a decided hit of the eccentric variety. It concerns the troubles of a man wearing a straw hat with a very wide brim. It is unusually good.

"A GOOD HUNTING DOG" (Itala).—Another entertaining Italian comic film, in which a suspicious wife sends a dog to bring back her erring husband. The dog brings him, and the picture proves quite amusing.

"GAUMONT WEEKLY NO. 39," Dec. 4.—The nine story Marquin Building of Portland, Ore., which partially collapsed is the first and perhaps the most interesting item in this week's topical. The other items have also much that is newsy and together make a good offering.

"JOE'S REWARD" (Reliance), Dec. 11.—A pretty picture and a love story. Hector Dion plays Joe, a prisoner on parole. Gertrude Robinson plays the daughter of the man on whose farm Joe gets a job. There is so much colorless, tasteless acting in the pictures this week that a naturally, humanly played picture like this is a very pleasant find. It is a good offering.

"AT LIBERTY—GOOD PRESS AGENT" (Thanhouser), Dec. 8.—An enjoyable farce comedy of a press agent who "can get things in the papers." He lands a job as a "live wire" and goes on tour with a new show. He finds at the first week stand that the papers won't take his stuff. There's small pox in the town and he cooks up a screed about the leading lady that will be locally interesting. The board of health quarantines the whole company. It tickled the audience and is likely to be generally popular.

"THE ROMANCE OF THE U. S. N." (Thanhouser), Dec. 6.—A rather wild melodrama which be believe the least convincing Thanhouser we have ever seen. It was fabricated, however, to include scenes on board Uncle Sam's big ships, views of the recent naval review on the Hudson and the land parade. These are very good.

"THE REPORTER'S COURAGE" (Comet).—We have seen more than one picture whose heroine lost her beauty before she found the man who could love truly. If we remember rightly the man is usually a reporter, is in this case. His courage was shown by his taking care of her when attaked by small pox. There is very little that seems fresh and not much that is convincing in it. It has a few good backgrounds and some interesting characters in minor parts.

"THE HEART OF A SOLDIER (American), Dec. 14.—To picture an old soldier as begging on the streets in his G. A. R. uniform shows questionable taste, surely it is unconvincing. The story as a whole is rather weak, not so much in construction as in feeling for character. It seems very artificial and unnatural.

"A DOUBLE REWARD" (Broncho), Dec. 11.—A very good picture. The Broncho producers are turning out excellent work. The action in their pictures, and they don't lack action, stands out on the screen convincingly, as though it was natural and a fact; it seems spontaneous. It is due in large part to the acting and in this picture we like especially the heroine, a cow girl. It is she, who, after securing the real horse thief, holds up her lover, wrongly accused, and collects the reward offered for him. It is her rough humor; he doesn't understand it until she produces the culprit and he is freed. Money is useful in housekeeping. Every player in it acts acceptably. It pays to employ really competent people in making pictures for the public.

"THE WINNING OF HELEN" (Majestic), Dec. 8.—The only love story pictures that fail to please are those in which there is no real love. There is none in this, not enough even for a farce. Helen, an actress, is wedded to her art and won't marry the millionaire. His newspaper friend learns of his trouble and puts a story in the paper that the rich clubman is engaged to a society leader. Helen comes as fast as a taxi can come and the millionaire's friend brings a minister by the ear. There is no acting in it.

"THE RIVAL SISTERS" (Comet).—More than once before we have seen two sisters growing up together, one of them very selfish, and seen what kind of fates their characters built for them. But this, it is a very interesting picture, is much more consequential than anything of the kind that has gone before it. The good acting of both the girls, but especially of the younger, the unselfish one, makes it humanly significant and gives it real meaning that holds the interest from the start. It is a good offering. We, ourselves, enjoyed it very much.

"TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES OF GREATER NEW YORK" (Comet).—On the same reel is a collection of views of city streets. It shows every kind of public conveyance from street cars drawn by horses to the police "hurry up wagon."

"BLOOD WILL TELL" (Kay Bee), Dec. 13.—Kay Bee battles have awakened enthusiasm and deserve their popularity. The battle in this two reel picture is nearly as good as this company's best and the story is convincing in its humanity and pleasing. It is optimistic and sympathetic in its picturing of a youth naturally timid. He is a Fairfax and his father is deeply chagrined by finding the boy afraid to enlist at the opening of the war. He conducts him to the recruiting station with a whip and forces him to sign. The boy is on post as a sentry; it is on the eve of a battle and he deserts. His father enlists in his place; but the boy, in hiding, finds that the Union forces have perfected plans that, if followed, will break the Confederacy's back. To save his people he gets hold of these, acting like the bravest of the brave, and gives his life to get them to his commander. The battle follows. The ending is a group of very emotional scenes and the final picture is a military funeral. A very good offering.

"AURORA FLOYD" (Thanhouser), Dec. 10.—A melodramatic picture of English life from Miss Braddon's popular novel. Recently the Selig Company produced the same story in one reel. This is in two reels and has escaped much of the cramped distortion; is a very much better picture. But it isn't so good as the Thanhouser "East Lynn," so similar to it in many ways that it invites comparison. The backgrounds and photography in "East Lynn" were lovely, more so than in this picture, which tells a more connected story. Both suffer in the transplanting, the first from the stage, the second from a book, and both seem disconnected, not organic wholes. Both are well acted pictures and clear enough and interesting enough so that the spectator's own imagination is able to supply the breaks between the disconnected scenes. "Aurora Floyd" is good entertainment. If it isn't a well-constructed bridge, it gives easy stepping stones. Where "East Lynn" was liked, this will be and we believe that means everywhere.

"HOME AND MOTHER" (Nestor), Dec. 11.—A bright, clear film with some fairly good character work and a story the observer follows with considerable interest. Dorothy Davenport in this, as in previous offerings, proves herself a dainty, attractive young actress. The brothers, played by George Field and William Dowland, form a good contrast as regards strength and weakness of character.

"THE APACHE'S VOW" (Milano), December 14.—This two-reel subject, depicting presumably the Paris apaches, though played by an Italian company, holds the attention well. It deals with a rough side of life and the characters, both men and women, are the victims of misplaced love. Nella bares her shoulder to have a symbol of the dread organization of Paris thieves tattooed upon it; Lugi, her husband, finding himself deserted, becomes desperate. He dies in the presence of the Countess Eva, who in turn is cast off by the jealous count. The scenes are vividly tragic in this.

"THE MIND CURE" (Crystal), December 15.—Pearl White and Chester Barnett appear here in a very good comedy, acted breezily and in the best of humor. The professor of hypnotism is cleverly fooled by his two patients and is forced to allow his daughter to wed.

"O! THAT LEMONADE" (Crystal), December 15.—This offering on the same reel with above is also in the Crystal Company's best vein. The scene around the punch bowl, in which the village joker has put a "stick," is very laughable. As a whole the reel is commendable.

"PERILS OF THE ATLANTIC" (Gaumont).—This two-reel special subject, besides giving an ingenious portrayal of the manner in which the Titanic disaster occurred, conveys a lesson to women who worry over the "revelations" of fake palmists. We get a graphic view of the big ocean liner colliding with the icebergs and then gradually sinking to the ocean depths. But in the end the husband is rescued, the small boy recovers from his illness and the fake palmist exposes herself by giving the worried woman's hand an entirely different reading from the first. A very interesting production.

"THE INTERNATIONAL CONSPIRACY" (Gaumont).—This three-reel special production is a notable one from almost every standpoint. It tells, first of all, a fascinating story of international intrigue, is well acted, has exceptional indoor and outdoor scenic effects and has plot elements of broad interest. The trailing of the government spy Rizzio by the police inspector known as "Iron Hand" furnishes a basis for the long series of vivid scenes. The night attack, the girl's timely signaling to the flagship, the escape in the motorboat and the destruction of the boat by a 12-inch projectile are among the incidents leading up to a climax. Part of the scenes are said to have been taken at the Gaumont home in France. A strong offering.

"THE LAST GUEST" (Powers), Dec. 11.—A story of decided charm and feeling, with an artistic ending. It moves across fifty years of time, and at the golden wedding dinner four generations are represented. It will please the average observer very much.

"THE PETTICOAT DETECTIVE" (Powers), Dec. 11.—This, on the same reel with above, constitutes a comedy of considerable action and interest. Two friends of a certain girl agree to catch a purse-snatcher, and appear as detectives. But the girl herself catches him.

"THE AWAKENING OF JOHN BRIDD" (Gem), Dec. 10.—The simple village scenes in this are different and convincing. The experiences of the girl, left by her father in the care of this selfish woodsman, hold the interest well, but she should have been a smaller girl at the beginning of the picture. The village gossips make a natural picture. The humiliation of the girl, her flight into the woods, and the pursuit by her awakened protector are well shown. An interesting reel.

"A FOUR-FOOTED HERO" (Bison), Dec. 10.—This two-reel offering begins with an entertaining series of frontier day exhibitions, such as riding steers, roping and throwing them, broncho-busting, etc. The story comes in later and centers about a trained horse which saves the life of the wounded hero by carrying water to him and then going for help. Pedro and his gang of horse thieves were realistically shown. There is such a wide variety of entertainment in this offering that it is sure to prove popular.

"A RIDE FOR LIFE" (Bison), Dec. 14.—This picture touches upon the warfare of the plains between the cattlemen and sheepmen. There are some fine range pictures, and the plot, though somewhat vague in places, becomes quite lively. The ride for life was made by relays, fresh horses being used from time to time. The trial should have been outside of court, as any judge would have allowed the prisoner time to bring in his chief witness. Under the circumstances the ride, while exciting, does not seem to have been entirely necessary.

"THE BLACK SHEEP" (Eclair), Dec. 10.—Jim comes back from the mines a wealthy man, after having been thbught worthless. He finds that his brother and wife have forced his parents to eat in the kitchen while they entertain company in the dining room. Jim has the satisfaction of seeing his brother go broke on the stock market, and makes them eat in the kitchen. Theatrical in plot and tone, but entertaining and photographically excellent.

"THE HONEYMOONERS" (Champion), Dec. 9.—A comedy offering well portrayed throughout. James Smith and Billy Smith, the latter a gardener, get their love affairs badly entangled. There is a double elopement, and both pairs claim the same room at a first class hotel. The gardener and his wife are locked up, being taken for suspicious characters.

"THE WORLD-WEARY MAN" (Imp), Dec. 9.—A pretty story, with a strong heart interest. King Baggott is seen in one of the parts which fit him to the best advantage, and is supported by Edith Haldeman and A. G. Balfour. The finding of the little girl on the pier and her entry into the life of the lonely man creates a strong offering in photoplays of this character.

"BEAUTY TAKES A TRAMP" (Nestor), Dec. 9.—Excellent glimpses of a masquerade ball, with a bright comedy plot attached. The hero so carefully studies the makeup of his tramp friend that their identities become sadly mixed and both are landed in jail under suspicion. The heroine with some difficulty picks out the right man and procures his release. Shown in clear, uniform pictures. A very good film.

"THE DAUGHTERS OF SENOR LOPEZ" (American), Dec. 16.—This pleasing film is another of the series of notable productions having for their locale a Spanish estate in Southern California. Much attention is paid to the costuming and character work, and there is of course the soft Southern atmosphere to draw upon, which gives the scenes the effect of having been bathed in sunlight. Warren Kerrigan assumes the part of the wealthy young Mexican. There is a fine flavor of romance in this picture, and the denouement is reached without so much bloodshed as sometimes happens. A splendid production.

"THE POWER OF LOVE" (American), Dec. 19.—A film which brings out the curious intermingling of mountain and sea folk along the coast of Southern California. The scenic effects are picturesque and the story graphically shown. The fight between the two cowboys, the father of the girls, and the jealous fisherman is a desperate encounter, well handled. Pauline Bush and Warren Kerrigan appear, ably assisted by Jessalyn Van Trump and Jack Richardson.

"THE FAIRYLAND BRIDE" (Reliance), Dec. 14.—Here is an idealized story of a girl who plays the good fairy to a sick man. She sends him notes and flowers and soon has him so much improved that he is up trying to discover who she is. The scenes are full of delicate charm, and the acting clever. It ends, of course, in a genuine, real life love affair, and the wedding picture is attractive. Something bright and new.

"HIS FIRST PATIENT" (Great Northern), Dec. 14.—This is a characteristic European comedy. It pictures a young doctor bringing a young lady to his office and being forced to account to her father for her presence there by inducing her to play sick. She is his first patient, and the case turns out to be highly successful, as he marries her at the finish. The whole is clearly set forth and will meet with favor among those who appreciate spicy humor.

"USEFUL SHEEP" (Keystone), Dec. 16.—Pictures of sheep being sheared, etc. W. H. Roche gives exhibitions of roping sheep. Instructive.

"MABEL'S ADVENTURES" (Keystone), Dec. 16.—A comedy skit in which Mabel, to test her lovers, dresses in boy's clothes and attends the theater. She gets into trouble as a result, and in the end her deception is discovered.

"HIS SENSE OF DUTY" (Broncho), Dec. 18.—There is plot and counterplot in this exciting frontier story. It centers about the predicament in which a private soldier finds himself when he discovers one of the officers making love to the colonel's wife. The private interrupts the love-making twice, and the second time almost kills the officer. His own life is endangered by this, and as he cannot speak the truth the situation looks bad for him. But he rescues the colonel's daughter in a surprisingly novel way from the Indians, and at last is cleared. There is not a dull spot in this two-reel production, and its story is far above the average.

"THE DEAD PAYS" (Kay-Bee), Dec. 20.—War marches in grim fashion through every inch of this two-reel film. It is another of those panoramic views of battle at the beginning, and the plot of the story begins among the dead and wounded. The story is absorbing and well handled. Particularly striking is the scene between the girl and the spy, which ends by her shooting him accidentally after he has written a confession clearing the hero. The Union hero and the Confederate spy unfortunately look so much alike that it was difficult to keep from confusing them at times. One of the strongest war stories we have seen.

"THE OLD GRANDFATHER'S CLOCK" (Great Northern), Dec. 7.—A picture meant to be a comedy, but it deals with things in which there is no fun. This spoils what real humor it has. It is a picture that some will like, but we do not think that many will find it a truly entertaining picture. That it is clever no one will deny. The wife's lover has to hide in an old clock from her husband. He is kept there so long that he goes crazy and thinks he is a clock. That is all.

"JACK AS WINDOW CLEANER" (Great Northern), Dec. 7.—On the same reel is this farce of a man crazy to clean things. He runs amuck through a Danish city and causes many rough-and-tumble incidents.

"THE POISONED POOL" (Eclair), Dec. 12.—An indifferent story, not one to hold strongly. There is one thing manufacturers should insist on, and that is clarity as well as brevity in subtitles. For instance, it is probable that few in any audience will gather just what is intended in this gem: "He had drunken in his dreams, and still his body drank." A miner had been left in a state of collapse by his partner at the side of a pool containing arsenic. The able partner went back to civilization, carrying the money of the disabled one, and sought to win his sweetheart, confident that the down-and-out would never get back home. The miner recovers, however, does not drink of the pool, and goes back to the home of his sweetheart just in time to accomplish the downfall of the villain.

"AUNT DINAH'S PLOT" (Imp), Dec. 14.—There are some laughs in this broad comedy.

"INTO THE DARKNESS" (Rex), Dec. 15.—A blind violinist is befriended by a man who has accidentally heard him playing. A surgeon restores his sight. A girl friend in love with the violinist fails to impress the man who can see; his attitude when blind had been that of friendship only. The musician restored to sight falls in love with the daughter of his benefactor. He writes to the friend of his dark days, telling of the good news. His sight fails; this time it cannot be restored. He writes a note to the girl he loves, telling her of his misfortune and releasing her from the engagement. He returns to his violin. The story is weakened by failure to indicate a lapse of time between the operation and the removal of the bandage, the inference being that it is on the same day. Again, there is the letter from the blind man—which, of course, a blind man could not write.

"THE LASS OF THE LIGHT" (Imp), Dec. 12.—Good melodrama. The setting is by the oceanside, of a lighthouse, a sand cliff and a rocky shore. It is safe to assume this to be one of the pictures Director Brennon made at Block Island. Vivian Prescott, as the daughter of the lighthouse keeper, and Frank Smith, as the keeper of the light, share the honors.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON

Wrong Procedure.

COMPLAINT has been made by a number of managers because I have taken the side of the operator, and have insisted on the increase of his salary. Most of these complaints have been based on the proposition that, in many places where organizations have been formed, wages have been boosted, but no attempt whatever has been made to improve the quality of work performed.

Now, there are several points of view in this matter, and it may be looked at from varying angles. In the first place, let me say that I have on many occasions pointed out to the various operators' unions that while it was perfectly right that they seek to increase salaries and better working conditions for their members, the organization still has another and even greater duty to perform, viz.: the instruction of its own members and the increasing of their proficiency as operators. It is a fact that there are, numbered among the members of a great many unions, men who neither know how to produce high class projection, or, apparently, do not care to know. Most of the unions have members who really, when it comes right down to brass tacks, know little or nothing about real projection. They could not project a good picture for five consecutive minutes to save their souls from purgatory. This is bad enough, considering the fact that they want increased wages, but the further fact that they are making no effort whatever to increase their knowledge or improve their work and that the organization is tolerating this sort of thing, and making no effort to raise the standard of proficiency among its own members, is worse still. I cannot blame managers for protesting when I am myself compelled to admit these facts, though, mind you they do not apply to all the unions.

There is, however, another side to this matter, and one which the average manager fails to grasp. My position is that the above state of affairs is about all one has the right to expect when dealing with fifteen dollar a week men. I take the position that while the organization may raise salaries without immediately bettering the work of its members, still the increased salaries will in time have the effect of attracting a better class of men to the profession of operating, or else it will compel the present men to get busy and study their business. The theater manager is supposed to be a man of some brains and reasoning ability. This being the fact, then he certainly ought to recognize and admit three propositions, as follows: (a) to produce the best work in any line of human endeavor, even though it be the humble occupation of digging a ditch, brains are required. Certainly brains are required in the operating room if high class work is to result. (b) If you want a high class man, with brains and the ability to use them, you have got to pay a fair price, no matter whether it be a lawyer, a doctor, a store manager, a theater manager or an operator. (c) The patronage of a theater, and the price of admission which can be obtained, depends, within certain limits, on what the patrons see on the screen of the theater; therefore the higher class the projection, the greater will be the income at the box-office. Admitting these things, and they must be at least to some extent admitted by any sane man, then it most certainly must be profitable to have a comparatively high class man in your operating room, who not only can put a good picture on your screen, but who has the ability to keep it there—to produce uniformly high class work.

I am going to cite you a concrete example: The next time you are in New York City go down on the East Side, and visit a few of the theaters. Then go, if you choose, to the West Side, around 23d Street for instance, and visit a few of the theaters, observing the projection closely. When you have done this go down to the Park Row Theater, opposite the main Post Office Building, observe the projection there, and see which you would rather have. The Park Row Theater has a high class operator, who puts on real projection. I do not say that you will not find real projection in any of the other houses, but I leave it to yourselves to observe the difference.

In conclusion, I want to say that I firmly believe that operators' salaries should be increased—in fact, in most cases doubled. I firmly believe that, as a purely business proposition, this would be good policy, since were it done the fifteen dollar a week man would be left behind, and within a comparatively short time the effect of the introduction of men of brains and real ability into the operating rooms would be felt. You will never get high class work on a fifteen or twenty dollar basis. It is not in the nature of things. There are exceptional cases, of course, but I speak of the rule. Also, I do not mean that $15 to $20 per week will not secure high class men in the small towns. $20 per week in, for instance, Moberly, Mo., is equal to double that sum in Chicago or New York City.

High Voltage.

Manson, Iowa, encloses a check for $2.50 for the Handbook, and writes:

> Will you please inform me as to whether it would be advisable to use a compensarc on 220 volts d.c.? I am troubled with a ghost in the center of the picture. Am using a Power's "Five" machine, one 6½ and one 7½ condenser. Can you offer any suggestions?

If you are using 220 volts d.c. I would by all means get either a Fort Wayne d. c. compensarc or Mr. Hallberg's d. c. economizer, these being the only two devices concerning which I have had evidence as to practicability and efficiency. Running on 220 volts through rheostats is exceedingly expensive. I cannot advise as to your condensers, as you have neither given me the length of throw nor the width of your picture.

Read the Department.

Indiana writes:

> After having received many valuable pointers through the Department, I believe it my duty to respond in the form of a contribution to its columns. I would advise brother operators to read carefully every word contained in the department. I am not one of the know-it-alls, but am perfectly willing to give others the benefit of what I do know. Am operating a Power's "Six-A," taking 110-volt current through a Fort Wayne compensarc, with the very best of results. Have operated more than five years, handling almost every make of machine. I like the "Six-A" very much. In the November 9th issue I see where a brother of Okmulgee, Okla., sets forth his remedy for condenser breakage. I am using a meniscus 7½ lens in front, and a common white 6½ rear lens. I also pad my lenses with asbestos, so they cannot touch the metal. I find it a very wise idea. Have done this for some time, and would advise brother operators to try it. Have only broken one condenser since I began operating, more than five years ago. I am going to give Oklahoma's cone protector a trial and see what the result is. Do you think I could use a two-wing shutter on my machine? I am getting a good light, but by using a two-winger I believe I could increase the illumination, and that is what I want. I enclose sketch showing how to connect solid wire to the lamp.

We welcome you to the department, Indiana, but see no reason why you should use the condenser cone, as you say you have only broken one lens in five years. If that is true, then you have either been using low amperage, or you have phenomenally good luck, or else you certainly are a wonder. Anyhow, you do not need any condenser protector if you don't break any. As to the solid wire connection, I have not reproduced the sketch because I do not think a solid wire should be connected to the lamp. It hasn't sufficient flexibility. You wouldn't be able to properly handle the lamp with a No. 6 solid wire connected to it. Certainly you can use a two-wing shutter. The N. Power Company will send you a two-wing blade. The price is, I think, $1. You will get more light with it—also more flicker. Better stick to the three-winger, and increase your amperage if you want more light.

Impractical.

Rock Island suggests a scheme which has been mentioned in these columns before. He says:

> Why cannot we have films made twice the present width, with two pictures or subjects, running in opposite directions? This would do away with rewinding the film. It would mean new machines and the rebuilding of those in use, but I think the change would be welcomed by operators, since rewinding would then be a thing of the past. On the machines I have seen the revolving shutters all turn with the film. If the shutter turns in the opposite direction the flicker isn't so bad. Try it. I have written Mr. Thomas A. Edison about the above ideas, but imagine he has too many other things to take up his attention.

Your scheme has been considered and rejected long ago, Rock Island. In the first place, you could not rebuild the present machines to accommodate that kind of a proposition. In the second place, you would more than double the strain on the sprocket holes and intermittent movement, and would require three tension springs, instead of two, all of which involves serious problems. In the third place, when a film broke, two subjects would be injured, instead of one, and the making of a good patch on a film that wide would be a very difficult matter. Then, too, the exhibitor would often have to take a subject he didn't want to get one he did want. He might be compelled to take four subjects, where perhaps he only wanted three, or six where he only needed five, or if he wanted seven he would have to take eight. You see, Rock Island, those things are not as simple as they seem on their face. As regards the shutter matter, Power's "Six-A" outside shutter and the Standard inside shutter move against the film, while the Edison moves with it, and the Motiograph inside cone shutter cuts the light both ways. Am not sure as to the Simplex. I believe you are in error in this matter, anyhow. The shutter closes the opening, or practically closes it, before the film starts to move, but doesn't open it until the film stops; therefore what earthly difference does it make which way the shutter revolves?

Power's Six Trouble.

F. A. Gramling, Royal Theater, Delphos, Ohio, hands us the following:

> At last I have to come to the Department for help. I thought I could handle nearly every trouble on a Power's Six, but find I can't. Am having difficulty at the present time with lost motion in my shutter spindle and spiral gear. I set and time my shutter one day, and the next day it is out. What can I do? I carry New York, 1911 license, No. 667; also I am a member of Local 41, I. A. T. S. E., Atlanta, Ga. If you do not mind telling how to take up lost motion in the above part, I will appreciate same. Say hello to the boys of 35, at the next meeting, for me; especially to Brothers Clarke and Philipps.

It seems to me, Brother Gramling, there are three things which might cause the kind of trouble you have, viz.: (a) The small spiral gear itself being loose on the shaft. (B) The shutter blade being loose in the hub, which can be remedied by tightening the three screws holding it. (c) The collars on either side of the outer box, or bearing, being loose and slipping endwise, thus allowing the shaft to have end motion. There is still another possibility, however, and that is the gears on one or both ends of the transverse shaft being loose. (I will be glad when that new Handbook is out, so that I can refer to these things by number and plate.) The shaft I refer to is the one carrying the gear into which the small shutter spiral gear meshes. Of course, it is possible your gears are badly enough worn to produce the trouble, but if that is the case, then setting the shutter would do no good at all. As I understand it, you set the shutter and for a little while it is all right, and then it gets out again, in which case the difficulty would lie in one of the above causes.

Oil.

Mr. Horace S. Wakeman, Jr., Saugatuck, Conn., sends in a sample of oil and the following letter:

While waiting for a train one day last May, I purchased a copy of The Moving Picture World at a railway news stand. I found it very interesting all through, but your department of "Projection," created a desire for more, and still more, knowledge of the subject, the result being that I subscribed for the magazine and sent for a copy of your Handbook. Notwithstanding that I am identified with the automobile business and not with moving pictures, I am still hungry for more of your work and the proof of this will be a check for $2.50 attached to this letter for a copy of that latest Handbook. Send it as soon as you can because I need it almost as much as I do my pipe, and I place a rather high value on the company of my pipe, I assure you. In addition I am forwarding to you by this mail, a sample of lubricating oil that has chambers—I am stating a fact. All valves have worked perfectly the entire run without being "ground-in." Now, it seems to the given me remarkable results. Under my own eyes, it has lubricated the cylinders and other parts of a four-cylinder automobile motor that has driven a heavy car over 11,000 miles this season, without leaving a teaspoonful of carbon or residue in the firing writer, that an oil that will lubricate so well and leave only the little residue that I found remaining, would be very satisfactory on projection machines. If not asking too much, I wish that you would give it a trial, and reply through the "Projection Department." In the meantime, I will watch the postoffice for that new Handbook.

I am, of course, glad to know, Brother Wakeman, that you are interested in our work and I thank you cordially for having submitted the sample of oil. I shall have this lubricant carefuly examined and tested, and will report later concerning the same. It apparently is an excellent lubricant.

Chicago Boys Have High Jinks.

On the night of December 4th, Chicago's Local Union, No. 2, I. A. T. S. E., held their annual ball at the Coliseum Annex, and from all reports it was some ball, too. Various celebrities in the film world were present and enjoyed the hospitality of the operators. The affair was a financial and social success. Local Union No. 2 certainly did the job up brown, and have every cause to feel proud of the excellent way in which things were managed.

License Wanted.

Kirksville, Mo., encloses $2.50 for a handbook and asks the following question:

The city of Kirksville does not know how to make out a moving picture machine operator's license. Will you please advise me as to how they should be made out?

There is no legerdemain, or mysterious process in the making out of an operator's license. It may be worded very simply, as follows: Office of the Mayor—This certifies that Mr. ———————— has been examined and found duly qualified to operate moving picture and stereopticon projection apparatus. He is, therefore, duly licensed to operate such apparatus within the corporate limits of Kirksville, Mo., for a period of one year from date. Signature, date and city seal. That, Kirksville, is all there need be to it.

Model Theater.

Mr. Frank P. Bryan, Rose Opera Co., High Point, N. C., talks thusly:

I am sending you a photograph of our theater, which was opened to the public July 4th this year, and has been doing a record business. We have installed a Mirror screen and all the necessary equipment required in an up-to-date house. Above all, we employ good men and pay the best salaries. We also have a Brisgovia, Welte pipe organ, or orchestrion which has been running continuously since the opening day without giving any trouble at all. Our staff is as follows: P. C. McIntire, prop.; in charge of the box office, Miss Alma Goldstein; doorman, Mr. Eugene White; usher, William H. Garrison; manager, Frank P. Bryan, and electrician, C. L. Vuncannon.

The photograph is not, as yet, in evidence. Friend Bryan has got the right system. He has the best of equipment and pays good salaries, which means, or ought to mean, good help. I notice, however, that he has no operator, unless Vuncannon is the operator, and if this is true, why, brother Bryan, do you name the man who makes the whole show last of all? In relative importance comes first the proprietor, second the manager and third the operator. This is true in any moving picture house. Now, friend Bryan, do not be offended. I know you meant all right. I only mention this because I have for the past two years and a half been trying to get managers to understand the importance of their operators—trying to get them to understand that after all, in a very considerable degree, the success or failure of their house will depend upon the operator. We will be glad to give space to the photograph of the theater when the picture arrives.

Bugs.

New York City says:

This is my first attempt to get an interview with you, therefore hope this letter will not be consigned to the waste-basket, because I want to ask one, great big fool question, viz.: How is it that in some titles and sub-titles and sometimes in the picture itself, a little bug or some kind of an insect is seen running over the film? Now, please do not shoot me for asking this, as I prefer to be hung. My operating room is 12 feet by 7, with a 9 foot ceiling. The rewinding room adjoins and is 8 x 6 feet. I have a 1913 Model Standard machine, which, I believe, to be O. K. That 2,000 foot business is great, since one only has to thread up every half hour. I take out every frame-up, including the one between the two reels, before I start. I also have an Edison Model B machine in case of emergency, and a Kleine dissolver. There is also an Edison Model B machine stored away in a closet, so you see my equipment is very complete. My machine motor works fine. I rewind by motor also. We get film cement by the pint and oil by the gallon (Polarine oil is the kind I use, and it is fine). We get carbons by the case here. Did you ever hear of any one buying condensers by the barrel? Well, that is what my boss did. I break one a year (and that is no bluff either). I wish you all the success in the world, both in fiction (Oh! you Railroad Man's Magazine) and projection writing.

New York, I am surprised at you! Your fool question (and it is a fool question all right) gave me one of the best laughs I have had in a long time. The "bugs" you see are indentations made by the sprocket teeth where the film has run off the sprocket. But all the same, I have not yet forgotten the first time I saw that particular thing. I looked and wondered where that spider was anyhow. What on earth do you want of a barrel of condensers if you break one a year? I am not prepared to comment on that 2,000 foot business yet. I can see serious objections as well as some things to commend in it. Buying oil by the gallon is common sense, but I do not know about the film cement by the pint business, since film cement is subject to rapid evaporation, unless kept very tightly corked.

Drop in the Throw.

Canton, Pa., writes as follows:

We are about to move into our new building, and I have discovered that there will be about nine feet drop in the throw. Previous to this I have always worked with the operating room on a level with the screen, and I wish you would tell me, through the Projection Department, just what effect the drop in the throw will have on the picture, and how any faults may be remedied. I especially wish to keep a perfect focus, and wonder if it will be possible, under the new conditions. Could you advise me what effect a Mortimer film cleaner would have on films that average sixty to ninety days old? Would you advise its use on such films, or is it valueless when the films reach that age? I am watching the columns of the World every week for an announcement of the New Handbook, but have seen none as yet. You may depend that I will have one when they are out, for I have used the other issue many times to advantage.

You have not told me the length of your throw and size of your picture, therefore I can only answer in a general way. If the throw is not too short or the picture a very large one, the drop of nine feet will not make very much difference, though it will produce some keystone effect (picture wider at the bottom than the top) and may produce a slight out-of-focus effect at top or bottom. But the latter can probably be remedied by loosening the aperture plate and slipping a thin piece of tin under the lower screws, thus tilting the aperture plate slightly. The handbook has been held up on account of shortage of paper, but will probably be nearly ready for delivery by the time this is in print. Send in your order at once. The Mortimer film cleaner is an excellent device and undoubtedly would help to some extent. I have referred your inquiry directly to its manufacturer.

Miserable Service.

Mr. Everett Wagner, operator Piedmont Theater, Thomasville, N. C., sends in samples of some miserably made patches, and writes three pages of caustic comments on exchanges which send out films in such horrible condition, as well as of operators who make such poor excuses for splices. He asked me to comment on the proposition. I would like to do so, but we are crowded for space and I have only recently had this matter up two or three times. There is sometimes an excuse for the operator, since he is not always given time to make a decent patch, even if he knows how, and is willing to; also the rewinding and splicing is often done by "Jimmy the usher," who usually knows as much about making a proper splice as a razor-back hog knows about the New Jerusalem.

There is no excuse whatever for exchanges allowing films to leave their hands in such condition through the exhibitor often demanding the reels without giving the exchange time to properly inspect them. But the exchange manager who is a real manager will not allow the reel to go out until it has been put in proper condition, regardless of whether the theater manager wants to take it in bad condition or not.

Various Troubles.

Detroit, Mich., sends the following:

I have never ventured to intrude myself before, though tempted many times to do so. I saw your ire was aroused over the Canadian tax, November 23d issue, but is that worse than a certain

$2.00 tax a man has to pay every month on his own machine, which has been bought and paid for? How about your handbook? Are you sending them out as soon as the money is received? I opened the new house at 31st and Michigan Avenues, November 16th; use Mutual service and a new Power's 6-A. Am having trouble with condenser breakage. Use 7½ rear and 6½ front, 15 foot picture. Am compelled to pull the barrel of my moving picture lens beyond the jacket to get a focus, while my stereo lens, if run forward on the rod, gives me the right focus, but too large a picture. Use a compensarc, 60 amperes, 220 volts, a. c. line. Would like to cut down to 40, if possible? Can I do this? Is it advisable to use a good grade of graphite on the gears? Have been advised yes and no, particularly no with the 6A. The feed of my lamp works very stiff. I loosened the four screws holding the feed posts, but it does not seem to help matters. Should any lubricant be put on the tracks or posts? What is the best oil to use for a 6A, and should oil or vaseline be used in the intermittent? Who are the proper city authorities to take up the matter of motor drive law with. I have a bucket of sand always handy for emergency. Sand will extinguish a fire without doing the damage water does.

The last sentence of your letter is quite true, but allow me to suggest that ordinary wheat flour is far ahead of sand for extinguishing film fire. There is no compulsion about the $2.00 tax you have in mind. It is not a tax, but a patent royalty. The Canadian tax is nothing more nor less than highway robbery. The handbooks will be sent out in the order that the money is received, and with the first thousand orders sent in to the New York office an 8 x 10 inch photogravure of the author will be given. These will be photogravures on heavy paper, and are suitable for framing. Only one thousand will be sent out with the first thousand orders, therefore if you want one get your order in quickly, as they are going to last but a very short time. Try placing thin sheet asbestos in such a way that the edge of your condensing lens does not touch the metal. Possibly that will stop the condenser breakage. Put the 7½ in front and the 6½ behind. That will not help the breakage any, but optically it is the right way. I do not know what is the matter with your projection lens, but there is something wrong if you have to pull it "beyond the jacket." It is the right focal length or else you would not get the right size picture. Your stereo lens is of too short focal length. You want a longer e. f. lens. Very likely your exchange man will trade with you. Tell him the length of throw and the width of picture you want. Graphite mixed with oil is all right on the gears, but it makes a dirty mess. I would suggest a trial of the flour paste idea, published recently, or the use of engine cylinder oil. Put a little oil on the moving parts of your lamp, then wipe it off, afterwards rubbing on graphite. The Nicholas Power Company, 90 Gold Street, New York City, will furnish you graphite; also oil suitable for their No. 6-A machine. Go to your Mayor's office and ask whom to consult about motor drives.

Loan Mechanisms.

Mr. L. A. Woodward, manager Enterprise Optical Company, Chicago, Ill., offers the following information:

> On page 770, November 23d issue, under heading of "Jumping Film," Charles City, Iowa, complains about some fault in his Motiograph. We wish to say that we have about one dozen mechanisms which we hold here for emergency use, and the owner of a motiograph machine which is in need of repair can, by making a satisfactory deposit, receive one of these emergency mechanisms for use while sending in his own machine for repairs. Our New York office also has several of these emergency mechanisms, and arrangements will soon be made to supply them from San Francisco.

All of which will be valuable information for users of the Motiograph machine. I repeat, however, that it would be well for the users of Motiograph and Power Six machines to have an extra framing carriage, with the parts all assembled complete, all ready to slip into place in the mechanism. Users of the Simplex should have an extra intermittent case, with parts assembled. The purchase of these parts is not an excessive expense. On the other hand, it is likely to effect a large saving, since it allows you to send in the extra framing carriage and intermittent case for repairs, instead of shipping the whole mechanism, thus saving time and express charges. It also allows of these delicate parts being properly fitted and adjusted in the factory. Of course, it will sometimes be necessary to send the whole machine to the factory, but ordinarily the thing most likely to get out of repair is the intermittent movement itself.

Chemical Formulas.

Brother Smith, Fort Worth, Tex., is something of a chemist and has experimented with various formulas for soaking carbons, a number of which he gives in a letter just submitted. I doubt the value of publishing these formulas, since very few, if any, operators would understand them, or know how to properly apply them. He claims that the operator can improve his light from five to twenty-five per cent., but that it will not do to just get the formula, soak the carbons and stick them in the lamp. He suggests that those having trouble with the salt soaked carbons corroding the holder, can overcome this by bending in "V" shape a piece of thin sheet copper, one inch wide and long enough to reach to the bottom of the holder, bending the top down a little so that the copper will not slip clear through. This makes the real contact between the sheet copper and the carbon, and the little piece of sheet copper can be thrown away when it becomes damaged. We thank brother Smith for submitting the formulas, and regret that we cannot see our way clear to use them. If we had plenty of space it would be done.

Very Interesting.

Mr. R. H. Rodenberg, Santa Monica, Cal., contributes some very interesting data, as follows:

> I see in November 2d issue, New York relates his experience in reading the Continental Code from his arc. I will try to help New York out a bit as to the why and wherefore. I was a wireless man before I started twisting a crank and was employed in the Installation and Trouble Department, where I encountered plenty of strange and freakish difficulties. New York is probably on an overloaded line and the wireless plant has a motor generator set, taking its power from the same circuit. When the wireless operator closes down his key he pulls the full load, and the motor robs the line. I say a motor generator set because New York says he uses d. c., whereas the key side of the wireless must be on a. c., therefore it is no doubt the motor of a motor generator set from which New York gets his kick-back. And now as to what you yourself heard over the telephone: It was caused by wireless induction, due to a certain amount of lost energy present in all wireless plants. The line you were on ran close to some wireless station, say within a block or two, and it picked up the electrolysis. Telephone companies have their share of troubles with telephones which are near a 20 k.w., or larger, wireless plant, since this induction gathers on the line, runs into the ground block and jumps into a ground via the telephone lighting arresters, which just have a thin piece of mica between two carbon blocks, leaving a spark gap. The induction jumps will cause the carbon dust to crawl and form a short circuit, thus grounding the line. I formerly worked in the Experimental Depot of the Exchange at Manhattan Beach Station, down at Sheepshead Bay, New York. The Coney Island Exchange trouble-shooters used to get theirs from our plant when we were at work. And now let me give Eastern operators, who read advertisements of the splendid winters in California, a little information. Salaries are very low and the operators' union, of which I am a member, has all it can do to keep its own boys at work at a fair scale of wages. When the good climate seekers (some spell the "seekers" s-u-c-k-e-r-s) get here and their bank roll runs short, they are willing to work for their board and anything they can get. Recently, while in an exchange in Los Angeles, a so-called operator came in looking for a position. He wanted to hold his old job until he got something else. So the booking man and I kidded him along, asking what he expected in the way of salary. He replied twelve dollars a week and that the reason that he was quitting was that the manager was cutting out matinees and wanted to reduce the salary to ten dollars. I have had generous managers offer me such a salary, but I never had the heart to rob them to that extent, as I am a pretty good lineman and can make my $3.50 per. We have a few such stomach robbers among the linemen, but it is not so bad as in the amusement business.

Brother Rodenberg sends in two postcard pictures which show him to be an all-around hustler. We are obliged to him for his very clear explanation of the wireless puzzle. His remarks concerning those climate-seeking suckers are eminently correct, as has before been pointed out in these columns.

How About This, Ohio ? ? ?

Ohio puts up the following kick, which is referred to the Ohio authorities, with several question marks appended:

> Enclosed find money order for $2.50 for copy of the handbook. I have noticed recently several designs and descriptions of motor drives sent in by operators in Ohio cities, although there is a state law prohibiting motor drives. We were running by motor until last May, when the State Fire Marshal paid us, and other nearby towns, a visit. Since then we have been cranking. Lately I found that in four or five of the principal cities in this state, the state capitol for one, they are using motor drives. Now what I want to know is why the smaller towns have to be the goat? ? ? ? ? As regards glass in the ports, it works all right, except that the stereopticon picture was out-of-focus at the bottom. For the first two or three weeks I had a chronic case of condenser breakage with the Power's Six. I tried everything I had ever seen in the department, and finally just raised the top of the lamphouse up about two inches and that was the end of the trouble.

As to the use of motor drives in cities, and their prohibition in smaller towns, any such ruling would be an outrage. A municipality cannot enact a law contrary to the state law, and if there is a state law prohibiting motor drives, it should be applied to all alike. The brother is perfectly right in saying that the smaller towns should not be made to be the goat. Ohio authorities will, however, do well to follow the lead of New York City and Massachusetts, both of which are very conservative, and allow the use of motor drives on those machines in which the film is either entirely or practically entirely closed. The stereopticon picture is probably out-of-focus by reason of some imperfection in the glass. The substitution of another piece of glass would probably remedy the trouble. Inasmuch as the raising of the lamphouse top stopped the condenser breakage, it is plain that the lamphouse has not sufficient ventilation, a condition which is overcome in the new Six A lamphouse.

Condensers.

Tuscumbia, Ala., remarks that he is running a Standard machine and getting a fine picture without much trouble. Says he has a 70 foot throw and wants to know what focal length condensers he should have. I cannot tell what condenser would be best, Tuscumbia, without knowing the focal length of your objective, and I could not figure that out unless I knew both the throw and the width of the picture.

Cracked Condensers.

Omaha, Neb., asks the following questions:

> (a) Why is it that a cracked condenser shows in the stereo and not in the m. p. lens? (b) In figuring resistance what allowance would you make for the arc?

(a) Because in one case, the stereo, the focal plane (the object being projected) is right up against the condenser, whereas in the other case it is from one to one and a half feet away. (b) The resistance of the arc is equal to its voltage divided by the amperes flowing. The arc voltage ranges from 45 to 55, but we take 48 as a medium, therefore a 30 ampere arc would offer 48÷30=1⅗ ohms resistance. The actual resistance, however, is continually fluctuating, since it changes with every change of the arc length, being less just after the carbons have been fed, hence the arc shortened, and greater as the arc grows longer.

IOWA STATE CONVENTION AT DES MOINES.

The Iowa State Convention was held at Des Moines, Iowa, December 3 and 4. President Neff arrived in the city early on December 3 and was met by Fred Young, of Cedar Rapids. The convention was called to order at 2 p. m., and everybody was welcomed by the president. The speaking lasted until after 5 o'clock, and membership was taken after the organization. The meeting, on the first day, was an open one.

At night a splendid entertainment was given in the large hall at the Savery Hotel. When the entertainment was over, exhibitors and their friends adjourned until 10 o'clock Tuesday morning, when an executive session of the members who had joined the organization was held. President Neff again addressed the exhibitors. In the afternoon a permanent organization was perfected, and the following officers were elected. J. L. O'Brien, Orpheum Theater, Oelwein, president; Fred Young, of Cedar Rapids, owner of the Majestic Theater, Fort Dodge, secretary; J. E. Tierney, Scenic Theater, Sioux City, treasurer; J. S. Bassett, Gem Theater, Independence, first vice-president; Mr. Dewey, Temple Theater, Chariton, secretary to the first vice-president, and Thomas A. Brown, Brown's American Theater, Iowa City, national vice-president.

Mr. Neff writes that great credit is due Fred Young, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, for the fine ability displayed in arranging the entertainment for the convention. Mr. Young also possesses fine executive ability and has a special aptitude for conducting conventions. Owing to Mr. Young's efforts, the Iowa convention went off just as smoothly as if a great deal of time had been devoted to preparation, whereas arrangements had to be made on very short notice.

The closing night of the convention was devoted to an imposing banquet, given in the spacious dining room of the Savery Hotel, where over one hundred partook of the excellent menu.

The next convention in Iowa will also be held in Des Moines, on the first Tuesday in May, 1913.

Following are the names of members of the Iowa League present: J. L. O'Brien, Orpheum, Oelwein; Fred Young, owner, Majestic, Ft. Dodge, Cedar Rapids; J. E. Tierney, Scenic, Sioux City; J. S. Bassett, Gem, Independence; Mr. Dewey, Temple, Chariton; Thos. A. Brown, Brown's American, Iowa City; J. H. Hart, Bijou and Star, Grinnell; J. E. Heffner, Bijou, Mason City; Mr. Pusateri, Columbia, Cedar Rapids; A. J. Diebold, Palace, Cedar Rapids; J. F. Scororo, Olympic, Cedar Rapids; L. J. Tower, Lyric, Cedar Rapids; E. M. Byers, Princess, Monticello; M. A. Wolfgram, Empire, Decorah; Mr. Engle, Empire, Ft. Dodge; L. M. Beardsley, Beardsley, Red Oak; Carl Hapler, Princess, Ft. Dodge; R. G. Fobes, Majestic, Ft. Dodge; D. E. Fyock, World, Storm Lake; Mr. Craven, Crystal, Kellog; T. J. Hanrahan, Majestic, Nevada; Paul Porter, Lyric, LeHigh; Fred E. Dever, Pastime, Iowa City; J. Edgar Boyle, Dreamland, Dubuque; E. R. Bandy, Princess, Britt.

Harry De Baggio, Star, Colfax; J. Lemen, Union, Colfax; George Lehman, Lyric, Hartley; Leslie Cotton, Cotton, Cedar Falls; U. P. Frost, Unique, Atlantic; H. L. Frost, Unique, Atlantic; M. Jaffe, Lyric, Manning; R. G. Hatchee, Temple, Chariton; Chas. C. Mendenhall, Star, Stuart; F. Arnold, Majestic, Humboldt; H. H. Russell, Opera House, Humboldt; E. G. Fargo, Magic, Algena; I. U. Ikenberry, Opera House, Adel; Ad. Wilkins, Wilkins, Reinbeck; C. L. Stevens, Royal and Amusement, Dubuque; Ray E. Jacobson, Star, Newton; C. J. Calvert, Bijou, Charles City; W. C. Schwermeker, Unique, Anita; Henry Ewoldt, Scenic, Holstein; B. L. Francis, Gem, Spirit Lake; Chas. Pewthers, Pewthers', Indianola; M. E. Chance, Persifan, Redfield; R. W. Small, Breshwald, Gilmore City; W. C. Trelou, Treloar, Ogden; F. M. Childs, Cozy, Villisca.

J. H. Anderson, Princess, Boone; B. A. Sherman, Dexter; W. G. Eddy, Orient, Marengo; D. Rouge, Lyric, Coon Rapids; A. W. Walton, Grand, Perry; F. S. Humphrey, Star, Mason City; W. N. Howland, Princess, Mason City; H. C. Jurgenson, Columbia, Waterloo; A. W. McIntosh, Crystal, Waterloo; C. E. Wirick, Majestic and Olympic, Sioux City; M. Fox, Isis, Sioux City; M. Luke, Golden, Des Moines; H. H. Burnett, Grimes Amusement Co., Des Moines; A. H. Blank, Casino, Des Moines; D. B. Baker, Pastime, Ottumwa; M. Lince, Empire, Ottumwa; Wilbur D. Ingledne, Lyric, Marshalltown; G. W. Thompson, Colonial, Marshalltown; Morehead & Fairchild, Majestic and Rex, Perry; H. E. Bomgartner, Lyric, Osage; M. P. Angel, Orpheum, Oskaloosa; G. L. Hoover, Gem, Audobun, and G. H. Schloten, Gem, Des Moines.

NEBRASKA STATE CONVENTION AT OMAHA.

The first convention of Nebraska exhibitors was held at the Rome Hotel, Omaha, on December 5 and 6. President Neff, accompanied by Mr. Frost, of Atlanta, Ia.; Fred Young, of Cedar Rapids; Julius Singer, of Des Moines; C. E. Wirick, of Sioux City, and several other Iowa exhibitors, arrived in Omaha in the midst of a blizzard, Wednesday, Dec. 4. They were met at the train by J. S. Schlank and W. H. Rubert, of Omaha, and were conveyed to convention headquarters, where a large number of Nebraska exhibitors were in waiting.

Ten minutes afterward the meeting was opened and President Neff gave an address that lasted about two hours. Most of the time was devoted to enumerating the benefits to be derived from organization. The film exchanges of Omaha were represented, and a friendly disposition and readiness to assist in making the convention a grand success was manifested.

On the night of December 5, the large ballroom of the Hotel Rome was beautifully decorated, and great enthusiasm prevailed. On December 6, when members were called for, the members given in the list at the close of this article joined the organization. Mr. Schlank had charge of securing the members and was an efficient and untiring worker. Samuel Harding, assisted by other exhibitors, was hustling all the time to secure new members.

On the night of December 6, a grand banquet was given at the Hotel Rome. The banquet hall was beautifully decorated, and flowers were in great profusion. The most beautiful ladies in Omaha graced the gathering, and everybody was imbued with the spirit of the occasion. In addition to the banquet, those present were entertained by pictures and vaudeville, and the first Nebraska convention was wound up by everyone having a good time.

President Neff stayed over in Omaha until Saturday, Dec. 7, and accompanied by the newly elected State President, W. F. Stoecker, many places of interest were visited. Mr. Neff left for Kansas City on the night of December 7. He writes that the Des Moines and Omaha meetings were grand affairs, full of action and distinguished by Western enthusiasm.

The following officers were elected: President, W. F. Stoecker, Omaha; 1st vice-president, P. L. McCarthy, Grand Island; 2d vice-president, J. W. Ballinger, York; secretary, E. C. Preston, Superior; treasurer, W. A. Walden, Hastings, and national vice-president, J. E. Schlank, Omaha.

The following list gives the names of the members of the newly formed Nebraska Motion Picture Exhibitors' League:

W. H. Harman, McCook; Mr. Robinson, Omaha; Sam Harding, Omaha; S. H. Goldberg, Omaha; R. S. Balentyne, Tilden; F. E. Goff, Omaha; C. W. Bartlett, Fairbury; A. R. Pramer, Omaha; J. E. Schlank, Omaha; J. W. Harbert, Greeley; Mr. Monroe, Omaha; R. W. Roberts, Arcadia; J. M. Bowers, Falls City; Wm. Rochford, Omaha; Burt S. Johnson, Weeping Water; J. W. Longworth, Schuyler; P. R. Carlin, C. O. Arnstead, North Bend; W. A. Walden, Hastings; S. F. Rolph, Fullerton; A. M. Beardsley, Omaha; Nicholas Amos, Omaha; O. S. Finch, Omaha; W. F. Stoecker, Omaha.

C. J. Hoffman, Omaha; R. M. Shlaes, Plattsmouth; P. L. McCarthy, Grand Island; G. F. Truman, Lincoln; P. H. Hoppen, Kearney; C. E. Hogate, Beatrice; E. L. McLaughlin, Beatrice; R. N. Oliver, Falls City; R. M. Ferris, Genoa; E. W. Verhaege, St. Edwards; C. E. Ward, Elgin; J. W.

Ballinger, York; V. W. Babcock, Seward; A. Gerke, Ravenna; E. C. Preston, Superior; O. C. Suedmeyer, Brock; E. E. DeLong, McCook; Frank L. Clark, New Castle; Joe Gorman, Lincoln; Joe Himmelstein, Omaha; Joe H. Gilensky, Omaha; A. W. Miller, Atkinson; E. E. Person, Omaha; Charles Jacobson, Omaha, and Wm. Arenson, Omaha.

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS MEET.

A meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Greater New York was held in their rooms No. 136 Third Avenue, Monday night, Dec. 9, and at which a number of prominent speakers of civic and political bodies were present.

President Trigger, in calling the meeting to order, stated that the object was familiar to all present. "You have great possibilities before you for the up-building and up-lifting of a commercial and educational business. You are all aware of this fact and know that cinematography will go on developing and improving and growing; attaining such perfection that all intelligent audiences will approve and not condemn the motion picture theaters as heretofore. We need laws, and you are the ones to help obtain these laws, but you are bad boosters. How many of you have asked your Senator or Assemblyman to visit your theaters and have told him your needs? How many have asked your respective Aldermen to give you better ordinances? How many of you can say that The New York World has not stated facts? and still we all condemn the writer of these articles as a person trying to hurt our business and we must, sorry to state, admit that he has told some truths."

"As far as the children and their admission to theaters are concerned, you will find as we all know, little boys selling newspapers going from saloon to saloon and no word of protest from the press. Yet the atmosphere of these saloons is naturally much worse than that of the motion picture theaters. Another cry, out of which they have made capital, was that quite a number of the saloons surround moving picture theaters. Where are we to go? We are not allowed to build near a church or school and now a cry goes up we must not build near a saloon. Should this come into effect all moving picture theaters must be built in line with the subway or overhead. Something MUST be done and every man in the motion picture business must co-operate, whether a member or not, he must help individually, or join this body and attain what we desire as an organization."

Mr. Trigger called upon Mrs. H. Chester Arthur, President of the Mother's Protective League, who spoke at some length on the benefits accruing from motion pictures to all and especially to children. She stated that no person was more competent to judge the wants of children than their own mother, and as she was the mother of twelve children, she considered herself a competent judge. She also mentioned the censoring of pictures and thought it unfair for any newspaper to blame the exhibitor in a matter where he was entirely guiltless, as the pictures that are run or shown on the screen in small places are shown in all the large theaters, only at an earlier date. In speaking of the environments of which so much had been said, she remarked that as they could not build these theaters near churches, hospitals or schools, it naturally befell that some of them must be near saloons, but why blame them for that, when in ninety per cent. of the cases where saloons do exist, families reside above said saloons with children. She stated that she was willing to go to Albany and endeavor to do her utmost to help amend the children law.

Mr. Jacobs of the Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis spoke on the amount of good accomplished by the motion picture theaters through the medium of the screen, etc.

A number of the exhibitors then spoke on the Folk ordinance and Committees were then appointed to visit each Aldermanic District in which the Alderman was not in accord with the above ordinance.

The meeting adjourned at 3 A. M. to meet on Tuesday, the 17th inst.

HUDSON COUNTY, N. J., EXHIBITORS' MEETING.

A night meeting of the Exhibitors' League of Hudson County Local No. 1 has been called by the State President, Greenwood A. Robinson, to take place at the Colonial Theater, 734 Demott Street (transfer station), West Hoboken, N. J., on Monday, December 16, at 10:30 p. m. Among the questions to be considered will be some kind of action against the present inspection law that has been passed by the Jersey City councilmen to the effect that all motion picture booths shall be inspected every two months, for which the exhibitor is obliged to pay an inspection fee of $5.00. This is a plain example of legal highway robbery, which the exhibitors are bound to end without further delay.

The principal topic to be discussed at the meeting will be that of a concerted action among the state exhibitors to accomplish a legal Sunday opening in New Jersey. This will be a matter in which the whole state is interested and therefore exhibitors from all parts of the state are asked to attend if possible. At this meeting the matter of the Hudson County Exhibitors' first annual ball will be taken up. So far, it is planned to hold the affair at Grand View Hall, Jersey City Heights, during February.

POLICE RAIDS AT CLEVELAND.

Mayor Baker Orders Wholesale Arrests and Seizures of Films.

Special telegraphic dispatches sent to The Moving Picture World from Cleveland, Ohio, indicate wholesale seizures of films deemed to be objectionable. Mr. Louis Becht, owner of the Mall Theater, one of the downtown houses, was arrested because he refused to stop the exhibition of the films showing the life of Lieutenant Petrosino. The crusade against alleged objectionable pictures was started by Mayor Baker under the Ohio state law, which prohibits the showing of pictures in which "crime" or "lust" are portrayed. The police censored all shows and arrested five other exhibitors, whose names and theaters follow: Miss Jane Oster, Princess Theater; B. C. Steele, Crescent Theater; Theodore Clurker, Castle Theater; Peter Bobik, Polar Theater; S. Weiss, Elmo Theater. All but Becht were running regular releases.

Miss Jean Oster was arraigned before Judge Kramer. She had been arrested for showing the picture "Aurora Floyd." The judge reserved his decision in Miss Oster's case, saying he would like to see the films displayed at the Lake Shore Film Company's exchange before announcing his decision. Other pictures that were seized by the police were "Their Lives for Gold," "The Heart of a Red Man," "Leah, the Forsaken," "The Burglar and the Rose." Managers who had advertised "The Mills of the Gods" and "The Invaders" were warned not to run them. Hearing in all cases except that of Miss Oster was postponed.

The local Exhibitors' League held an emergency meeting immediately following the raids and arrests and seizures to determine what action shall be taken in the premises. Mayor Baker's order was sweeping. He gave every policeman the power of censorship and the officers are visiting every theater daily. Manager Mandelbaum, of the Lake Shore Film Exchange, announced that he would endeavor to secure an injunction to restrain the police from seizing any more of his films and other exchanges, it is said, contemplate taking similar action.

A POLICY OF EXPANSION.

We are advised by the makers of the Motiograph Motion Picture Machine of the recent opening of an Eastern as well as Western office for the purpose of extending better repair facilities to the faraway users of their well-known machine.

The Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., whose main office and factory has for the past five years been located at 564-572 W. Randolph St., Chicago, is a pioneer in the motion picture machine industry, having been a full-going concern more than fourteen years ago. It has been apparent during all of that time that the advanced ideas in machine construction of their machine would not only place them in the lead but keep them there.

When, five years ago, this company made a five-year lease on their present factory, consisting of almost thirty thousand square feet of floor space, it was very freely predicted that the only thing to be expected was failure.

A reference to the advertisement of this company in this issue will inform you as to the location of their Eastern and Western offices and will convince the most skeptical of the wonderful growth, in a few years, of an industry which, as recently as five years ago, was looked upon as a joke.

The Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. carries a payroll averaging more than one hundred employes throughout the year. They have a force of six demonstrators now on the road and two special inspectors in Chicago alone. Their office is commodious and handsomely furnished throughout in quartered oak and their building is of steel and concrete construction equipped only with the most modern electrically driven machinery.

POWER'S INSTALLATIONS.

Power's Cameragraph No. 6 has been installed at Post Exchange, Fort Howard, Md., for the use of the soldiers and residents at Fort Howard. Power's No. 6A has been installed at the Palace Theater, Annapolis, Md.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

IT seems, from all indications, that the coupon system of advertising is still being persistently pushed by combinations which have suddenly become charitably interested in moving picture exhibitors. There is such a tender solicitude at present for the expenditures of the dear exhibitor that crocodile tears are being shed, which wily, fluent talkers engage with him in presenting their eleemosynary schemes.

The American Tobacco Company's scheme has died of inanition, and now we have others springing up with "high class"—Oh! so high class—propositions to benefit the overtaxed exhibitor. The latest is to relieve the exhibitor of the expense of buying tickets for his patrons. Coupon tickets will be furnished free if only he will blindly lend himself to the scheme of turning his picture theater into a dumping ground for advertisers who have an axe to grind. What matters it to these promoters of schemes that the motion picture has, through great travail, shed itself of its slum clothes and forced its way into the light, becoming a thing of beauty and a joy to rich and poor alike! Away down in its slum days, the moving picture found no Samaritan. These latter days, "high class" promoters passed by on the other side—every one of them. Now when, by sheer force of merit and the untiring and everlastingly persistent efforts of those in the motion picture industry, the picture has won its way into the hearts of millions, these exploiters would fain retard its splendid progress by loading it down with commercialism. They would cheapen and degrade the picture in the eyes of the intelligent picture theatergoers, who only recently have become patrons and admirers. They would fain make dollars by offering a crumb to unwary exhibitors.

While President Neff, of the M. P. E. I. of America, was in the city on Monday, Dec. 2, I called on him to get his opinion on all these coupon schemes. His statements deserve wide and careful study by exhibitors throughout this country and Canada.

What President Neff Thinks of Coupon Schemes.

My attention has been called by several members to various methods, schemes and systems of advertising, in which the motion picture theater is attempted to be used. My advice has been asked, and up to the present time I have not made public my opinion; but owing to the fact that several are trying to use the motion picture theaters, so as to advance financially their own interests, I believe it my duty to advise exhibitors where I stand upon the question of issuing or accepting coupons as part, or full payment, for admission.

We have been working for the uplift of cinematography and to place ourselves right for a long time, and now, when we are gaining favor with thousands who, heretofore, did not visit our theaters and were opposed to us, many exhibitors are being misled into the belief that their interests would be better served by accepting coupons as admission to their theaters. Exhibitors who will give this matter due consideration and talk it over with their patrons, will find, I believe, that any coupon system inaugurated will be a detriment. First, it lowers the dignity of the motion picture theater. Second, it makes the picture theater the headquarters for a system which, in my opinion, should not exist; and if these coupon systems are so high class as to be attractive to all the public, why should the motion picture theater be singled out as the logical place for coupons, instead of the larger theaters?

In my opinion, every motion picture exhibitor, who accepts coupons, is making a mistake. While he, individually, has a perfect right to accept them or reject them, I believe he will find, in the long run, that they are a detriment to him. The motion picture can live without the aid or assistance of any other inducement, and the motion picture theater should receive the full price at all times, in legal money; and every exhibitor should endeavor to place cinematography on so high a plane, that those who are continually scheming to use the motion picture theater so that they may financially profit, will discontinue their efforts to use it as a cat's paw to pull their chestnuts out of the fire.

Then again, the question arises; whether or not it is legal to accept coupons in payment for admission. I am inclined to believe that there is a national law that prohibits the use of such coupons, when used to play for admission to a theater, or to purchase articles, without a money consideration accompanying it. Under President Cleveland's administration, when Governor Harmon was United States Attorney-General, and Mr. Drummond was Chief of the Secret Service, this matter was gone into thoroughly; and, if I remember correctly, all coupons were declared illegal, and Mr. Drummond caused all those using coupons at that time, to discontinue. This coupon system seems to be a resurrection of the old coupon system, which, several years ago, was discontinued.

I would advise all exhibitors to be sure of their right, before going ahead. The number of gentlemen now in the field, who are so anxious to make the motion picture exhibitor big, easy money, is growing; and it would be well for the exhibitor, before accepting any of the various schemes, to investigate thoroughly whether the scheme is to make him money, or whether he is being used to advance the financial interest of the other fellow.

Illinois Branch No. 2 Against Cigarette Coupon.

At the meeting of Illinois State Branch No. 2, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, held Monday, Nov. 18, the following resolution was unanimously adopted, after the reading by the Secretary of the American Tobacco Company's letter, regarding the coupons of that company attached to theater tickets:

"We the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Illinois State Branch No. 2, wish to go on record against this or any other similar scheme inaugurated for the purpose of degrading the moving picture industry, and earnestly request every exhibitor, whether a member of our league or otherwise, to voice his disapproval of such practices and refrain from being a party to such methods, which are inimical to the best interests of the League and its objects."

The next meeting was held December 2, and members were advised, well in advance, to attend. Members should make it a point to attend at least once a month, and participate in all movements for the welfare of the motion picture business and the League.

Sunday Law in South Dakota on Pictures.

In a recent letter from the Attorney-General of South Dakota to the State's Attorney, the former quotes the law on the Sunday presentation of pictures in South Dakota as follows:

"I have your inquiry of the 11th inst. in regard to the legality of a Sunday moving picture show. You state that this show exhibits pictures of scenery only, and that you have prepared your opinion in writing that, unless this show was producing pictures of any tragedy, comedy, opera, ballet, farce, negro minstrelsy, contest or trial of strength, it was not a violation of the law and that the mere fact that a picture show runs on Sunday evenings does not necessarily make it violation of the law, and you ask for my construction of the law on the statement of facts so presented.

"Replying thereto, I would state that I concur in your opinion as quoted to me. Chapter 234 of the Session Laws of 1907, does not include a moving picture show which exhibits scenery only; and, if our law was to be construed so as to prohibit the exhibition of scenery by moving picture shows, I see no reason why such a construction would not also prohibit stereopticon views in churches illustrating lectures. I find no provision, in connection with our Sabbath-breaking laws, which would prohibit a moving picture show exhibiting films of scenery only, and it is my opinion that the exhibition of such pictures is lawful at the present time."

G. F. Co. Western Managers Meet.

A meeting of the General Film Company's branch managers from Frisco, Portland, Seattle, Butte, Salt Lake, Denver, Omaha, Lincoln, Neb., Kansas City, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Columbus, Cleveland, Detroit and Minneapolis, was held in the LaSalle Hotel Monday, Dec. 9 and 10. J. A. Berst, F. L. Dyer and S. Long, of New York City, were present at the meeting, J. A. Berst, presiding.

On Monday morning, December 9, a meeting was held in the same hotel, in which the Chicago branch managers of the G. F. Co., and a committee of Local No. 2, M. P. E. L. of America, participated. J. A. Berst, president of the G. F. Co., also occupied the chair at this meeting, which was also private. It is understood that this conference was amicable and had to do with the discussion of certain policies contributing to the welfare of the business. Messrs. Berst, Dyer and Long returned to New York Tuesday via Twentieth Century Limited train.

The British Board of Film Censors.

Harry A. Spoor, European agent of the Essanay Film Mfg. Co., whose main office is in London, has furnished data to his Company regarding the present censorship of films in the United Kingdom, which will be read with interest by the readers of the World.

A deputation, comprised of W. G. Barker, E. H. Bishop, G. H. Cricks, E. Reed, and Harry A. Spoor, waited on the Under Secretary of State at the Home Office, on Wednesday, Nov. 13, and laid before him a scheme for the censorship of films. After that time the matter received the most careful consideration of several committees of the Manufacturers' and Exhibitors' Associations, and a plan of censorship was evolved, which it is hoped will meet effectively all the points at issue.

G. A. Redford, late examiner of plays under the Lord Chamberlain, has accepted the position of president of the board, and he will be assisted by four examiners of films, who will be appointed by him. All films rejected by the examiners will be submitted to Mr. Redford for final approval or rejection; but, in all such cases, the manufacturer or agent of the film in question will have the right to be present at the final censoring of his film, so as to give any information required by the president and to receive any suggestions that he may make. The whole censorship organization is under the direct control of Mr. Redford, and the board forms an absolutely independent censorship, which, it is felt, is essential to meet objections by certain licensing authorities. One of two certificates will be issued by the censor for every film examined and passed by the board, and the manufacturer agrees not to make any alteration whatsoever after a film has been so passed. A copy of this certificate will be printed on the film immediately following the main title.

The object of these two certificates is to meet, as near as possible, the complaints that have been made by licensing authorities in respect to the non-suitability of certain films for children's entertainments. It is made quite clear to the exhibitor that one of these certificates designates a film as being for the adult audiences, and that such a film is not recommended for children's matinees.

The charge for censoring films will be at the rate of one shilling for 100 feet or part thereof, with a minimum charge of five shillings. This amount is to be paid prior to the delivery of the film after censoring, and the receipt for payment is to be attached to the certificate of censorship.

Premises have been taken in the center of the film industry in London, where two projection rooms will be thoroughly equipped for the use of examiners.

A certificate will be issued by the censor to each theater annually, such certificate to be printed on vellum and charged for at the rate of five shillings per annum per theater. This certificate reads about as follows:

"The proprietors of this theater have signed an agreement under which they guarantee to show only films that have passed the board of censors immediately they are available for their services, and further guarantee to keep this certificate exhibited publicly in the entrance hall of their theater." The certificate bears a number, the name of the theater and the town in which the theater is located. The closing paragraph of the certificate reads: "This certificate is the property of the British Board of Film Censors, and remains in force until Dec. 31, 1913."

Naturally, this certificate demands a prior agreement between the board and each individual theater, and it is felt that, in this direction, Mr. Redford will be materially assisted by the licensing authorities, for it will be to their interest to see that every theater is showing none other than censored films. Moreover, the board being independent, it assures the certificates being issued to the theaters by a purely impartial body. The board will be open for the censorship of all films, including "exclusives," and the same charge will be made to all, alike. These charges for censoring will remain in force for twelve months, when they will be liable to readjustment, and to a reduction, should it be found that the films issued are above the average for November, 1912, which has been taken as a basis in computing the expenses. A committee of three members of the Incorporated Association of Kinematograph Manufacturers Limited has been appointed to be responsible for the financial side of the organization, such members to retire respectively at the expiration of one, two and three months, all of the members of the association being required to take their turn in serving on the committee, so that the work shall not prove a burden to any individual member.

Chicago Film Brevities.

F. O. Nielson, proprietor of the Parkway Theater, has purchased the Stevens Theater, at Evanston Avenue and Irving Park Boulevard. He took possession on Monday, Dec. 2. The Stevens will be closed for about three weeks and in that time will be remodeled and redecorated. Stevens seats 300 people. Mr. Nielson's magnificent success in the Parkway Theater, which is now showing the finest projected pictures in Chicago, augurs well for the future of the Stevens.

A. Powell, of the May Theater, 69th Street and Center Avenue, is offering extra strong programs on Sundays and holidays at 10 cents admission, and is experiencing gratifying results. These extra programs consist of four reels with singing. On Thursdays Mr. Powell runs features only. On other days three reels are used and 5 cents admission charged. Mr. Powell deserves praise for his energetic efforts in advertising. He uses heralds and posters, and employs slides well in advance of his extra and feature programs.

On Thanksgiving evening the attaches of the Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison Street, held their second informal dance at Van Buren Hall. The event was a huge success and was attended by about 300 couples. On the same day 1,000 children were admitted to the Garfield as guests of Mr. Richards, a well known clothier and philanthropist, whose place of business is across the street from the Garfield.

John P. Harris and Dr. E. R. Walker, of Pittsburgh, visited the city recently. Mr. Harris and his partner, Harry Davis, own the following picture theaters: The Lyric and Family, Pittsburgh; the Family, Philadelphia; the Family, Cincinnati; the Avenue-Grand, Washington, D. C.; the Grand Opera House, Wilmington, Del.; the Family Theater, Detroit, and the Altmyre and Orpheum, McKeesport, Pa. These gentlemen also own the Hippodrome, Forbes Field, Pittsburgh, which seats 30,000 people. A circus performance is given in the Hippodrome during the summer months. Messrs. Harris and Davis also own a chain of ten large theaters in various cities. Four of these are located in Pittsburgh. Mr. Harris is acknowledged to have the distinction of having opened the first moving picture showhouse in America. This was the Nickelodeon, on Smithfield Street, Pittsburgh, between Diamond Street and 5th Avenue, which seated only 96 people. Mr. Harris was not quite certain as to the date of the opening of the Nickelodeon, but stated that it was either in 1904 or 1905. He ran the house for four years, and paid a rental of $10,000 per year.

The roof of the Home Theater, 1538-42 Milwaukee Avenue, collapsed Monday morning, Dec. 9. Sunday night the theater was filled with patrons, and a special matinee had been arranged for Monday afternoon, when women and children chiefly would have attended. It is most providential that the collapse took place when it did, as otherwise hundreds of people would have lost their lives. The Home seated about 700 people and is owned by R. Goldstein. It was a new theater and was opened in July last. Building Commissioner Ericsson states that the building was condemned immediately after its completion, but that the theater was opened by obtaining a special order from the City Council. A month ago the place was again ordered closed, the roof being much too heavy for its supports, according to Mr. Ericsson. Again, on Saturday night, Dec. 7, the building commissioner made out another order for the police to close the theater. When the officers got on the ground, Monday morning, Dec. 9, the building was a wreck. As a result of the collapse of the Home a rigid examination is to be made of every picture theater in the city by the building department.

"The Last Perforance"

A Two-Reel Pathe Feature.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS feature is distinctly European in character, conception and environment. It tells of an intrigue in circus life and vividly portrays the lights and shadows of that life. While markedly foreign, these films are by no means uninteresting. The photography is exceptionally fine; the outdoor settings are superbly charming, there is no lack of thrills and realism and the acting leaves nothing to be desired. Here in brief is the story: Hans von Harten, a German count and a lieutenant in the army, makes the acquaintance of Rose, a woman rider in a circus; he falls in love with her and would marry her but for the stern opposition of his aristocratic father. It does not appear from anything shown in the films whether the two marry afterward, but it does appear that the count resigns his commission in the army and joins the circus. He is very successful right at the outset of his new career. An imposing number of floral offerings is showered upon him, much to the disgust of his sweetheart, whose professional jealousy flames up and is later fanned into a passionate desire for revenge, when the count is found in what the sub-titles describe as "a compromising situation." The situation may be compromising, but I hasten to add that it is not at all scandalous or suggestive. The scene simply shows the count in the act of kissing another woman. We must assume that the count is engaged to be married to the other woman to find anything wrong in his kissing the second woman. However that may be, the first woman now begins the execution of a most fiendish scheme of revenge.

Scene from "The Last Performance" (Pathé).

Scene from "The Last Performance" (Pathé).

The count, it seems, has achieved fame with a most sensational feat of equestrian skill. He leads his horse upon a wooden platform and is then, mounted on his horse, drawn up toward the ceiling by means of ropes. The jealous woman drugs the count's horse, making it nervous and restive. Just as the count, with his "platform of death," has reached a point near the ceiling, the animal becomes unmanageable and horse and rider plunge to their death in the arena. Too much cannot be said in praise of the horses and other animals taking part in the performance. Spirited thoroughbreds are always a pleasing sight on the screen and the specimens shown in this feature are typical of the very best. What little we see of the clowns is quite amusing, especially the introduction of a nimble, capering goat.

MORE NEWS ABOUT THE MIRACLE.

Recognizing the extraordinary merits of "The Miracle" as a masterpiece of modern cinematography, the management of the well-known model motion picture theater, The Alhambra in Cleveland, have put it on with special music for a three days' engagement. From the Alhambra "The Miracle" will go to the Olympia in Cleveland. The demand for "The Miracle" has been little short of sensational, several bids were received from such far distant points as the Philippine Islands, Mexico and Alaska. Of the Eastern states nearly all have been sold or temporarily secured by options and more than half of the Western and Southern states have been spoken for. The music, that goes with "The Miracle" is as extraordinary in character as the feature itself and has created a profound impression wherever heard. Some of the best states have not as yet been finally disposed of and state right buyers may learn all details by visiting or addressing the New York Film Company No. 145 W. 45th St.

THEY WANT TO SEE THE "MOVIES."

Even the servant girl question seems to be getting mixed up with the ubiquitous motion picture. Lately a commuter complained that he could not hold his help because there was no picture theater in town, and now from Waterbury, Conn., comes this advertisement:

> WANTED—A girl to care for baby three nights a week. Baby quiet. Easy to mind. Couple want to see the "movies" occasionally. Address A. F. J., care Republican.

We presume that the girl is asked to tend the baby but three nights a week that she may alternate with her mistress in her attendance at the picture theater.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs

By George Blaisdell.

GREETING to the Gene Gauntier Feature Players! The announcement the World carries in its advertising columns in regard to the plans of Miss Gauntier and Sidney Olcott is real news—big news. Surely the statement that the splendid organization so carefully builded about Sidney Olcott is to remain practically intact will be received with pleasure by all film followers. Here is a crew every member of which is a militant unit. All are trained to team work of the highest efficiency. If it be on the cards that a picture is to be made at a certain place that picture is going to be made. If there be difficulties in the way, the difficulties will be surmounted. There is a subdivision of the work that constitutes every member of the company a substantial part of the machine—not merely a cog on a wheel—leaving the producer free to attend to his directing and his mind clear of all other matters.

Miss Gauntier brings to her new work a ripe experience and a varied experience. In her chosen field of life work she has moved fast and traveled far. She has traversed a range of activities given perhaps to no other woman of the screen. She has had much to do with the making of pictures other than working before the camera. Her crowning achievement was the conception of the wonderful "Life of Christ," which when given public presentation, will assure to her a far greater measure of world fame than she has heretofore enjoyed. Incidentally and parenthetically, this picture will do more to elevate the standard of cinematography and to confound its enemies than has any one of its predecessors. Matching Miss Gauntier's conception of this splendid work is her reverential portrayal of the mother of Jesus. Yet with a record of accomplishments such as is given to few she faces all the years in which a woman does her best and greatest work. She has unbounded energy and enthusiasm and, best of all, a love for her art. With the efficient support of Jack Clark and the other members of the company, picture-lovers will be sure of a result that will be worth while.

An evening newspaper of this city is just now in the throes of a crusade against picture houses and pictures. In the issue of Tuesday, December 10, both in the news and editorial columns it has much to say. Here's a sample from the latter department:

> The lurid scenes of blood and cruelty, the contempt for order and authority, the fun-making that makes light of drunkenness, gambling and worse, offered in many of these films to the eyes and minds of boys and girls of ten and twelve, this newspaper has described in detail.

This is sensational talk. If it be a true description of what is taking place certainly something should be done about it. But probably no one knows better than does the man who penned the foregoing extract that to say the least it is not a fair statement. Pictures are cleaner and far better this month of December, 1912, than they have ever been in the dozen years that dramas have been thrown on the screen. Where has the complaining newspaper been all these years? Let the great newspaper keep down to hard facts—there are enough of them without going afield for romance. If it knows of a picture theater that does not obey the law yank its proprietor into court. Don't hold up to public execration 600 men for the shortcomings, if there be shortcomings, of some of them.

"Thou hypocrite," says the Good Book, "first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye." Which is more or less forcibly brought to mind by a perusal of the issue under discussion. On the next to the last page are two columns of a serial story bearing the title "The Coming of the Law—The Two-Gun Man's Greatest Novel." Here is an extract from the synopsis:

> "Ten Spot," one of Dunlavey's ruffians, comes to the Kicker office to murder him. . . . "Hollis's men capture "Greasy," Dunlavey's henchman, rebranding Circle Bar cattle. Hollis saves "Greasy" from lynching and plans to take him to the sheriff—one of Dunlavey's heelers.

Is there not here a tangible suggestion of a lurid scene of cruelty, of contempt for law and authority? Let us free our minds of cant. Pictures are not perfect, of course; but those who attempt to better them should come into court with clean hands. Many men and many women have worked for years to make pictures morally cleaner than is the speaking stage. They have succeeded beyond question. But they have worked quietly—with no accompaniment of brass bands—and they are working today. They will continue working. It may have been forgotten that even the much-belabored manufacturers contribute substantial sums to the maintenance of the board of censorship. This may be a good time to remember the fact.

If the Sunday issue of the paper in question will devote a full page to pictures, praising the good films and condemning the bad, showing wherein they are at fault, it will be shown that more can be accomplished in a fortnight by constructive, helpful criticism than ever will be by blindly condemning about everything and everybody connected with the industry. There are many manufacturers seeking the best; encourage them. Furthermore, it is safe to say that no one page of a newspaper would interest more readers than would a page devoted to motion pictures.

The following story appeared in a Chicago paper last week. "E. H. Calvert of the Essanay Film Mfg. Co., will pay ten cents for one hundred turkey wishbones." This ad appeared in Tuesday's morning paper and up to date (Thursday) Mr. Calvert, the popular leading man of Essany's Eastern comedy stock company, has received forty-five of the "Good Luck" bones. The object, as told to a reporter, dates back some years ago when Mr. Calvert was a student at the University of Wisconsin. It seems that Mr. Calvert was smitten with a fair coed who, when leaving the college, presented Mr. Calvert with a turkey wishbone and told him it meant good luck, and to carry it on his person always. His good fortune and prosperity is credited to the wishbone so he wants a hundred of them to mail to his friends at Christmas time.

Exhibitors will please note this.

A Cosmopolitan Film Magnate

Mr. Kurt W. Linn, the Well-Known Globe Trotter, Locates in New York After an Extensive European Trip in Quest of Features.

By Hugh Hoffman.

TO be a cosmopolitan moving picture man is to have an advantage in the moving picture trade. The important parts that Europe and America each play in the motion picture industry are equally large and are to a great extent interwoven one with the other. Yet, in foreign countries ideals and ethics vary from those in America, and vice versa.

American film manufacturers have at times sent pictures to Europe that did not sell, because the European mind did not get the local meaning of the story. The same may be said of the European product coming to America, except that the Europeans have erred in their estimate of American morals. They did not know in the early beginning that American morals and ways of living vary much from their own. It was a long time before most of the European manufacturers were forced to realize that smut is not comedy.

Then there has been the mix-up in languages. English titles written by Frenchmen have long been an embarrassment to American exhibitors, and no doubt the same may be said of foreign titles written by over-confident Americans. Of late years these differences in European and American films have become less and less, and to this improved condition both sides of the Atlantic are indebted to the cosmopolitan film man.

A cosmopolitan film man is one who understands trade conditions in Europe, America and other countries. Such a film man is K. W. Linn—a cosmopolitan of rare attainments. He is one of the few who were naturally destined to act as go-betweens for Europe and America. One of the prime qualifications for such a vocation is that a man must be a linguist; in addition to which he must have spent a good number of years as resident in various parts of the old and the new world, and then know his business as well as the man he is talking to.

MR. K. W. LINN.

There is scarcely a city or town in America or Europe that Mr. Linn has not visited at some period of his existence. This dapper gentleman, whose portrait adorns this page, is a native of Rhenish Prussia, coming from a small town near Bingen. This makes him a German by nationality, yet he speaks French or German like a native by reason of being raised on the French and German frontier. Besides these, he speaks more correct English than half the Americans you meet in the ordinary course of the day.

Twelve years in America have surely Americanized the man who was once a schoolboy in Alsace-Loraine. Five years of this time have been spent in the motion picture business in various branches of the work. Mr. Linn was first engaged by Pathé Frères in 1907 at a time when they were establishing branches in various cities. At that time Pathé Frères were general dealers in motion picture supplies as well as producers of pictures, and their branch organizer became very familiar with everything pertaining to the film business.

Shortly after the Patents Company was formed, Mr. Linn was sent to Chicago by Pathé Frères in the capacity of Chicago branch manager. In that position he worked wonders, and in a brief space of time put the Chicago business on a paying basis. Later on, when Pathé Frères decided to discontinue their branch offices outside of New York, Mr. Linn took to the road as special representative of the Pathé Company. In this capacity he toured the United States and Canada, visiting hundreds of cities and towns, and making a multitude of friends among exchangemen and exhibitors.

His trips were an especially good preparation for the work he was to take up later, because it gave him an insight into American trade conditions such as may only be obtained by first-hand observation. In the spring of 1912, Mr. Linn decided that he knew enough about the international motion picture business to engage in it on his own account. He accordingly set sail for Europe with the intention of looking over the field for such pictures as could be imported into America with any reasonable expectation of success. Among the European producers he impressed them thoroughly with American ideas in regard to film subjects. He gave the continental manufacturers a clear idea of what was wanted in America, and with a number of them he signed contracts to take their entire output, provided they could conform with the ideas he had put before them. Mr. Linn returned to this country with agreements as the American representative of a chain of studios in various parts of Europe. These various studios, of course, will put out subjects of the widest possible range and these will vary from the multiple-reel feature down to split-reel comedy, including numerous educational subjects.

And speaking of comedies, it is Mr. Linn's intention to go strong on the comedy. From many observations in America he realizes that comedy productions are at a very low ebb and he is making sure that nothing good in the line of European comedy will escape him. As an evidence of his good faith in this matter, one of his European contracts will be of particular interest to Americans. It is not generally known that Max Linder, the well-known Parisian comedian, is marketing the films in which he appears through a company of his own. Many of these comedies will be marketed in America by Mr. Linn.

The list of regular importations will include, besides the comedies, dramas of unusual strength and merit; historical plays of fact and romance, accurately produced; classical presentations that adhere literally to the original masterpieces of the modern languages. Then there will be the bewitching and amusing trick pictures in the making of which the European manufacturers have always excelled. Scientific and Educational pictures will keep pace with the demand, and last, but not least, there will be forthcoming many of those magnificently colored film productions that Europe only seems able to supply.

It is with films of this degree of excellence that Mr. Linn will be identified. Only the best subjects will be entertained by him. His favorite slogan is "The Cream of the European Market Selected for America." These European imports will make their American appearance under a general title; they will be known as the "Cosmopolitan Films," which is about the most appropriate title that could have been selected, under the circumstances.

EGAN CONTEST AWARD.

It turns out that the award of two prizes to Nell Shipman, in the recent scenario contest held by the Egan Motion Picture Company, was really less suspicious than it appeared. In fact, investigation seems to show that it was actually due to a genuine coincidence and that although a relative of the double winner was connected with the contest he did not make the awards and the prize scripts could not be identified until after the decision was made. Moreover, the lady is an experienced photoplay writer, and comparison of the prize-winning manuscript with others submitted indicates that they were probably entitled to the award on merit. The lady has placed at the disposal of the writer such evidence as prompts this further unsolicited explanation.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE WOMAN BEHIND THE MAN" (Solax).

Women have changed the map of Europe; women have wrecked careers, and women have been man's incentive, his motive to success. The success or failure of man depends on the woman who is behind him. The moral of this story shows what misery a woman can cause a man if she does not live within his income; on the other hand, there is a parallel case showing the antithesis; how happy and successful a man will be if his wife understands him, encourages him, and makes his home warm and comfortable, so that when he goes to business he works energetically and effectively, because he has no bad home influence to detract his attention.

Scene from "The Woman Behind the Man" (Solax).

The story covers a period of ten years. In this time while Mr. and Mrs. Spendthrift have been going down, Mr. and Mrs. Frugal have been going up the "Ladder of Success." The end finds the Spendthrifts separated. Mr. Spendthrift is thrown out of a saloon, a wreck and a bum. Mrs. Spendthrift is seen in a hall bedroom, seeing a vision of her former self. She is determined to get fine clothes, and leaves her hall bedroom, and takes the road open to a poor woman who has extravagant ideas. Mr. and Mrs. Frugal have pushed forward, have a happy home and prosper.

"A CHRISTMAS MIRACLE" (C. G. P. C.).

A miracle play is always certain of an appreciative audience, and particularly at this season of the year. It is the essence of mystery and at the same time suggestive of peace and contentment. In no other way than with a motion picture camera is it more perfectly obtained, for the reason that the miraculous effects can be made practically instantaneous. For these reasons every exhibitor should book "A Christmas Miracle," made by C. G. P. C., and released on December 24. Here is the story:

The opening scene is Christmas eve in the humble home of a poverty-stricken widow who is struggling to feed her three little daughters. After the little tots have finished their scanty meal they are put to bed. Following the French custom they leave their tiny shoes at the fireplace and pray to Santa not to forget them, while a silent tear starts from the mother's eye. An aged wayfarer with a pack on his shoulder solicits alms at the widow's door. As he warms his hands at the fireplace he tells her a story of repeated refusals of assistance. He is hungry. The widow gives him the last crust of bread from the cupboard and he leaves the house breathing a prayer of thanks.

The church bell soon summons the congregation to midnight Mass and the villagers respond in goodly numbers. The old man is passing and he lays his ragged pack in the snow at the church door. The first clue to His identity is disclosed when He raises His hand and transforms the rags into an infant. Several churchgoers pass without noticing the little mite, but the widow on the steps of the church hears its plaintive wailing. She gathers it in her arms and taking it home she places it in an improvised cradle at the fireside. She wakes the children from their dreams and shows them the Christmas present. As they gaze enraptured on the babe there is suddenly a great light. The door opens and with a background of falling snow, the Giver of all things stands framed in the doorway. He raises His hand in blessing and with the gesture the babe is transformed into a doll, the little wooden shoes are filled with toys and the whole scene is changed from one of poverty to one of plenty. Then the Spirit disappears.

A film splendidly done and yet not overdone. It will be released December 24.

"THE VIRTUE OF RAGS" (Essanay).

This is a splendid story of wealth versus conscience. It is an object lesson, taught only as an Essanay object lesson can be taught, with extreme care and excellent portrayal of the story by a company of par excellent players.

A collector calling on a poor family in a tenement dwelling and, finding them facing starvation, decides that a little money given to them would be better than pressing them for the rent. He returns to his employer, Grouch, a crabbed old gentlemen, who discharges him for not getting the rent money. Grouch calls at the tenement and has the widow put out. After doing this "kind act" Grouch makes a visit to his club, where one of the members, being informed of his selfish and inhuman act, asks him to join the rest of the boys in a drink, that has been "fixed" with a sleeping powder. Grouch drinks, and falls into a heavy slumber. The boys now dress him up in old clothes and, taking him in an automobile to the park, leave him on a bench. A policeman passing the bench notices the supposed tramp, wakes him up and orders him to "move on." He is later refused admittance to his home and is finally thrown into a station cell, where his friends find him asleep. They re-dress him and take him back to the club where, on awakening he believes it to have been a dream. Regenerated through the virtue of rags, he restores the widow to her rooms, installs new furniture and leaves with the satisfaction of knowing he has made reparation for long years of misery.

Francis X. Bushman plays the part of Old Grouch, Helen Dunbar as the Widow and Bryant Washburn as the collector.

This production is booked for release Dec. 17th.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S PROMISE."

For the week of December 16th, the Essanay Company will release two powerful and entertaining dramas, one of which will feature Mr. G. M. Anderson in his world famous character creation of Broncho Billy.

A pretty Western girl rejects a cowpuncher admirer for Broncho Billy. Snake, the rejected suitor, swears revenge and immediately proceeds to the village barroom to load up with ammunition, both for the gun and stomach. Broncho strolls into the salon and, finding Snake in a pleasant humor for "taking lives," decides to leave him alone. A quarrel is prevented by a good samaritan and Broncho returns to his bunk house. On reaching home he finds a note written to him by his fiancee saying that he must not shoot Snake if he values her love, her father having been shot in just such a manner. He immediately goes to her home and promises her that he will not kill Snake. The following day, Broncho sees Snake force his attentions on his sweetheart by kissing her. He wants to kill him on the spot, but remembering his promise puts up his gun. That evening at the town saloon, Snake pulls a gun on Broncho and threatens to shoot him. Broncho reaching back to steady himself on the bar, pulls his own gun, and makes Snake drop his. Broncho then shows Snake that the revolver is unloaded. This completely cows Snake, who leaves the town disgraced. Broncho and his pretty sweetheart are left alone to plan their future happiness.

Bessie Sankey played her part admirably as Broncho's sweetheart and Brinsley Shaw as Snake. This production is booked for release Saturday, Dec. 21st.

"THE STORY OF A KISS" (Eclair).

A kiss of any kind is often very likely to cause trouble. The candy kisses may cause indigestion; two pool balls kissing may lose the game; kissing the wrong girl at the wrong time has broken up many a happy home; and even kissing the right girl at the wrong time has been known to create a deal of unpleasantness. The story of the kiss told by this picture is one of the right-girl and the wrong-time complications.

A house party was taking place at the Sherman's country home. Hector Richards is in love with the daughter of his hostess ("Billie" Baer), and has every reason to believe that his affection is returned until he attempts to steal a kiss from the girl and is rewarded by a slap in the face, and she tells him that she will never, never marry him until he is able to secure a kiss from her to be given to him of her own free will.

Hector tries in many ways to win a kiss from the fair Alice—even going so far as to kidnap the young man who is to play Romeo to Alice's Juliet in an amateur performance that they are to appear in. Alice discovers the wily Hector and frustrates his plans. Again, at a charity bazaar he inveigles her into selling a kiss, and once more she escapes the trap. Finally, as a reward for his perseverance, she yields and kisses the young man of her own free will, and from the manner in which the kiss is given, we should say it is indeed a loving one. With that kiss our story ends.

Characteristic Scene from the Well-Known New England Play, "Quincy Adams Sawyer," the Three-Reel Feature of the Puritan Special Feature Co., Inc.

A MAJESTIC DRAMA AND PUNCH COMEDIES.

A WORLD man dropped in at the Carlton Laboratories to inquire what was doing in the way of new pictures. He was turned over to C. H. Weston, who has just put out his first dramatic picture for Majestic. Heretofore his work for this company has been confined to comedies. Mr. Weston in "The Clue in the Dust," has made a drama of 124 scenes. It is from a scenario written by Alice Inwood, and is based on an occurrence in Irthlingborough, England. It portrays the dangers of accepting circumstantial evidence as conclusive. In this case the evidence would have seemed conclusive under the circumstances. The story "goes over," there is no doubt of that. Furthermore, the plot is novel, if not new; if not new, it has a new twist. "The Clue in the Dust" was released Dec. 15.

Thomas Morgan has turned his son out of doors because he is displeased with the wife selected by the son. Several months later the father gets word from the son that he is going to pay a visit to his old home. On the afternoon of the day on which the son is to call in the evening, the father goes to a jewelry store and purchases a diamond necklace. He is watched by a crook, and followed to his home. The crook looks through a window and sees Morgan press a spring and gain access to a secret room. Also he sees him move a painting which rests on the floor. The crook gets into the house. He cuts the eyes from the painting and hides behind it. He sees Morgan go to the secret room. The son calls as he had said he would. There is a quarrel. After the departure of the son the crook is seen by Morgan. There is a struggle and Morgan is killed. The crook goes to the secret room and secures possession of the necklace. He then hides behind the painting. At the first opportunity he escapes. The police are called in. They are told of the presence in the house of the son, and promptly place him under arrest. Young Morgan's wife goes to Brien, a detective, for help. The detective, through the aid of a glass, discovers in some dust the imprint of a signet ring. He discovers the painting with the eyes removed. Also, he finds the secret room. Leaving the house, Brien observes a bellboy going to a tailor's shop with a suit of clothes for repair. The suit matches the bit of cloth the detective has found on the iron fence surrounding Morgan's house. Brien obtains employment as a waiter in the hotel. He discovers a well-known crook at one of the tables. The crook wears a ring that corresponds with the imprint. The rest is easy. Young Morgan is freed and the crook is sent up for trial. The role of the detective is taken by Albert Craig. Arthur Finn plays the crook. They both do good work. So does the entire company.

Mr. Weston also showed to the World man two comedies he has made for Punch—"A Near Tragedy" and "The Mischievous Brother," to be released January 2. In the former there are featured two midgets—Herbert Rice and Nettie Phillips. They take the role of children who are carefully put to bed by the nurse. The parents are spending the evening out. The children decide to play papa and mamma. Mamma is ill and papa becomes the doctor. Also the "child"—a doll—is sick. Accordingly the doctor decides the "child" requires more blood. A large bottle of red ink is emptied into the inanimate body. Much of it is spilled on the bedclothes. A new gown of the lady of the house is cut to fit the young mamma.

The steps of the maid on the stairs warn the mischief-makers that it is time to hide. The maid calls in the policeman with whom she has been spending the evening. The gory surroundings look like murder. The parents are called home. The children are properly spanked.

In "The Mischievous Brother" there will be many laughs. It is the old story of the little innocent who is never happy unless he can make miserable the beau of "sister." Herbert Rice has the role of the youngster. Others who have prominent parts in the cast are Martha McGraw, Paul Scardon and Ed Weston. One of the most amusing bits of this half reel is the trouble flowing from the iron man in the corner. The shell has been occupied by a disturber who passes out his gentle taps on all who come his way. He separates the big sister and her sweetheart, their friendship terminating in a real row. He gets the maid and the big cook into a muss, but right here he comes to grief. The enormous bulk lands on the hidden individual and crushes him.

"THE CHRISTMAS GIFT" (Great Northern).

As a comedy offering, "The Christmas Gift" is calculated to prove one of the most amusing that has been presented by the Great Northern Film Company. It is a simple story, but it is acted so cleverly and produced with such perfect photography that its makers insist it must make a strong appeal wherever shown. In brief it may be stated that a fond husband plans a surprise shortly before Christmas and buys a gift of diamonds for his wife. He hides them in an old coat which he had discarded and then awaits the arrival of the guests who have been invited to attend the holiday dinner. A miniature tree has been placed upon the table in the reception room and after each of the guests has been presented with a token, the fond husband excuses himself and seeks the apartment in which he has hidden the diamond pendant intended for his wife. To his dismay he finds that the gift is missing and later learns that his wife has disposed of the contents of the wardrobe to a second-hand clothing dealer. The comedy in the picture is shown when husband and wife desert their guests to make a tour of the city in order to locate the tailor who had bought the coat containing the Christmas gift. After a long search they find the tailor, and the gems are found in the pocket of the prized coat. When husband and wife return to their home they find their guests asleep, but after explanations have been made the festivities are resumed.

The American Theater Curtain & Supply Company reports the sale of two large Radium Gold Fibre Screens to Mr. Gus Sun of the Columbia Theater, Eria, Pa., and the Columbia Theater, Springfield, Ohio. Also two to Josiah Pearce & Sons Amusement Company of New Orleans for their twin theaters, the Princess and the Empress at Dallas, Texas, and one to Robert Hamilton for his beautiful new theater, the Hamilton at 60th St. and Lansdown Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE GIRL OF THE MANOR.

Every picture cannot be a masterpiece nor does any single subject usually excel in all departments of perfect picture making. But in "The Girl of the Manor" the American has scored a distinct triumph in each and every phase that constitutes perfection.

The story is a mystical tale of a melancholy miss who lives under the guardianship of a heartless aunt, who seeks to hasten her death, that she may inherit the estate, by condemning the girl to utter seclusion in the magnificent gardens and allowing her no human companionship save a crippled servant, horribly repulsive, and who is addicted to the morphine habit. Jack Kerrigan, as a handsome young man visiting at a neighboring hotel, meets her, and when the clandestine meetings become known to the aunt, she plots with her own sweetheart, the Count de Villiers, to inform the young man that the girl is the insane wife of the Count.

Seldom before have handsomer backgrounds been seen in pictures. Every one of the scenes constituting this picture was made in that peer of Winter resorts, Santa Barbara, where the magnificent gardens of the Hotel Potter, that Ten Million Dollar Edifice, could be used. It is a picture of splendid powers dramatically, is delightfully told and will charm with its wonderful photography and stunning backgrounds. This subject will be released Saturday, December 28, 1912.

Carl Warr, alias Carl Riedelbach, the lunatic who recently appeared at the Los Angeles central police station with an ingenious infernal machine which he threatened to blow up unless the police brought the president of the Southern Pacific railroad before him so that he could compel the latter to raise the wages of employees, was taken into the superior court for trial December 4. Camera men for the Universal Company were on hand to photograph the picturesque prisoner and his dynamite machine. Pictures were also taken of the police detectives who stunned him and opened the machine before it exploded.

Knocking the Cigarette Deal

Editor Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—We are herewith enclosing a copy of a letter which we have sent to the ——— Magazine. If you have the space, kindly publish same.

We feel more proud of The Moving Picture World than ever. Exhibitors should be, and we believe are, thankful that they have a consistent and able champion for their cause in the M. P. W. We know that you could have sold your space to the American Tobacco Company for a good sum, but for the good of the business you turned it down. Gentlemen, we feel sure your stand will bring forth the hearty approval of every right-thinking exhibitor in the country, and your prestige will be stronger than ever.

Yours for the success of the business,
BEACH & KRAHN.

——— Magazine,
New York.

Gentlemen:—We are indeed greatly surprised and shocked at seeing the advertisement of the American Tobacco Company on the back of the ——— Magazine. We have always felt very proud of this magazine and have boosted it to our patrons. But now we feel as if it were something we did not want to sell, and must apologize every time we sell a copy. If the advertisement is continued we will have to cancel our order for future copies, as it would not be consistent with our policy, in conducting a place of high moral amusement, to handle anything that would encourage the youth to smoke cigarettes. Also we believe it would bring in all the cigarette smoking fiends of the neighborhood and cause us a loss of business.

We understand, of course, that we do not have to accept their coupons, but any house accepting their coupons is going to suffer, and in turn will cause brother exhibitors to suffer. We are therefore writing this letter in the hope that it will be for the betterment of the picture exhibitors in general. We old picture men well know that the Anti-Tobacco League of this state will take this matter up and make capital of it.

Gentlemen, we are vitally interested in the motion picture. We feel that this matter was not presented to you from the exhibitor's viewpoint, and that you are innocent of intentionally thrusting upon us something which is not wanted.

Yours for the good of the business,
BEACH & KRAHN.

BOARD OF CENSORSHIP TAKES NOTICE.

December 9, 1912.

Motion Picture World,
17 Madison Avenue,
New York.

Gentlemen:—Enclosed is a copy of a letter we have just received from Mr. Whitney of Oakland, California. The National Board of Censorship have taken a very definite stand against this scheme and congratulate you on your editorials denouncing it. We sincerely hope that you will continue to denounce the proposition until every exhibitors' league in the country have gone on record against having motion picture theaters used, as Mr Whitney says, as advertising mediums for the American Tobacco Company or any other tobacco company.

Very truly yours,
THE NATIONAL BOARD OF CENSORSHIP,
W. D. McGuire, Jr., Executive Secretary.

Oakland, Cal., Nov. 29, 1912.

To the National Board of Censorship:

In the Sunday Telegraph, Nov. 10th, 1912, there appeared this advertisement: "$500,000 given away free for moving picture theaters. With Tokio Cigarettes. Exhibitors, get your share."

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, No. 2, of California by unanimous vote absolutely decline to recognize this method of using their theaters to advertise the American Tobacco Company's or any other tobacco company's products.

There are billions of cigarettes annually smoked by old and young in the United States, and our theaters will not yield to the seductive "bait" for added nickels; our object is to bring this class of amusement to the highest standard—entertaining, clean and educational.

We are not attempting to restrict the sale of cigarettes or to pose as reformers, but in so far as encouraging the sale and consumption of this article to the millions of patrons of the motion picture theaters, it is "taboo" with No. 2, and we trust that the National Board will immediately take this matter up.

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE No. 2 OF CALIFORNIA,
1123 Broadway, Oakland, Cal. E. B. Whitney, Secretary.

BASEBALL COMMISSION GOES TO COURT.

Will Attempt to Secure Decision That It Has Exclusive Right to Pictures of Championship Series.

Israel Ludlow, a lawyer of 50 Broadway, New York City, representing the National Baseball Commission, has obtained from Magistrate Paul Krotel in the Jefferson Market Court summonses for the appearance in his court on Thursday morning, December 19, at 10 o'clock, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, of 1600 Broadway, and the Commercial Motion Picture Company, of 145 West Forty-Fifth Street. The two companies are charged with "taking and carrying away without the consent of the management motion pictures of a baseball game between the New York Giants and the Boston Red Sox."

The National Baseball Commission awarded to Pathé Frères the concession for taking the recent inter-association series. Pathé Frères is not a party to the present action. It is the desire of the National Commission, according to its attorney, to protect its concessionaires in the future.

A MELIES TITLE.

The attention of exhibitors is called to the G. Melies advertisement of last week from which the title was erroneously omitted. The same is now supplied; it is: "A Woodland Christmas in California."

CORRESPONDENCE

LOUISVILLE.

WHEATLEY GLASSCOCK, a blind singer and violinist, has been an attractive feature at the Novelty Theater, Louisville, during the past two weeks. Mr. Glasscock's ability as a musician is above the average and Novelty patrons were delighted with his work. Glasscock is a Jeffersonville, Ind., boy, being a graduate of the Blind Institute and Conservatory of Music at Indianapolis, Ind. The young fellow, though totally blind, will shortly invade vaudeville.

March 1 has been set as the date for the closing of the Grand Theater, New Albany, by Michael Switow. The old theater will be razed at that time and a new house erected. A seating capacity of 1,000 is provided in the plans and specifications, which have just been completed.

The Princess Amusement Company of Louisville, has increased the admission price in both the Casino and Orpheum Theaters, to 10 cents. Four reels of first-run pictures will be shown in the future, in lieu of three exhibited heretofore. In addition, a musical act of some kind will be put on, which will be changed weekly. The Columbia Theater, also operated by the Princess, under the style of the Vaudo Amusement Company, is now the only motion picture house on Fourth Avenue which charges only 5 cents admission. The Orpheum Theater now has the distinction of being the only moving picture theater off Fourth Street which charges 10 cents.

Louisville exhibitors have received notification that R. S. Shrader, general manager of the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis, has not only recovered from his recent illness, but following that development entered the bonds of matrimony, wedding an Indianapolis girl. Mr. Shrader and his bride will honeymoon in the West, being home to friends in Indianapolis the latter part of December.

McDaniel, president; W. F. Grau, vice-president and

The front of the Majestic Theater, Louisville, is being redecorated at a cost of several hundred dollars. No interruption to business will be suffered by the alterations. The rendition of classic music by the Majestic's vocalists is still attracting comment in Louisville and is apparently scoring a genuine hit. The latest presentation to be encored was the trio from "Attila," which brought Messrs. Ramsey and Davidson and Mrs. Olive Schaarf much note.

Spending a couple of days in Louisville, A. C. Farrell, purchasing agent of the Central Film Service Company, made arrangements with A. F. Mayer, Louisville manager of the company, for the establishment of a supply office in the Kentucky city. In the past it has been necessary for exhibitors to send to Indianapolis for carbons and other material, no Louisville concerns carrying them. The Central, however, will pay special attention to the supply end of the business in the future. Machine compensarcs are to be carried as well as other necessary material. Motion picture machines, including two Simplex, one Standard, two Power's 6a and two motiographs will be set up in the supply department. A new office has been leased in the Tyler Building for the benefit of the supply office. A. F. Mayer will have supervision over it, though a mechanical expert will have immediate charge.

Bloomfield Brothers, owners of the Pastime Theater, of Winchester, Ky., have made a change of policy, now using the Mutual program in their house.

The Manring Theater, of Middlesboro, Ky., opened in that town recently, under the management of Otto Brown, with a two-reel Thanhouser feature, "Undine." Mr. Brown has secured a six-piece orchestra, which is capable of providing music for any film. The house has been improved in various ways and is expected to prove a success. The Brown firm, consisting of father and son, also operate two other houses in Western Kentucky.

The Orpheum Theater Company, which will operate a theater in Carlisle, Ky., has filed articles of incorporation. Those interested include J. B. Glenn, J. C. Tureman, and S. G. Vaughan, all of Carlisle. The opera house of the town has been leased and will be opened for motion pictures late in December.

Work on the New Rex theater, on Ninth Street, Hopkinsville, Ky., is progressing rapidly and the new house will be opened the latter part of December. The house is ready for business, with the exception of the lobby. New equipment has been purchased and the theater will be thoroughly modern in every respect. Moving pictures only will be used. The Rex Amusement Company will control the theater. Officers of the corporation are: R. F. manager; J. L. Shrode, secretary and Jewell W. Smith, treasurer.

Cincinnati, O., is to have a moving picture house for colored folk exclusively, moving pictures to be included in the program. The Lincoln Amusement Company has closed a deal for the purchase of the northwest corner of Fifth Avenue and John Street, the deal being kept under cover until it had been completed in detail. Stewart & Stewart, architects, have completed plans for a house to contain 604 seats. The new theater will have a frontage of 33 feet, and will be 99 feet in length. The present tenants have been notified to vacate and work on the new theater will begin in the near future.

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE United Cigar Makers' Union of Boston is ably supplementing the good work of The Moving Picture World against the adoption of the American Tobacco Company's scheme to increase the sale of its cigarettes by a coupon deal with electric theaters. At a mass meeting held at Faneuil Hall, Boston, this union vehemently scored the proposition and cautioned all members against visiting any theater that had agreed to cash these coupons.

Rush Brothers of Millinocket, Me., were not at all daunted by the fire that completely destroyed their theater some time ago. They are now building a new, modern and thoroughly fireproof theater at Millinocket that will have a seating capacity of about 1,500. It is hoped that the new house, which will present vaudeville and pictures, will be ready by January 1st, 1913.

Manager Owen of the Bangor (Me.) Opera House claims that he has seen "the writing on the wall" and has turned his theater into a photoplay house. The opera house has been playing to road shows, but they didn't seem to hit popular fancy.

Manager George I. Appleby of the Mutual Film Corporation has returned from a very successful trip through Maine in the interests of his concern, and reports he lined up houses in every town he "worked." Mr. Appleby also looked over the Canadian territory. Before long he will start out on another trip.

Messrs. Powers and Craig have been having most satisfactory business since they opened their new theater, the Gem, at Caribou, Me.

Mr. R. D. Marson has taken with him Mr. Frank McKay, who has been an employe of the Boston office of the General Film Company. Mr. Marson was formerly manager of the New England branch.

Mr. George K. Robinson, well known in this section as a repertoire manager, has forsaken these things in order to take up the position of manager

ALL THAT WEBSTER SAYS—AND MORE—YOU WILL FIND IN THE

Simplex

We have the design and also the material in the Simplex without which the precision would be of no use.

Considered from every point of view, it is truly a remarkable motion picture machine. In justice to yourself, Mr. Exhibitor, you should investigate its merits. Read what one of our many satisfied users has to say about it:

"I want to say that a part of my success in this town, which was a hard proposition to get in on, has been due to the perfect projected picture which is possible with the Simplex. I have used a Simplex for fourteen months, and it has been that many months of satisfaction and perfect curtain results, and I think I am in a position to know what a good projected picture is. I wish to say this as a closing remark for the Simplex: It will do anything any other machine will do and it will do it easier and better."

of the Orpheum Theater, Haverhill, Mass.

The National Theater, Boston, exhibited pictures of Pope Pius X in his daily walks at the Vatican, last week. The reel was a business puller, according to Manager Haley.

"Frenzied Finance," a three-reel subject, was liberally advertised in the papers by the Pastime Theater, Boston, and Manager Alland reported the end justified the means.

Mr. John Watts, who was lately manager of the Shawmut Theater, Roxbury, Mass., has been succeeded by Manager Chenoweth, who is giving the same shows of vaudeville and pictures that have been in vogue at this house of late.

The sale of the Hub Theater, Boston, is announced by Mr. Simon Rudnick, a member of the corporation which owns the Old South and Washington Theaters of that city. It is understood that the present lease of the Hub, which has about a year to run, will be unchanged. Manager "Joe" Mack of the Hub will continue to give his programs until that time. It is rumored that Mr. Rudnick will change the policy to stock company attractions when he comes into control. It is also persistently reported that Mr. Shoolman, a well-known Boston real estate man, is "in on" the deal.

N. E. Goldstein is building what should be one of the finest theaters in Springfield, Mass. This house, which will seat 3,000 at least, is having no expense spared to make it absolutely fireproof and artistic. The house, which is named the Broadway Theater, has a first-class location on Broadway and Bridge Street, and should open to big business. By pushing ahead rapidly it is hoped to be able to open the Broadway the first of April, at the latest. Vaudeville and pictures seem to have the inside track at present as the policy.

Moving pictures are assured by Revere, Mass., on Sundays. The vote was easily carried, as 4 to 1 was the final count. The Federation of the Brotherhood of Churches is evidently so taken up with its long-sounding name that it has yet to see the light with regard to motography, which accounts for the fact that the organization did its level best to have no Sunday photoplay shows in Revere.

On December 5th the Kincaid Theater of Quincy, Mass., threw open its doors to the public. It is a beautiful house, seating upwards of 1,500, and should make good. Manager Wardwell states he has a dandy location on Main Street, and the first few days proved that Quincy has been waiting for a good quality photoplay and vaudeville show, served in a high-class theater.

Every one in these parts will be happy to learn that their old friend, George Morrison, has returned to Boston, practically completely well again, after his long sojourn in the West. Manager Morrison held forth as manager of the Scenic Theater, Revere, and the Scenic of East Boston before his failing health sent him West.

The fact that L. W. Atwater is now sales manager of the Nicholas Power Company is greeted with enthusiasm throughout the New England trade. Mr. Atwater formerly "made" that territory, and the "boys" remember him as the man who delivered what he promised every time.

The Bijou Theater, Worcester, Mass., on Millbury and Lamartine Streets, has been leased to J. J. Greeko. The theater was formerly operated by the Worcester Amusement Company. A straight picture show is contemplated by Mr. Greeko.

Harry Labinger reports that he has just purchased the Star Theater, Holyoke, Mass., which he will operate as a moving picture theater.

The Suburban Amusement Company of Natick, Mass., has incorporated in Massachusetts for $12,000. Fred L. Harris, William H. Buehler, Arthur Dedrickson and George L. Abell are the promoters.

The Cambridge Theater, Cambridge, Mass., has brought suit in the local superior court against James G. Carroll & Company, seeking to restrain the latter from operating machines for the manufacture of shoes, claiming that this violates the peace and quiet of the theater. The theater was leased by its present promoters with the idea that peace and quietness were to be maintained at all times. The Carroll Company secured their lease with the same understanding. The owners of the building now claim in court that the lessees of the theater will cancel their lease with them unless the noise ceases, which they ask the court to see to. It appears that Carroll can't make his profit without noise, and that the reverse is true of the theater. It would seem as if one of the two must quit the premises, and as the theater is the main part of the building, it is up to Carroll to move.

The Buick Garage, Main Street, Hartford, Conn., will soon be no more, as a photoplay house is scheduled to take its place. The location is a good one and the right sort of picture house should do well there.

Hartford, Conn., stage employees had their annual dance and entertainment recently, and the affair was reported a success.

Rice Brothers report that they have completed arrangements to open a moving picture show at Windsor Locks, Conn. The Burnap Opera House has been secured as the theater.

Hot ashes are named as the origin of a fire that threatened to destroy the Premier Theater, Fall River, Mass., on Rock Street, December 1. The fire department had a stubborn blaze to fight, and the recall was not sounded for 2 hours after the first call for aid was received. The loss will probably be $5,000, or a trifle less. William J. Dunn is the owner of the building, and the damage to his property is fully covered by insurance. Marcus Loew is the lessee of the Premier, while Louis M. Boas is general manager, and Charles Benson is the resident manager. Insurance will probably fully cover the latter's loss, which shouldn't exceed 400 dollars. Several reels of considerable value were removed without loss by James Sutcliffe. The house is now being put in shape again, and should be open in about one month.

Here's news that will sound like real music in the ears of those sincerely interested in the forward march of motiography:—Moving picture shows will be given in the city of Boston, to encourage the extended use of school buildings as educational centres. Mayor Fitzgerald has finally approved contracts for four moving picture machines. These machines are to be installed in Charlestown, East Boston, South Boston and Roxbury high-schools.

The Boston office of the Mutual Film Corporation, scored another knockout when it placed its service into the Pastime Theater, Boston. Manager Alland of the Pastime is notorious as a particular man, and he had to be thoroughly convinced of the quality of the reels before he decided to forsake Licensed service, which he had been using steadily for three years.

On January 1, the buildings on Scollay Square, Boston, which are upon the site of the new million-dollar theater, will be torn down. The writer has it on good authority that a yearly rental of $60,000 was refused by Mr. Gordon, the promoter, with whom Mr. Max Schlooman is associated. As this figure is the yearly interest of one million dollars at 6 per cent, it is easily seen that the writer correctly calls it "the million-dollar house."

The F. H. Thomas Company, 689 Boylston Street, Boston, is exhibiting in its windows Edison's moving pictures for the home, school, Y. M. C. A. or club. Regular Edison releases are shown in the windows, and the small machine is attracting much attention. The Thomas Company shows three different lenses and three different lighting equipments.

At the Kodak Exhibition at Symphony Hall, Boston, this week, moving pictures formed an important part of the programs.

Keith's new theater, St. John, Canada, is in trouble, due to the fact that it has been discovered that the pillars supporting the main entrance encroached two feet on the sidewalk. However, the plans had been approved by the building inspectors and the local authorities were forced to allow the matter to drop. However, the pillars were re-set, on the ground that the theater did not care to profit by an error of the building inspectors. The house, which has now been named the Imperial, is nearly ready for its opening, when it will show vaudeville and pictures at prices ranging up to 30 cents.

Mr. Keith has decided to install Mr. W. H. Golding as manager of the Imperial Theater at St. John, Can. Manager Golding at present is acting as manager of the Nickel Theater of that city. The Nickel is a much smaller house, also owned by B. F. Keith, and will show picture shows as soon as the Imperial opens.

The Music Hall, Milford, Mass., which was destroyed by fire last winter, and which has since been idle, has been purchased by Mr. Charles Atkinson of Boston, who is now re-building the theater. It is understood that Mr. Atkinson's Corporation has decided to give Milford something very nice in the way of a theater, to seat 1,100. Vaudeville and pictures are scheduled as the policy, with Mr. Franklin Thompkins as local manager.

Mr. George P. Dykeman reports that his Bijou Theater, Lawrence, Mass., has opened to mighty good business. This house, which was formerly the Birkand Theater, was entirely renovated and generally improved, and opened on November 23. Five reels of Licensed films and illustrated songs seem to have caught on in good shape.

Mr. Chris. O. Brown reports that Hoyt's Opera House, South Norwalk, Conn., is doing a dandy business, and that he has completed a deal whereby Mr. Charles Griffin of Danbury, Conn., is to build a first-class theater, to be leased by Mr. Brown. A house seating 1,400 is on the docket, and March 1 should see the Danbury house ready. A fireproof, strictly up-to-the-minute house is proposed for Mr. Brown.

The New Boland Theater, Taunton, Mass., should surely be ready to open on January 1. This is a 1,200-seat house, and gives every promise of being a most representative theater, built expressly for the exploitation of vaudeville and pictures.

Mr. Victor J. Morris, manager of Marcus Loew's Orpheum Theater, Boston, announces that he has decided to institute a children's matinee educational feature, to start January 1. In this project, Mr. Morris has secured the active co-operation of local educators, the school board and teachers.

Abraham Hoffman, who stole property from the dressing-rooms of Gordon's Olympia Theater, Boston, and from many other houses, has been arrested and held in 2,000 for the grand jury.

H. C. Parsons, of the theater bearing his name at Hartford, Conn., reports that the Durbar in Kinemacolor did very well on December 2, 3, 4. The Parsons, as a rule, plays nothing but high-class legitimate shows, but broke the rule for these truly fine reels, which New England particularly likes.

Mr. J. W. Greeley, manager of Greeley's Theater, Portland, Me., has opened a branch office for W. D. Church, the Boston vaudeville agent. In this way, Maine can be more thoroughly covered.

The "Queen Elizabeth" reels made a big hit at the Rockland Theater, Rockland, Me., according to Manager Al. V. Rosenberg, who showed them December 5-7.

William Patten and his son, George Patten, have secured a lease of the Bates Opera House, Attleboro, Mass., and report that vaudeville and pictures are making good. Long ago, Mr. Patten had charge of the Columbia Theater in that city.

Maybe a certain Alfred A. Kellman, of most every Massachusetts city, is mighty active now-a-days! Here are some of the corporations which he has recently promoted:—Park Theater Amusement Company of Taunton, a $2,500 concern; Kellman's Feature Films, Incorporated, of Boston, a $5,000 concern; The Pastime Amusement Company of Lawrence, incorporated for $2,500, and the New Premier Theater Company of Lowell, also a $2,500 promotion. Mr. Samuel V. Grand is named as a member of each of the above concerns, together with Mr. Kellman. Theaters are owned in the various cities above mentioned, all of which are doing very well. In Boston a feature film business is carried on, and of course, the Kellman theaters are able to offer unusually good shows on this account.

Building Commissioner of Boston, Arthur G. Everett, has taken issue with the local Finance Commission in regard to changes recommended in reference to theaters and other places of amusement, expressing a belief that if the Finance Commission's recommendations were carried out, most of the theaters built before 1907 would have to be abandoned. The commissioner contends that the legality of such an act is not within his province to pass on. The Finance Commission, in its report, states that the protection afforded the theaters at present is inadequate, but that the law relating to theaters is also inadequate. The inspection of theaters is satisfactory to the commissioners, but certain defects in the theaters are beyond the control of the Building Commissioner's department. Below is given the recommendations of the Finance Commission, that will be taken up, either by the department, or by a new legislative act, and will include every building of public assembly converted into a theater since August 1, 1907:

"In every such place built in a block, not on a corner, there should be two open courts, or passageways, extending from the proscenium line to the line of the street.

"The entrance should not be more than one step above the level of the sidewalk of the main street, and the stage not more than five feet above the said level.

"Every theater and place of public assembly having a stage with scenery or other combustible material thereon, should have a fireproof proscenium wall.

"All aisles should be of the width prescribed by section 88 of the act.

"Inclines in level of floors should be of the grade prescribed.

"The aggregate capacity of the foyers, lobbies, corridors or passages on each floor or gallery should be sufficient to contain the whole number to be accommodated on such floor or gallery.

"Each stage should have not less than two exit doors.

"No mirrors should be placed so as to give the appearance of a doorway, exit, hallway or corridor, nor should there be any false doorway or windw..

"The size and location of the exits should be as prescribed in sections 95, 96 and 97."

Mr. Newman, the famous lecturer, is giving his talk on "Munich to Belgium," with moving pictures, at Symphony Hall, Boston.

The Newburyport, Mass., Woman's Club, held a conference in the vestry of Central Church, that city, to which were invited the educational committee of the Massachusetts State Federation of Woman's Clubs. E. H. Chandler, secretary of the Twentieth Century Club, Prof. Maria Sanford of Minnesota University, and Mrs. Henry Mulligan, all spoke at length on "Moving Pictures," and "Moral Education." Mr. Chandler's speech was a particularly effective one, telling of the wonderful advances made by motography in every way, and dilating on the high moral tone of the pictures. "It is useless to stand off and say, what are we going to do with moving pictures," said Mr. Chandler, "the question is, how much good are they going to do us?" Mr. Chandler remarked on the fact that Bible subjects are made, which he called "a very good thing, as it brings us closer to the Bible when we see the things in the pictures, rather than by reading." Mr. Chandler calls grand opera usually immoral, and makes a most favorable comparison between the opera and the picture. In closing, the gentleman stated: "One bad feature of the picture show is that it has been connected with vaudeville. There should be a law passed to eliminate vaudeville from picture houses." Why write about the admirable speech of Mr. Chandler? It speaks for itself. It shows he knows his subject thoroughly, and has the ability to tell the truth about the results of his investigations. Mr. Chandler is a true friend of motiography, as this writer has stated more than once in these columns in the past.

At NAPOLEON'S COMMAND

December 2, 1912. Cines-Kleine. Two Reels.

This is a story laid in the time of Napoleon's great triumphs. A Lieutenant, on leave of absence, bids farewell to his sweetheart and rejoins his army. Two years elapse and the Lieutenant has not returned to his sweetheart. She becomes impoverished and marries a Sergeant, who sends her to his mother's home in Paris. Years afterwards the Sergeant has been promoted to Field-Marshal, and he, together with his wife, is now in the court of Napoleon. During the court ceremonies the wife of the former Sergeant meets her false sweetheart, who has also been promoted from Lieutenant to Marshal. Her husband and old sweetheart meet on the field of honor. Napoleon hears of the intended duel and orders the officers to their commands. During a battle that follows soon after both the Marshals are wounded. The wife, in searching the battlefield for her husband, finds near him her old sweetheart.

THE GREAT STEEPLECHASE

November 29, 1912. Pathe. Two Reels.

A thrilling race that is sure to send the blood tingling through the veins of every human is the principal feature of this extraordinary offering. As the race nears completion startling falls become frequent. Coming into the stretch the first and second choices are but half a length apart. The favorite makes the last barrier with ease, but the next horse tops the hurdle turns a complete somersault, crushing its rider beneath it, and leaving the jockey-lover to win the race—and the girl.

THE STOLEN SYMPHONY

November 25, 1912. Lubin. Two Reels.

A beautiful story of a poor young musician who has composed an exquisite symphony.

A famous musician obtains the score of the symphony and adds new laurels to his already great triumphs. Upon denouncing the great artist as a thief, the young composer is sent to an asylum; later he obtains his release and appears in a concert where the famous artist is playing the now world's great symphony, demonstrates it is the genius of his brain and is proclaimed to the world.

BILLY'S BURGLAR

November 22, 1912. Vitagraph. Two Reels.

A daring capture of a notorious burglar by a brave boy. This is a thrilling adventure in a fast speeding automobile and a funny predicament of a negligent policeman.

The Stars of the Vitagraph Company are cast very happily in this splendid production.

KERRY GOW

November 18, 1912. Kalem. Three Reels.

This is a play that the Kalem Company has gone to Ireland for and brought back with the true atmosphere and every real characteristic of the Irish soil and Irish heart. The plot of the play is a regulation one, wherein the villain's efforts are frustrated at every turn, and the story ends with him on his way to jail and the lovers preparing for the wedding. The Irish landscape is produced and the remarkable attention to details makes the picture a really great one.

THE GROTTO of TORTURE

November 15, 1912. Pathe. Two Reels.

The persistence of an English lover wins him a bride from the recesses of a Hindoo temple, a woman who, knowing the punishment which will follow her action, still listens to her lover. Her whereabouts are unknown for a long time to the High Priest, but one day he finds her home and sees in its cradle her infant son. The Hindoo departs with a piece of the baby's wrap. This he uses to give the scent to a vicious leopard which is set free and hungrily picks out tre trail back to the cradle and steals the child.

The mother gives chase, and her husband with an armed guard, boards an elephant and follows her trail. The mother tracks the leopard to the secret entrance to the Grotto of Torture, where she is seized and hurled into the torture room. Her husband reaches the cave a few moments later and rescues the mother and infant child.

The Underwood Typewriter

Again proved conclusively in a public demonstration its Superior qualities in

Speed Accuracy Stability

Operated for eight solid hours (continuously) by eight of the world's fastest typists, in half hour relays, one Underwood Typewriter (taken from stock) produced the magnificent total of 55,944 words, averaging nearly 10 strokes per second. The crucial test of Stability was here shown. Nowhere, at any time, has a typewriter turned out such a tremendous amount of work in the same time. This is a world's record.

The UNDERWOOD TYPEWRITER in the International Speed and Accuracy Contests won

First Nine places in the World's Championship.
First Four places in the World's Amateur Championship.
First Two places in the World's School Championship.

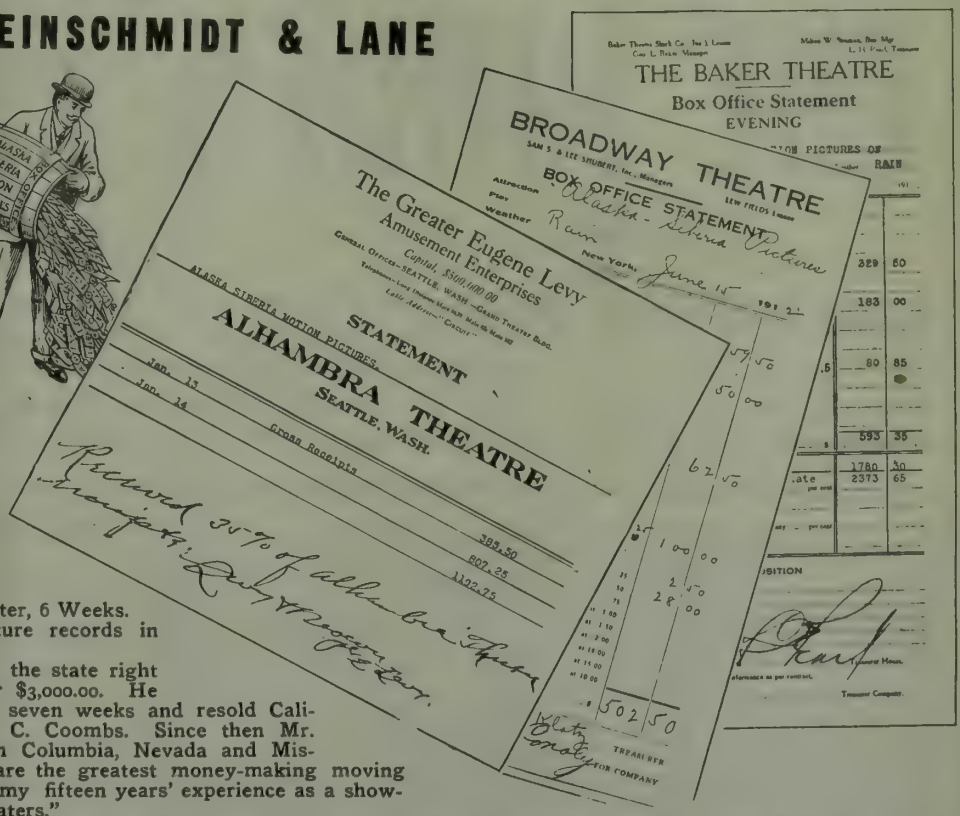
CARNEGIE MUSEUM EXPEDITION

ALASKA-SIBERIA MOTION PICTURES

Taken by KLEINSCHMIDT & LANE

Played in the Greatest Theatres of America



New York: Hammerstein's Victoria Theater.
New York: Maxine Elliot's and Broadway, 7 Weeks.
Chicago: Palace Theater, 7 Weeks.
Philadelphia: Garrick Theater, 6 Weeks.
San Francisco: Savoy Theater, 6 Weeks.
Los Angeles: Mason Theater, 6 Weeks.
Breaking all motion picture records in California.

Herman J. Brown bought the state right of California from us for $3,000.00. He played San Francisco for seven weeks and resold California for $5,000.00 to J. C. Coombs. Since then Mr. Brown has bought British Columbia, Nevada and Missouri. He writes: "They are the greatest money-making moving pictures I have seen in my fifteen years' experience as a showman and manager of theaters."

Imitation is the Sincerest Flattery and a Sure Proof of Success

Beware of lately advertised Alaska-Siberia motion pictures alleged to have been shown only in New York and Chicago. We will prove to you that they have been exhibited for the last two years under the names of Tourographologues, Travelogues, Arctic Pictures and many other aliases in Y. M. C. A.'s and Hotel Halls throughout the United States.

Our films cannot be copied or re-enacted, so the best imitators can do is to appropriate our name "Alaska-Siberia Motion Pictures" to catch the unwary State Right buyer and to lure the New York public by imitating the great electric sign we used on the Broadway Theater "ATOP OF THE WORLD." INVESTIGATE.

Fifteen thousand feet were taken on the Carnegie Museum Expedition by Kleinschmidt and Lane, and out of this were chosen six reels of marvelous action pictures. Such scenes as dredging, hydraulic mining, trading, etc., although suitable for a Y. M. C. A. or lecture hall we did not dare to offer a state right buyer, but to compete with our imitators we offer them for 8c a foot to our State Right buyers.

A Happy New Year

is assured! We face 1913 with courage and confidence! We have planned yesterday for tomorrow! Today becomes the past mighty fast, and although the future is eternal, tomorrow becomes today almost before we are through anticipating it. We have prepared for 1913—and 1913 is nearly here! The following list of masterpieces, to be presented to the public in 1913, substantiates our enthusiasm and will transfer some of it to you—the promising hopes to be fulfilled in the coming cheerful year!

SARAH BERNHARDT in her latest and greatest triumph "Queen Elizabeth."

JAMES K. HACKETT in his original role in the "Prisoner of Zenda," Daniel Frohman's greatest success. (Released in January.)

JAMES O'NEILL as Dantes in his most famous play, "Monte Cristo."

MINNIE MADDERN FISKE in selections from her repertoire. Several of her greatest and most memorable creations.

VIOLA ALLEN in several of the greatest characters in her dramatic success.

MRS. LESLIE CARTER in one of her noted dramatic impersonations.

HENRY E. DIXEY in a special dramatic version of Shakespeare's "Seven Ages," arranged on an elaborate and sumptuous scale.

WEBER & FIELDS in a characteristic comedy, "A Trip Around the World."

LILLIAN LANGTRY in one of her dramatic plays.

WILLIAM FAVERSHAM and JULIE OPP in "Julius Caesar," one of the greatest achievements in the history of the stage.

THE CLANSMAN, Thomas B. Dixon's greatest success.

And to be announced later, other famous stars now being arranged with, whose names have lent dignity and distinction to the contemporary stage, and whose artistic genius will thus be immortalized for the great benefit of posterity.

SELIG.

HARBOR ISLAND (Dec. 23).—General Arieno, the last grandee of the old Spanish regime, refuses to sell a certain sea-girt tract in California to a big corporation for harbor purposes because it will dispossess his poor fisher folk. The railway discovering that his grant has a defect of title, take forcible possession, trusting luck to fight out its claims in court. Their harbor engineer who has been called for this project, has fallen in love with a fair Californian at the closing of a mission school. She makes her home at the house of her uncle General Arieno, and when she returns there and finds her lover directing the invasion against their ancient estate, she gives him the hardest fight of his life; but, love finds a way and it ends well for all concerned.

RODERICK'S RIDE (Dec. 24).—A doctor, summoned to a mountain ranch finds the little girl of the household dangerously ill, but asserts that her life can be saved if a certain medicine can be procured within two and a half houre. Roderick, the brother of the little girl, volunteers to make the ride,—twenty miles—and return in the time specified. On his way to the drug store he arranges for "relays", and comes back with the medicine in time to save the ailing child's life.

A COUNTERFEIT SANTA CLAUS (Dec. 25).—A poor father, maddened by the prospects of his children having no Christmas presents, undertakes the desperate remedy of robbing to secure them. Like a thief in the night he invades a great mansion on Christmas Eve and is mistaken by the curious and wakeful children of the household as Santa Claus. His penitence voices itself in a pathetic note, that falls into philanthropic hands, so that he gets the needful employment and the little comforts he coveted so much for his own loved [illegible]

THE LITTLE ORGAN PLAYER OF SAN JUAN (Dec. 26).—Padre Augustine of the Capistrano mission, an accomplished musician, rescues a lovely little Spanish girl from a brutal father and adopts her as the child of the church. She becomes an accomplished organist; but elopes with a good-looking good-for-nothing Phillippi. She pays the penalty of her folly, and eventually leaves her abuser and returns to "sanctuary", to solace by her music and finally saves the mission and the pious Padre through the same ministry.

HOW THE "DUKE OF LEISURE" REACHED HIS WINTER HOME (Dec. 27).—Percival, a master-mind in the army of the deliberately unemployed, visits a fashionable restaurant and piles up a large meal by impertinent orders, but, before he gets a chance to eat he is detected and thrown out. He breaks a store window and so loudly proclaims his guilt that the police do not believe him. He tries to get arrested for "mashing," but the police again laugh at his futile efforts. He starts to begging and the police levy on his cash contribution. Finally he picks up a well-filled wallet, and is then arrested as a thief, so he spends six months where it is warm, and water is used externally and internally.

A PAIR OF BOOTS (Dec. 27).—Humorously works out the visit of a sleepy tramp to a well appointed house, where his presence inspires terror and a call for the police.

KALEM.

THE TWO RUNAWAYS (Dec. 23).—Little Freddie is the son of Jackson, the bank clerk, and has for his only playmate, Bunkie, a simple-minded old man who lives across the road. Jackson returns from work one evening and finds the two playmates engaged in a friendly scuffle. He takes the boy into the house and orders the eccentric old man to go home.

That night Freddie decides to run away. He crawls over the back porch and going to Bunkie's window, induces the old man to join him. It is a dark night and they lose their way in the woods. During the night a band of desperadoes visit the bank in which Jackson is employed and escape with several packages of valuables. They cross the pathway of the two runaways, whose identity they do not detect, and believing they are pursued they hide the money in a cave.

Through a peculiar chain of circumstances, Jackson the next morning is accused of the robbery and is placed in jail. Meanwhile Bunkie and Freddie find a resting place in the cave and discover the package of valuables. While they inspect their new found wealth the sheriff passes along and discovers them. He escorts them back to the bank, where explanations follow and Jackson is liberated.

THE SHAUGHRAUN (Dec. 25).—An extended review of this three-reel special subject by the Kalem Company was published on page 1065 of the issue dated December 14.

A BUSY DAY IN THE JUNGLE (Dec. 25).—John and Mack, two modern Munchausens, decide to hunt big game in the jungle and do not overlook the notebooks in which they are to keep an account of their experiences. On the border of the jungle John shoots a rabbit and makes the following notation in his diary: "Killed before breakfast this morning, two lions, three elephants and one giraffe." In their travels the brave hunters are pursued by a ferocious lion and hastily climb a palm tree. The lion leaves in disgust but continues the chase when the unsuspecting hunters decend.

John and Mack discover a band of cannibals in the distance and find themselves between two fires. They take a chance on the cannibals, however, as the lion is close at their heels, but they find they have left the frying pan to fall into the fire. The cannibals prepare for a feast day and John, taking out his notebook, inscribes: "Captured by the cannibals on the 17th of March. Good-by." While making this notation he observes a statement in the book that an eclipse of the sun is scheduled. Just at that moment the sky begins to darken and John, playing upon the credulity of the savages, claims to be responsible for the extinguishing of the sun. The natives fall prostrate and the mighty hunters make their escape.

BRAVE OLD BILL (Dec. 25).—Bill spends most of his time on the seashore where, clad in a bathing suit, he tells many manufactured stories of his bravery in effecting rescues. Two young girls, becoming tired of Bill's boastfulness, decide to teach him a lesson. The alleged lifesaver is put to the test in a laughable series of incidents and decides to abandon his daily pastime.

Hopewell Rubber Company and is in love with Tom, the president's son. Tom returns from South America with a new formula for the manufacture of rubber. Newspaper reporters visit the vessel when it arrives in Quarantine but succeed in securing little information from the young manufacturer. However, from advices they have gathered they take it upon themselves to publish an article calling attention to Tom's possession of the new formula.

When the article comes to the notice of Hastings, the manager of a rival rubber company, he becomes alarmed and determines to secure the formula by strategy. He is given a cold reception when he attempts to bribe Agnes and therefore, resorting to desperate means, he employs two accomplices to assist him in entering the office of the Hopewell Company.

That night Agnes and Tom go for a drive and take her pet dog along with them. As they pass the office building they notice a light in the window and go up to investigate. They discover Hastings and his men busy at the safe and they are made prisoners in the private office. Tom and Agnes succeed in removing their bonds and attempt to write a note beseeching help. They can find neither pencil nor pen and fear that the noise of the typewriter will alarm the robbers. Agnes therefore places a blank record on the phonograph, dictates a cry for help, and the cylinder is placed around the dog's neck. The dog, lowered from the window, runs to the Hopewell home.

Hopewell's butler discovers the phonographic record and places it on the machine. He arouses his employer and both hasten to the office, accompanied by two policemen, in time to liberate Agnes and Tom and effect the capture of the criminals.

A MOUNTAIN TRAGEDY (Dec. 23).—Nell living in the mountains with Kincaid, her guardian, makes the acquaintance of Danforth, a young prospector. For many months Kincaid has been laboring on a worthless claim and when he meets the young prospector he determines to dispose of his property through misrepresentations and a process of "salting." As soon as the sale has been effected, Kincaid packs up his belongings and taking Nell with him, he hastens away from the mountains. Danforth becomes suspicious and secures the services of an expert, who informs him that the claim is worthless. He therefore visits the Kincaid cabin, only to find that the unscrupulous miner has fled. The young prospector overtakes the coach and pleads with Kincaid to restore his money, but to no avail.

As the stage coach continues on its journey it is held up by Bud Haines, a "knight of the road," whose features are concealed by a mask. Kincaid believes that the highwayman is none other than Danforth, who has taken this means of securing his money by force. A posse is formed and starts in pursuit of the robber.

Meanwhile, as Danforth returns home, his horse breaks its leg and he is obliged to shoot it. As the young man trudges along the mountain road he overtakes the desperado, who has been wounded by a shot from the posse and is about to die. Before he expires Haines scribbles a note stating that he commited the robbery. Danforth covers the body of the highwayman and taking up the package of valuables, he goes on his way, only to be apprehended by the posse. Explanations, followed by a visit to the body of the robber, are the means of vindicating Danforth, who insists upon making personal restitution of the valuables in order that he may retain sufficient of Kincaid's money to repay him for his bad investment. Kincaid is furious, and when he attempts to take Nell away the young woman decides to trust her future to

LUBIN.

THE MOUNTEBANK'S DAUGHTER (Dec. 23).—Herbert Strickland, a young minister, is called to the camp of a band of wandering players to attend upon the death bed of a woman. He becomes fascinated by the wild beauty of the dying woman's daughter, Rosa, and after the woman's death he is unable to resist the impulse to revisit the camp.

Rosa has been driven from the camp by her father in a fit of drunken rage, and Strickland finds her asleep by the roadside. He takes her, home with him and gives her into the keeping of his housekeeper, and both strive to make her forget the old life. Her father, however, does not give her up so easily. Upon Strickland's refusal to restore her, he complains to the Vestry.

The tongue of scandal begins to wag in the Parish; the girl is ostracised and finally a deputation from the congregation waits upon the minister with the demand that the girl be sent away. Strickland refuses. He tells them that he loves Rosa and intends to marry her, but this is not satisfactory to his uncharitable parishioners. They are overheard by Rosa, and she determines that sooner than wreck Strickland's career, she will sacrifice her happiness and go back to her own people. She dons her old dress and steals out of the house.

That same night Strickland receives a letter asking him to come and take his aged father's Pastorate. This offers a way out of their difficulty, but in going to tell the glad news to Rosa he finds her gone, and a note telling of her determination. He sets out after her and finds the player's camp deserted. His intuition leads him to where her mother lies buried, and he finds Rosa prostrate on the newly made grave. He takes her back with him as his wife to his father's house, where she is received with open arms, and the old unhappiness is blotted out and forgotten.

THE END OF THE FEUD (Dec. 24).—In the Tennessee mountains lived two families, the Blakes and the Morgans. A feud has existed between these families for two generations, but the bitterness has subsided somewhat until one day Blake's dog wandered on to the land owned by John Morgan. He promptly shot and killed it, delivering it to the cabin of Blake with a note that stated he would kill "any two or four legged dog of a Blake that be caught on his land."

The feud was again renewed. Jim Blake left his cabin with the avowed intention of killing Morgan, but was persuaded not to do so by Margaret Dunn, the little schoolteacher of the valley. She persuades him to return with her to her little schoolhouse where she presented him with a Bible showing him the fifth commandment "Thou shalt not kill." He agreed to read the Bible and try to learn its teaching. One day while posting a notice of the meeting at Sunday School, Margaret encountered Jim Blake on his way to the village store. Morgan was down there waiting for him. Margaret realized what it would mean if they met so she followed young Blake and once again prevented bloodshed.

Sunday came and the school was crowded. Blake came because he loved Margaret. Morgan's child also attended but Morgan learned of this and his hatred for Blake brought him to the schoolhouse with a loaded rifle. He fired through the window intending to kill Blake, but Morgan's child came between and received the bullet. She was carried to the home of Blake and a physician summoned, who declared the child could not be moved. Morgan learned of his mistake and full of repentance he went to the Blakes and begged them to shoot him. Jim prevented his father from fulfilling his threat to kill Morgan, by throwing up the pointed gun, when the physician announced that the child could not be moved or he would not answer for its life. Morgan pleaded, that it remain there. William Blake seeing the complete surrender of his bitterest enemy finally agreed and the feud was declared at an end. Later the little schoolteacher surrendered to the love of her former pupil—Jim Blake.

TWO BOYS (Dec. 26).—Albert Manning and Raymond Nugent attend the same boarding school and became inseparable companions. Dr. Squires, the principal, is a hard, penurious man, and, when news comes that Albert's father has died, leaving the boy penniless, he is about to turn him out of the school. Florence Chapin, his assistant teacher, however, prevails upon him to allow the boy to remain. Dr. Squires makes Albert do all the hard work at the school and, one day, with the assistance of Raymond, he runs away to the city where he secures employment as a page boy in a hotel.

Arthur Cochran, a young lawyer, and Fannie Nugent, a sister of Raymond, are guests at the hotel. They know nothing of Albert's friendship for Raymond, but are interested in the boy. A few weeks later, Squires hears that Albert's father owned mining stock which has become valuable. He goes to Cochran's office and asks him to try and locate the boy. Cochran and Fannie have become engaged, but a jealous quarrel threatens to separate them. Albert contrives and succeeds in bringing them together again. Raymond visits his sister for the holidays, and when he arrives at the hotel, Albert's identity is established. Cochran arranges with Miss Chapin to become a private teacher for the boys and the picture ends showing their delight in the prospect of not having to return to boarding school.

PALMETTO HAT INDUSTRY (Dec. 27).—This is an interesting educational picture of the evolution of the Palmetto hats for ladies. Excellent scenes of the gathering of the dwarf palm leaves are pictured, then the stripping, plaiting and finally the fashioning into the wonderful crown of glory fashion.

The girl at the bench always tries the hat on when finished. She cannot see herself in it but likes to imagine how it becomes her. It takes many people to "build" the headwear, but the work is rapidly performed.

ONCE WAS ENOUGH (Dec. 27).—John Strongheart, an actor of the old school, finds himself after a very bad season without enough funds to get through the summer. He places an "ad." in one of the leading papers for actors of both sexes to form a stock company. He receives many responses and organizes a troup. He puts up a call for their first stand and after much "dim-damming" for expense money, lands in the little town of Hipewitch. The hour of the show arrives and the performance begins but it is so bad, that the audience, a boy and dog become so weary they leave after the first act.

Strongheart and his troup return to the hotel to dress. The hotel proprietor tells them they must pay up or lose the trunk and leave the hotel. Having no money the players are forced to walk the streets in their stage clothes. They are seen by the boy, dog and villagers and are stoned out of town by the freight car route. After many bumps along the railroad the box car comes to a standstill, only to find themselves in the very same town and are treated to a second battery of stones, ripe tomatoes and unsalable eggs.

THE BLIND CATTLE KING (Dec. 28).—Don Remero, a blind cattle king of Mexico, leaves his home, and dresses in the garb of a peon, determining to seek a mate who does not know of his great wealth. He steals a ride on a train which carries him across the Mexican border into the United States. There he is discovered at a station and upon being taken from the train is arrested. Miss Barnes, who is out riding with her father and mother, see this and gets her father to intercede with the railroad detective, they taking the blind man home. This is done by Mary without any other thought than helping a blind man. Afterwards Mr. Barnes becomes incensed to think that he allowed a tramp to be brought into his home and he puts the blind man out. Mary's heart has gone out to the afflicted one and she seeks a lawyer friend and asks him to help her find her protege.

The blind man wandering into the hills finally falls exhausted. Mary, who is riding a spirited animal, unknowingly follows almost in the blind man's footsteps. Her horse becomes unmanageable and runs away, running into a lake. The blind man hears her cries and goes to her assistance, saving her from being drowned.

They return home to find the father and lawyer worried over her absence. The lawyer recognizes the cattle king, but Don Remero stops him from disclosing his identity. Later Don Remero returns to the home of Mary and meets her. She determines to run away with him; they are married and he takes her back to Mexico with him. Arriving upon his own immense lands he tells her they are all hers. Later they come to his magnificient home where he introduces her to his mother and his retainers.

VITAGRAPH.

WHILE SHE POWDERED HER NOSE (Dec. 23).—In facial decoration Ellen is an artist and never appears in company without adding to her beauty every touch to arouse the admiration of the most indifferent of the sterner sex. John Thorpe, a wealthy young man, calls one afternoon to see her. She is not prepared to receive it when he sends his card up and she tells him she will see him in a moment. Hoping to make herself most charming, she takes so much time in dressing and "kalsomining" herself, Thorpe becomes impatient and sits down at the piano, playing several selections which he finds on the music rack. While thus engaged, a young lady friend of Ellen's the unmarried daughter of a composer, calls to see her and she overhears Thorpe playing one of her father's compositions. Involuntarily, she becomes absorbed and enters the parlor. Thorp is surprised to see her and she is not less confused, when she finds herself in his presence. She explains her unintentional interruption by telling him about her father's composition which he had been playing. They manifest a mutual interest in each other and it develops that it is a case of love at first sight. Thorpe proposes to her and she consents to become his wife.

During this courtship and engagement in the parlor, Ellen is still busily engaged decorating her face. At last she is ready, but alas, when she reaches the parlor to receive her anticipated admirer, the butler gives her a note which informs her that Thorpe and her young lady friend, whom he met in the parlor, had gotten tired of waiting, had become engaged and had gone to secure a marriage license. Ellen is non-pleased, piqued, gives vent to her feelings in a display of anger which is dispelled when the butler announces the arrival of one of the poorer admirers, who ardently loves her, and announces he has come to ask her to accept him in marriage and not being willing to take another chance, she falls into his arms a willing subject of his embraces.

IT ALL CAME OUT IN THE WASH (Dec. 24).—"Pa is rich and Ma don't care!" Neither does Barry Wall, their son, who is indulged in all sorts of extravagances. He is a desirable catch for almost any girl, but he has one ideal, Gladys Cooper, the daughter of the Manager of the Excelsior Laundry. He has never had an introduction to her and finds it difficult to get one. He dreams of her night and day. He sends his soiled linen to Cooper's laundry and forgets to remove his diamond stud from one of his shirts. When he misses it, he goes to the laundry and Mr. Cooper restores to him his lost gem. Barry is delighted, but not half so much as when he sees the ideal of his dreams enter. Pa Cooper introduces Barry to Gladys, and the girl seems to be as badly smitten as the love-sick Barry. Next Sunday, Barry calls to see Gladys and presents her with a ring with a setting of the very diamond stud which he had lost and found. Their engagement is announced and their cup of happiness is full.

IDA'S CHRISTMAS (Dec. 24).—Her husband's sickness and lack of funds compels Mrs. Smith to seek employment. She works hard, hoping to give her little daughter Ida a Merry Christmas. The little girl has set her heart on a pretty doll displayed in the toy shop window and daily worships at its shrine. Mrs. Smith would gladly buy it for Ida if she could but it is far beyond her means. Mrs. Jones, her employer, surmising the child's desire, buys the doll and sends it to Ida's house on Christmas eve, unknown to the child. Ida finds a well-filled purse on the street dropped by a passerby. It is a temptation to her to keep it and buy the doll, but she runs after the loser and returns it to him. He rewards her very generously. She is anxious to purchase the doll, but knowing the need of the money at home, she carries it to her mother. The next day, Christmas, a well-filled

TWO WOMEN AND TWO MEN (Dec. 25).—Feeling that the monotony of domesticity is somewhat irksome, to him, James Thornwell casts about for some diversion. He meets Mlle. Valeria, a popular prima donna with whom he becomes very much infatuated. She accepts his attentions with inward indifference. Thornwell is not the only one. Harry Borden, a man of the world, pays her most ardent court. They both send her flowers and other evidences of their admiration. She tries to keep each in ignorance of the other. One day Borden happening in just as Thornwell is leaving. He upraids Valeria and finds a note which Thornwell sent with a box of roses. She tries to get the note from him but he keeps it. Acting well her part, she laughingly dismisses the matter and submissively kisses him good-bye. Thornwell, with his wife, attends a ball where they meet Borden and Valeria. While Borden is talking to Mrs. Thornwell, Valeria takes Mr. Thornwell's arm and walks off with him. Borden graciously offers Mrs. Thornwell his arm and escorts her to the conservatory.

Hoping to compromise Thornwell, he makes love to his wife and attempts to kiss her, for which he receives a smack in the face which completely appalls him. Valeria who has seen Borden making love to Mrs. Thornwell, hastens to Thornwell and induces him to come and behold his wife, hoping to create dissension between them, making him a complete victim to her own wiles. Borden, explains to Mrs. Thornwell that his advances to her were encouraged by her husband's attentions to another woman and he had unjustly come to the conclusion that she would not resist him. Then he hands her the note he found on the floor of Valeria's apartment. At this moment, her husband enters with Valeria. He accuses her of accepting the attentions of Borden. She indignantly denies it. They return to their home, where he again accuses her. Again she denies his accusation. Tearing the note which Borden had given her from the bosom of her dress, she hands it to him and he reads the evidences of his own indiscretion. He realises the heartless purpose of Valeria and Borden to secure their own ends. His wife, in tears, and he in silent sadness, see an impassable breach opening up between them. Their little daughter Nellie, hearing her parents enters the room. Seeing their unhappiness, she tells them to kiss and make up.

FRECKLES (Dec. 26).—Freckles are not considered a mark of beauty, by persons who are obliged to wear them. Mr. John, whose face is freckled like a speckled beauty, is annoyed because his wife teases him about it. He reads a beauty doctor's advertisement in the newspaper and retermines to have his complexion renovated. He telephones the doctor to call at his home on his wife's Euchre Club night, enhance his beauty during her absence and surprise her when she returns.

On the appointed night, he has great difficulty in getting his wife off to the club before the doctor arrives. After many delays, he gets her safely out of the house. The doctor comes and introduces herself as Madam Legrande, the Beauty Expert. John makes preparation for the treatment and the Madam begins operations. Mrs. John begins thinking about her husband's anxiety to get her out of his house and leaves the card party hurriedly, and reaches home just as John is in the midst of the treatment. John hears her coming and bundles the Madam with all her belongings into the bathroom. When Mrs. John goes into the sitting room, John greets her with a kiss and she scents the perfumed lotions upon his face and begins to ply him with interrogatory remarks. She spys the doctor's hat upon the table and sees John make a gesture toward the bathroom door. Rushing into the bathroom, Mrs. John finds the Madam and drags her into the presence of Mr. John, who explains the presence of the Expert and why he was anxious to remove the freckles that he might be more beautiful in his wife's eyes. This satisfies Mrs. John and after he pays the Madam her fee, Mrs. John kisses his face and tells him that she loves him, freckles and all and no beauty doctor could make him more beautiful or lovely in her estimation.

THE BETTER MAN (Dec. 27).—With a fondness for gambling, Jim Saunders is given to neglecting his wife and child. One night during his absence at the saloon, Miguel Gomes, a Mexican outlaw, for whom $1,000 reward is offered, enters Jim's home and demands food of Mrs. Saunders. Her little child, suffering with a severe attack of croup demands her constant attention and she tells Gomes to help himself. The child is taken with a fit of choking, and her mother, alarmed, asks the outlaw to go for a doctor. He consents and starts on a run for the nearest physician, miles away. As he is running through the foothills, he is met by Saunders, who recognises him and stops him at the point of his pistol. The Mexican, anxious to notify the doctor, grapples with Jim. They struggle to the edge of a cliff over which he hurls Jim, who falls to the bottom stunned. Miguel jumps upon Jim's horse and hastens on to the doctor, whom he tells of the sick child and induces him to go with him to its relief. After a break-neck ride, they reach Saunder's home just in time to save the child from death.

Jim Saunders, who has recovered from his fall, hurries to his home and through the window, sees the Mexican. He rushes in and demands his surrender. Jim's wife tells him of the Mexican's generous deed through which their child was saved. Jim hangs his head in shame, and acknowledges that the outlaw is a better man than himself, for had he stayed at home with his wife and child, instead of spending his time at the saloon gambling, he would have proven himself more of a man. Mrs. Saunders tells Gomes that he may go unmolested by them for whatever may be his faults, they must acknowledge his goodness of heart in helping them and their child. Tenderly bending over the little girl, he smooths her forehead, she takes his hand in hers and Migel Gomes is permitted to depart in peace with their blessing.

THE REINCARNATION OF KARMA (Dec. 27).—A synopsis of this special two-reel subject was published in the advertisement of the General Film Company on pages 1096 and 1097 of the issue dated December 14.

SUE SIMPKINS' AMBITIONS (Dec. 28).—My! My! but Sue Simpkins is some elocutionist! With longing aspirations to the stage, she pays a visit to the newly-opened motion picture show and her ambition takes a new turn, and she takes up a course with a correspondence school. "How to become a moving picture actress." After completing her course, she applies at the "Motograph Motion Picture Company" for a position as a leading lady. She is given a "try-out" and the manager tells her she would make a splendid comedian in farce comedy, but she insists that she is a pastmaster in the dramatic art and prefers something more emotional. She is given the part of a deserted wife in a very touching drama. She gives full sway to her angular and loose-jointed anatomy, going through the part with so much action and enthusiasm, the director cannot control her. Later, she goes to see "The Deserted Wife" exhibited in a moving picture theater. She takes a seat among the audience and awaits its showing. At last she appears on the scene. Instead of moving the onlookers to tears, it arouses their laughter and jeers. Her acting, instead of being dramatic, is farcical. Her efforts are met with derision instead of applause. Disappointed and crushed, she returnes to her home town and confesses to Ezra Hawks, her old lover, whom she had discarded, that she was mistaken in her calling and had decided to always be a simple country maiden. Ezra comforts her and tells her if she will consent to become his wife, he will make her life one sweet dream. She falls into his outstretched arms and in fond embrace, they dream dreams of future bliss.

EDISON.

AN OLD FASHIONED ELOPEMENT (Dec. 23).—This comedy is based upon the following ballad from the London periodical, "The Gentlewoman" which tells the story in full.

Come all who love a lover true,
And listen to my lay
'Tis of a pair who in despair
Left home and ran away.

But ere they'd gone a many miles
Misfortune did betide.
The horse went lame, so down they came
For they no more could ride.

Now as they waited at an inn
Another horse to find
The father proud with curses loud
Came posting hard behind.

He tore her from her lover's arms
In spite of sobs and tears
And cast him forth with many an oath
Unfit for tender ears.

But the youth he had a ready wit
So he did not despair
He promised gold to the post-boy bold
And whispered low in his ear.

Then he put on the post-boy's breeks
And eke his boots likewise
And his hat and coat wrapped his throat
And did himself disguise.

Full soon a river crossed the road
And the ford was deep and wide
And here at last the chaise stuck fast
Ere it reached the other side.

The lady first with the aid of the horse
Did reach the river's brim
And there in the wet did the father sit
But they never came back for him.

WHAT KATIE DID (Dec. 24).—Katie Mooney comes home from school one afternoon just in time to hear the doctor say to her widowed mother that her infant baby sister must have better air and food or it will not live for long. Katie is very fond of the little mite and knows that her mother had a hard time to make a living for the three, so she determines that she will help to secure money enough to get the baby what is required. The doctor when he leaves playfully leaves a newspaper in her hand in which she sees an advertisement for messenger girls at a millinery shop. She secures the position and it is understood that she is to run errands after school hours. On one of her trips she makes the acquaintance of little Florence Chester, a small miss of about seven who has wandered away from her street and gets lost. Katie takes her home. She meets her several times afterward and a great friendship springs up between them.

At the millinery shop, Katie being the youngest is more or less imposed upon by the other girls. They play pranks and tricks on her. She does not enter into their frolics. One day in delivering a parcel she meets Florence accidentally and as they are about to part a reckless boy on skates bowls Katie over. She falls, crushes the hat she is carrying and dislocates her arm. A friendly policeman takes her home. Florence finds out where she lives and brings her mother and father to meet her little benefactress and to find out the extent of her injuries. The meeting brings friends for Katie, her mother and her little sister and through Katie's kind act of taking Florence home when she was lost, brings her that which she strove for.

LOVE AMONG THE GEYSERS (Dec. 25).—This film gives the spectator a delightful trip through Yellowstone Park with nearsighted Professor Blick, his son, a Judge, his two daughters May and June and their brother August who is passionately fond of literature that may be procured for the small sum of one dime and upon whose hero dyed senses the scenes of beauty are lost forever.

We are permitted to arrive at Gardiner, Montana and there procure a coach for the Yellowstone trip. A few moments later we stop to glance at the geysers and stand in awe of the beauty and grandeur of the Grand Canyon while May and June lose their little hearts over Professor Blick's son which causes the Judge to keep a watchful eye upon the young folks. But when love goes touring there are always some mishaps that present laughter to the spectator and not a little of this may be found in the professor's glasses which have a way of losing themselves that the law of gravitation has nothing whatsoever to do with. This serves to aid May and June to spend some time alone with the son of the professor while the professor himself goes tumbling down a mountain while endeavoring to find his lost glasses which are really not lost at all. Shortly after the Judge loses dignity and goes tumbling down after him.

All the time May and June are falling in love with the bashful young man, while August is buried deep in the pages of a dime novel. Finally the girls come to the rescue of the two old men and just as the picture is about to close with "and they lived happily ever after" we find that nothing of the kind happens and—well see it yourself and learn what happens after.

A CLUE TO HER PARENTAGE (Dec. 27).—(Being the Sixth Story of "WHAT HAPPENED TO MARY).—Lieutenant Strakey, Mary's opponent, in "A Letter to the Princess" has been commissioned to go to America and Madam Jolatsky, who has fallen in love with the young officer, throws up her own appointment in London and follows him, taking the same steamer and thereby becoming a fellow passenger with Mary. Mary's cabin mate is a young woman who seems to be struck with Mary's appearance and when Mary is looking over the letter which is the only clue to her mysterious birth and parentage, this young woman, Nell Benson, sees the writing and so finally succeeds in getting Mary to show her the letter. She then sends a wireless message to someone in New York, expressing the belief that she has found "the missing heiress."

Lieutenant Strakey seises upon the word heiress which he happens to catch sight of and immediately begins attentions to Mary which Nell Benson does not want her to accept. Besides this Madam Jolatsky speaks to Mary and warns her not to flirt with Strakey. This opposition develops in Mary's desire to play the game to the end and she accordingly leads Strakey on. Madam Jolatsky slips a valuable bracelet into Mary's trunk just before the steamer lands in New York. Of course this is found by the customs official and Mary, unable to explain why it is not in her declaration of how she came by it, is arrested. But just at this minute Nell Benson appears with a distinguished looking gentleman whose name seems to create a stir with the officials and who takes charge of the case.

He takes Mary with him and bringing her into a great mansion, informs her that this will be her home henceforth. He refuses to tell her more about her family except to point to a portrait on the wall which he tells her is that of her mother. The wandered has found a home and at least a memory of a mother

HE SWORE OFF SMOKING (Dec. 28).—On the first of January Mr. Jones "swears off", gives his cigars and tobacco to the maid's best man and figures up for his family how much extra money they are going to have to spend during the year. The next day he starts for business feeling still quite happy and proud of himself: but somehow things don't seem to go well at the office and he finds himself feeling for a cigar and missing something all day. At luncheon the man opposite him lights a good cigar when he is finished his meal and poor Mr. Jones is obliged to beat a hasty retreat from the tempting odor.

The afternoon proves a bad one for his office force and he starts for home early much to their relief. At the station a friend offers him a smoke and blows the fragrance of a good cigar into his face until he is nearly beside himself. Consequently he arrives at his home in a very unenviable state of mind. He don't kiss the children but goes up to his room to change his clothes without even taking off his hat. The clothes fall down in the closet. He tears his collar into ribbons in taking it off, drops his watch on the floor and breaks it and finally sits down on his hat as a climax.

At dinner the soup burns him and he creates such a riot as he leaves the table that his wife decides that something must be done. She sends the children for smoking tobacco and cigars and they hold him in his chair, put a cigar in his mouth and light it. His protests grow more and more feeble and the last scene shows us a happy family reunion in the firelight.

HOW A HORSESHOE UPSET A HAPPY FAMILY (Dec. 28).—Mrs. Murphy while marketing one day finds a horseshoe which she believes to be the emblem of good luck and brings it home but her husband disagrees with her and insists that she must not keep it as a horseshoe has always been bad luck to him. When a telegram arrives from his mother-in-law stating that she is coming for a long visit Mrs. Murphy exclaims "this is good luck." Mr. Murphy retorts "It is bad luck." This starts a lively quarrel which ends in Mrs. Murphy having her way.

She insists upon keeping the horseshoe and decides to hang it on the wall and in doing so it falls and breaks a mirror. This means seven years bad luck to Mr. Murphy, who loses all patience with his wife and finally throws the horseshoe out of the window. It strikes a man on the head in the street and nearly fractures his skull. The injured man with blood in his eye quickly finds the thrower of the horseshoe and a pummeling match ensues in which Murphy gets the worst of it. More bad luck: but the straw that breaks the camel's back is when Murphy's mother-in-law arrives and smilingly presents him with a "good-luck" horseshoe all tinseled and trimmed with ribbons. This is too much for Murphy. He throws a fit, shrieks, tears his hair and goes into convulsions. The scene ends in a most laughable tumult.

ESSANAY.

THE SHERIFF'S INHERITANCE (Dec. 24).—A poor ranchman fondly kisses his wife and family good bye. He steps out of his home and is attacked by a bitter enemy. A terrible struggle ensues. The sheriff, who happens to be near by with two of his deputies, separates the men and takes them to jail. The ranchman attempts to escape and is killed by a bullet from the deputy's gun. The following day the ranchman's youngest daughter goes to the sheriff's office and tells him that her mamma is dying and wants to see him. He hurries to the shack and promises the poor woman he will care for her little ones always. After her death he bravely attempts to bring up his small family, but is about to give up in despair when he meets the town schoolmarm. This is the beginning of a romance that results in her agreeing to aid him with his family troubles—and a quiet wedding takes place.

THE CAT'S PAW (Dec. 25).—Jack falls heir to the Hurley estate, and is guardian for $20,000, held in trust for his sister Eva. That same evening Jack is seen at his club gambling at cards. He loses quite a sum, which he pays the following evening from the funds of the Hurley estate. Not being able to throw off the temptation of gambling he finally is persuaded to place a large sum of money on a "sure thing" in stocks that proves to be a fraud, and he loses all. His furniture is turned over to his creditors. While looking for a moderate apartment with his sister, a young woman passes and drops her pocket book, that is picked up by his sister. Jack returns the pocket book to Eloise Gilmore, a school teacher, in her class room. This leads to a love match, and Jack meets Eloise's aunt, a dear old lady. Wallingford James, a tricky broker, now gets Jack to induce Eloise's aunt to invest in some fake mining stock. Later the newspapers are full of the gigantic swindling and Eloise and her aunt are heartbroken until Jack calls, returns the check that he did not turn over to James, and explains that the brokers are lodged in jail. Jack now claims Eloise as his wife, and her delighted aunt readily gives consent.

BILL MIXES WITH HIS RELATIONS (Dec. 26).—A tramp is seen sleeping on a bench in front of a railway station. A mail bag is thrown off a passing train and hits the tramp, scattering the mail in all directions. He picks up a postal card which reads, "Dear Sarah:—Cousin Whooper from Maine, whom you have never seen, is coming out on the four o'clock train. He's kinder rough in his manners, but you'll like him. Lovingly, Hiram." After reading the postal he spies another one, and picking it up, reads: "Dear Cousin Sarah:—Am detained here in New York on business. May be out in the morning and maybe tonight. Cousin Whooper." A great idea comes over the tramp and he decides to be Cousin Whooper immediately. Entering a nearby back yard he finds a suit of clothes hanging on the line. He next locates a suit case from in front of a clothing store and awaits the arrival of the four o'clock train. The first postal card has been received at the Springer Farm and the supposed cousin is met at the train. He is taken to the farm, where he devours a meal in record-breaking time, eating everything on the table with his hands and disgracing himself generally. After supper his "relatives" play the organ and entertain him in king's style. He is then shown his room, where he sleeps in everlasting bliss. The real cousin arrives on the night train and after walking miles, arrives at the farm, only to be refused admittance, thinking he is a tramp. He sleeps in the wood-shed and in the morning tacks a note on the front door of the house and leaves for the railroad station, deciding to return to his home in Maine. A boy sees him and informs the town constable he has seen the man who stole the clothes and suit case. The constable arrests him, but on learning his identity, takes him to the Springer farm, where the tramp has disappeared, taking with him the remains of the morning repast. He is finally discovered running through a corn field and is caught by the real cousin. The tramp is taken to jail and the real cousin taken into the Springer home, where he anticipates a good meal, but is disappointed, as the tramp had taken everything in sight.

LOVE THROUGH A LENS (Dec. 27).—Tom is appointed supervising engineer and is sent with the manager to the new site. He is given his instructions about the work, and left in charge of the men. Four weeks later the manager and his charming daughter come to spend a few days at the works, unknown to Tom. That afternoon the manager receives a telegram from the city office requesting him to return immediately as they have a matter of vital importance that needs his attention. In the meantime Tom is seen working with the men on the new site. A boy, becoming inquisitive, looks through a transit which Tom has been operating, and in so doing changes the position of it. Tom, returning to the transit, notices it out of line and looks through it. What he sees is a beautiful Girl. He becomes enthralled with her magnetic beauty, and makes her acquaintance. The following day they go horse-back riding. The manager returns from the city, and, finding everybody out, goes to the site, only to learn that Tom is not there. Looking through the transit, he sees Tom and his daughter approaching on horseback. He discharges Tom. Tom returns to the city and explains to the officers of the corporation that he has been discharged because he loves the manager's daughter. They reinstate him. With the permission of the manager Tom calls up his sweetheart, and in answer to his proposal of marriage the important little word "yes" tingles back over the wire.

THE REWARD FOR BRONCHO BILLY (Dec. 28).—After holding up a stage-coach, Broncho Billy disappears into the woods on horseback. The driver of the coach unhitches one of the horses and rides to the nearest town, notifies the sheriff, who goes in pursuit with the posse. Broncho abandons his horse and takes to the underbrush. The sheriff and his men, finding the horse riderless, dismount and take up the trail. Broncho is finally seen by the sheriff, who shoots at him. Broncho, returning fire, kills him. Years later the sheriff's widow is in destitute circumstances through the loss of her husband. The baby, now a boy of about eight years, discovers Broncho Billy in the woods, suffering from loss of blood and lack of food. He gives Broncho a piece of bread and returns to the shack for more. During this brief period Broncho faints, and is found unconscious by the returning boy, who runs and tells his mother. She carries Broncho into her home, where, on reviving he recognizes a picture on the wall as that of the former sheriff. Taking a reward notice out of his pocket that offers $5,000 for his capture, dead or alive, he writes on the bottom of it: "Sheriff—I'm a goner. This woman is entitled to the reward. Please see that she gets it." After his death the widow notifies the sheriff. He has the body removed, then O K's the note left by the dead outlaw and assures the widow she will receive the reward. With her boy clasped in her arms she watches the posse disappear down the rugged trail.

PATHE.

PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 51 (Dec. 16).—Philadelphia, Pa.—The Army Mule and the Navy Goat meet on Franklin Field in their annual football struggle. Score: Annapolis, 6; West Point, 0.

College Park, Md.—The administration building and the dormitories of the Maryland State Agricultural College are destroyed by fire. Loss, $150,000.

The Balkan War. — Plavnica, Montenegro. — The King takes a launch across Skutari Lake to Skja to direct the army's operations in a siege of Skutari.

New Orleans, La.—Mayor Behrman reviews the civic parade from the steps of the City Hall.

Hoboken, N. J.—Some boys start a fire in an old skating rink which results in a $200,000 conflagration, destroying seven buildings.

San Francisco, Cal.—Minister De Freistas of Portugal plants a flag on the site of the Portuguese building at the San Francisco Exposition.

Sacramento, Cal.—The Sacramento Gun Club invites the sportsmen of the world to attend their "goose stew." Two thousand two hundred men attend.

New Orleans, La. — Rear Admiral Frank F. Fletcher, Flag Lieutenant S. C. Rowan and Mayor Martin Behrman review parade of sailors and marines from the visiting battleships.

DYNAMITED LOVE (Dec. 25).—In order to keep his inquisitive daughter Gwendoline from discovering the nature of his Christmas gift prematurely, Robert Borden, a broker, incloses a necklace in a box marked "Dynamite."

Gwendoline, besieged by two lovers, tests their courage by asking them to die with her via the dynamite. Lover No. 1 decides that he does not like girls who are foolish enough to attempt suicide, and thus avoids the test. Lover No. 2, a friend of father, is brave enough in the face of the dynamite. Father had let him in on the secret of the box's contents some time before. Gwendoline is enthralled by his bravery and extinguishes the fuse.

THE BEACHCOMBERS (Dec. 26).—A fisher maid named Betty on the rock shore one day meets Jack Dubois, a revenue officer. They part to meet that evening at the same place. Sam Wilson and his band of beachcombers change the government beacon fire, used to guide vessels safely past the rocks. Betty reaches the scene as they have finished their work. She is immediately taken prisoner and carried off to their rendezvous. Dubois, arriving a few moments later, is searching for Betty when he discovers the misplaced light. He connects the transposed light with the disappearance of Betty, and gathering his comrades he sets out to find Betty. He does not find her until the pirates are prepared for the final rush upon the hut in which Sam Wilson, now violently in love, is guarding Betty. In payment for his kindness Betty hides Sam from her lover, and all of Wilson's hopeless love is vented in a passionate kiss of her hand.

THE BEAR TRAP (Dec. 28).—A party of hunters lay a trap for a bear which has been seen roaming around the neighborhood. The trap consists of a deep hole dug in the ground and covered with loose branches and leaves. The wife of one of the trappers, out for a walk, falls into the trap. An Indian named Deer Foot meets with the bear and chases him into the trap. The woman screams, and at the risk of his life Deer Foot rescues her and takes her to her home. Deer Foot's squaw, mistaking the brave's solicitude for genuine affection, attempts to kill the woman. Matters are explained to the squaw, and the hunter, returning home, rewards the redman by making him a present of the bear which he has captured.

THE CHRISTMAS MIRACLE (Dec. 24).—A film of extraordinary merit. It has the Christmas spirit. How the Giver of all gifts, in the guise of a beggar, after repeated refusals, receives a kindness at the hand of a poverty-stricken widow. The transformation and the blessing which follow are all told in a sympathetic manner destined to imbue one with the peace and happiness of the season.

FRENCH NAVAL MANEUVERS (Dec. 27).—The efficiency of the French navy is severely tested in their annual maneuvers in the English Channel. In the storm which lasted two days the battleships and smaller fighting vessels went through their mimic warfare, successfully defending the harbor of Cherbourg, while even the heaviest vessels of the war craft were tossed about like chips by the giant [illegible].

THE CHAFFINCH AND HER FAMILY (Dec. 27).—A series of intimate views showing the taxing duties of the mother bird in taking care of her little brood. Interestingly educational.

BIOGRAPH.

A CRY FOR HELP (Dec. 23).—Wisdom in charity is a problem which has confronted philanthropists the world over. In this film the attitude of two impecunious charity patients is contrasted, resulting in a somewhat startling concurrence of events, which, however, are both as human as they are intense. His wife dying as a charity patient, the ungrateful husband blames his poverty for the physician's apparent neglect. He goes to seek retaliation, but the young physician is saved by a gratitude of a higher order.

THE GOD WITHIN (Dec. 26).—When the woman was desolate and alone she listened to the god within and regeneration came through the motherless baby given in place of the little lifeless form she had called her own. Then the father of this child thought of the associations surrounding his baby. The other man was awakened by the god within, but seeking the woman he found her at the father's fireside, singing the eternal lullaby, controlled in full by the god within.

MELIES.

TEMPEST TOSSED (Jan. 2). — All during the night a storm raged furiously, but day dawned beautifully. Tom, a young fisherman, discovers on the beach of the little island evidences of a wreck, and then—the limp, unconscious form of a sweet young woman, bound to a piece of the wreckage. Tom lifts her gently and takes her to the humble cottage where he and his mother live alone. With their care Ruth soon again regains health, but the terrible ordeal through which she has gone results in the complete loss of memory of the past. However, Tom loves her, and she, too, has the same passion for him. They marry, and the little household becomes a haven of happiness, until——

A launch party of sight-seekers stops at the little fishing island for luncheon. One of the strangers approaches Ruth and is promptly knocked down by Tom for it, but not until Ruth has recognized and remembered, and in her horror she staggers into the shack. The sight of the strange face was a shock sufficient to give back her memory of the past—memory of her marriage to a man who was not Tom, a marriage she had no memory of, and of a husband living whom she had forgotten. While she struggles with her secret—her misery and her memory—he comes, her husband, the stranger, declaring his identity and demanding her, his wife. Ruth comes from her room and reveals to him the too unhappy truth of the stranger's claims.

The launch is waiting. Ruth is forced to go away from a happiness she had never before known, he gives Tom back the wedding ring, which he kisses and places on his own finger. Then he watches the fast disappearing motorboat which takes away from him all that he held dear in life.

"I. T. Y. S."

I was the first exchange man who offered you the most glorious feature films in the world as a part of your regular film service, without extra charge! I was called all sorts of names for starting such an innovation. Every time I have done something big for the business in the past seven years, I have been called names. But on every blessed occasion, Time has shown that I was right. I say now that any exhibitor who pays a big percentage of his receipts to a state rights man is a blooming idiot. Remember the headline of this advertisement, "I Told You So!"

I am the man who told you that you could use Independent films fearlessly. I spent a fortune telling you so, I pledged you my word on it. I begged you to run your own business your own way. And now the Court of Appeals has decided in your favor in the most important piece of legislation the film business of this country has ever known. Again I can say, "I Told You So." I have never given you a wrong tip. I never will. BEFORE THE WHITE MAN CAME (Dec. 17).—This story is founded on the old Apache legend of the Willow and the Sunbeam. These two were playmates and companions, until one day the parents of Willow, the boy, seized with the wanderlust, took him away with them to find a new home. He bade his little friend good bye and promised some day to return to her. Of the fifteen odd years that intervenes here the legend has nothing to tell, but at the end of that time, Fang, the War Chief of a neighboring tribe, comes to Brown Bear, father of the Sunbeam, and chieftain of his tribe, with rich offerings of fur, the trophies of his prowess on the hunt. In exchange for these gifts he wishes to take the Sunbeam with him to brighten and warm the cold gray stone of his home cave.

Brown Bear, pleased with his regard, and the fur, consents to the trade. Sunbeam, however, dislikes the man, and refusing, runs away in tears. It is thus that Willow, the wanderer, returning at last, finds the object of his desires. He reassures her, and as he is telling her of his wanderings, Fang, looking for his acquisition, appears, demanding her. Willow too lays claim to her, and they go forthwith to lay their respective cases before the Bear.

He, although greatly pleased at the return of the Willow, holds to his agreement, and the Fang drags her away. Not long after this the old Bear dies, leaving the chieftainship in the hands of Willow. He immediately uses his power, and starts out on a lone quest to bring the Sunbeam back to her people. This he accomplishes. Fang, discovering his loss, sends the old tribal challenge to battle, an arrow-pierced skull, and Willow receiving it, according to custom, withdraws the arrow, and breaking it, sends it back.

Events follow rapidly. Fang leaves his tribe to wait for him, while he, taking advantage of the unprotected state of the village, steals back Sunbeam. In the meantime, Willow and his tribe have discovered the waiting warriors of Fang, and by a clever ruse these are led into an ambush and annihilated. Fang, returning with the girl to find his men, finds only their remains, and the victorious tribe of Willow. Willow sees him and gives chase. The Fang, seeing he must face the Willow, kills the girl rather than chance her going to the other. Then it is man to man. Fang flees, and in fleeing, stumbles while crossing a stream. The Willow catches him here, and by main strength forces his head under water and holds it there until he drowns.

"And afterwards," says the legend, "the Willow would visit her resting place and mourn, till at length madness seized him, and crying out aloud "Sunbeam, I come to thee!" he took his life, and from then it was that their souls wandered."

NESTOR.

COPS AND COWBOYS (Dec. 16).—Jack and Bob are a couple of young fellows. Jack goes west to visit Uncle John, the Mayor of Maverick. He looks for diversion and trouble. Jack discovers that the sheriff is kept busy with unsober gentlemen. Jack persuades his uncle to create two policemen, and wires Bob to hurry along and bring two nice nobby policemen uniforms with him. Bob hurries along, scenting novelty, and the two are quickly on the job and create a tremendous impression.

They meet with various adventures and eventually get their chance when Peevish Pete borrows a roll of bills at gun point and rides off to his lonely shack to figure out how he will spend it. The sheriff and posse go after him, but Pete insists upon arguing with his gun, and they return to devise a new plan to show him how extremely wrong is his behavior. Jack and Bob ride out, accompanied by a sack of sulphur. Jack ascends to the roof and empties the sulphur down the chimney. It connects with the fire and Peevish Pete is literally smoked out. The boys are outside the door waiting for him and they secure him and lead him back in triumph. They are acclaimed as heroes and are amply rewarded by two lovely girls who present the boys with their hands and futures in return for two little loops of gold.

THE STIGMA (Dec. 18).—Bert Warren is released from prison, having served a term for a crime which he did not commit, but for which he was convicted upon circumstantial evidence. All of his old friends shun him, only his mother receives him with love and trust. Her neighbors refuse to speak to him and his father believes him guilty. Taking what money he has earned at prison Bert goes to buy a horse, and for the first time is heartily received. The men ask Bert to join them and he gladly accepts their offer. When they reach the mountains, however, and give a signal, a man appears to tell them that the sheriff is near and Bert realizes that he is with a gang of horse-thieves. He refuses to accompany them further, so they take his horse and ride away, closely followed by the sheriff and his men. They shoot the man who took Bert's horse, so finding his coat upon his saddle, conclude it is Bert Warren whom they have killed. Being informed of their son's death, and wishing to avoid further gossip, the father and mother move to a different part of the country. Here Bert has arrived, and finding that he is shunned by everyone else, he at last joins Joe and Jim Tanner, and being told that an old man and woman have just settled near them and that they have a bag of gold, the three men decide to go and make it their own. Bert and Jim arrive at the shack, but while Jim is getting the gold, Bert discovers by the Bible, pictures and furniture that the house is his father's. He tries to persuade Jim to leave the money. Jim knocks him down and flees. Bert manages to hide in a closet when his father appears, but the father hears him, discovers it is his own son and firmly believes he has taken the gold. He commands Bert to leave, and Bert does so, but only to recover the gold from his partner after a hard fight, and returns with it to his father to die at his feet, although the mother was kept in ignorance of the fact that her son had not died months ago.

THE LONG STRIKE (Dec. 16).—A review of this two-reel subject was printed on page 1086 of last week's issue.

THE MORE HASTE THE LESS SPEED (Dec. 21).—Absent-Minded Smith, so termed for his lack of thought, uses an old-fashioned razor, although he always leaves a souvenir of the operation in the form of many scars. He is too nervous to sit still in the barber's chair. One morning he had many interruptions from his wife and family, and in a wild rage he smashed the razor and went to a barber, but they were too busy discussing baseball to attend to him, and as he was in a great hurry to get to his office, and so angry over the lack of attention, he pays his money and leaves them squabbling. Passing by a hardware store, he sees a display of razors called safety. He enters and purchases one, and is so pleased with the easy manner of shaving that he wishes to be a public benefactor, and with the idea of conferring a great benefit on suffering mankind he sets forth to shave everybody, whether they desire it or not.

After stopping to shave himself by the reflection of the back of a cab, there numbers among his subjects for experimenting a lady with a budding mustache, the cocoanut tobacco holder in a cigar store and the wire-bearded man who is the star of a side show. At length he is pursued by an angry mob and dragged to the police station, where he shaves a policeman and the judge, and when thrown in a cell he produces a hidden razor and shaves the jailer. He is at last bailed out as a harmless enthusiast and hurries to the bosom of his family, where he cannot resist the temptation of shaving the small boy.

THE NEW FIRE CHIEF (Dec. 19).—O'Flaherty, the liveryman; Zeke Ruggins, the cobbler; Swartzmeyer, the butcher; Luigi Napoli, the barber, and Cohen, the tailor, decide to have a fire department in a small community and meet at Cohen's tailor shop and draw straws to elect a chief. A small child's broom suffices for all, but Cohen steals a wisp of straw from a large kitchen broom, and so wins the coveted position. Rules and regulations are drawn up on a union scale. They cannot work as firemen after 5 o'clock, nor can they attend a fire without uniforms. A fire occurs, and they forget to put a hose in the wagon, and when arriving at the fire they find they have forgotten the ladders, and while a woman is screaming for aid from the top floor they stand in front of the burning building discussing who has the right to save her. The German suggests a game of seven-up, and they adjourn to a neighboring saloon, and Mr. Cohen wins. They hasten back as heroes to save the woman, who in the meantime has left the burning building. As Cohen mounts the ladder with the hose the bell strikes 5 o'clock, and as union men they knock off and go home. No other fires occur, but Mr. Cohen, wishing to win distinction for his office, makes a bonfire of a few leaves, and while his son sounds the fire alarm he extinguishes the little blaze. When the admiring villagers rush up they hail Chief Cohen as the very prince and paragon of fire fighters.

ONE DAY (Dec. 17).—Larue, a French-Canadian trapper, and his wife live in the northwest woods. He is a typical ignorant man of the brute type, and his treatment to his wife is such as one would accord to a dog. The wife never resents this, but expects it as part of her lot, until one day a New York artist, on a hunting expedition, meets her. He sees the treatment accorded the woman and his soul rises in anger. He shows her the courtesies one would accord a great lady, and it awakens in her a vista of a new life. Larue sees the treatment of the artist and mistakes it for love and watches the two. An accident occurs whereby the artist rescues Larue from accident, and a friendship springs up between the two, but it is not strong enough to allay the suspicions of the jealous trapper. One day he catches the two together and covers the artist with his gun and takes him off to kill him. A fight ensues between the two men. The wife watches in fear and anguish, and the artist triumphs. Then at the end the artist explains that what Larue mistook for love was just the ordinary courtesy a man should show to a woman, and opens the eyes of the trapper to a new view of life. The artist leaves them happy in their new life.

REX.

MOTHER (Dec. 19).—Robert Norton, a young business man, loses his wife, who leaves him a young baby. He grieves so much about his wife's death that he makes up his mind to seek forgetfulness in traveling. He leaves his little baby in the charge of his Aunt Margaret. Katherine Morre, a nurse, is in great difficulties and is left penniless with a little baby. She makes up her mind to abandon it to the charge of someone who will take care of it. She leaves it on the doorstep of Margaret's house, and she gives it shelter. Soon after Norton's baby is taken ill and dies. Margaret is afraid of Norton's anger and determines to substitute the abandoned baby of the nurse for the dead child. The child grows up, and Norton returns from his wanderings to claim his child. He takes the substituted child to his own home. In the meantime the real mother calls upon Margaret and is told that her baby died, and she leaves heartbroken. The child, Norton, is taken away and is seriously injured in an automobile accident, and a doctor and nurse are called in. The nurse is Katherine. By some curious intuition the child and the nurse become deeply attached to each other, and Norton becomes extremely jealous of the child's preference for her nurse. Norton discharges her, and she is about to leave the house when a letter comes from Aunt Margaret, who is now dying. In the letter she confesses that she substituted the children, and the child he now believes his own is the child of Katherine, the nurse. By the aid of the little one, Norton sees his error and the nurse becomes a permanent institution in the family household.

FOR HIS SAKE (Dec. 22).—The wife of a poor inventor succeeds in selling to a big manufacturing concern one of her husband's successful inventions, but in order to enable her to do so she has promised to elope with the man who aided her. At the last moment she throws herself into the lake. Her body is found by her husband and the man with whom she was to elope.

POWERS.

A MAN (Dec. 20).—Glen Hardin is convicted of a crime of murder of which he is innocent. Smarting over the injustice of it, he contrives to escape from prison where he is serving sentence, eludes the officers and takes to the mountains, where he discovers a deserted cabin and takes undisputed possession. His retreat is an isolated portion of the country.

Sue, the daughter of a mountaineer, rides far afield one day and meets Hardin at a spring where he has come for water. She instinctively loves the taciturn man, for he is not like her kind. He shows the direction of her home and she goes. Once at home, her father urges her to marry Luke, a typical ne'er-do-well of the mountain section, and she rebels. She rides again to escape the taunts of her father, and is found by Luke, who pulls her from her horse, and Hardin administers a deserved thrashing to Luke. The girl rides away, and Luke stalks Hardin and shoots him. The girl hears the shot, finds Hardin and assists him to his cabin, where she ministers to his wound.

Returning home, she finds that her father has returned from the settlement, bringing some newspapers. She reads in one that the man who committed the crime of which Hardin was convicted has confessed, and Hardin is innocent. She does not know the name of the recluse of the mountain, but intuitively divines that it is Hardin. Taking the paper, she rides to his cabin and, finding him gone, leaves the newspaper in a conspicuous place. He returns, finds the newspaper account and is overjoyed. He goes to her and takes her from her home in the wilds, back to the city, where they are married.

CRYSTAL.

HIS WIFE'S STRATAGEM (Dec. 22).—Jabez Hardy, a hard-hearted old bachelor, discharges his nephew, Chester, from his employ because he married without the old gentleman's consent. Pearl, Chester's wife, whom Uncle had never seen, decides to get a position in Uncle's office, with a view to getting Chester his job back. She is engaged as typist, and Uncle is very much smitten with her. He pays her attentions, and one evening insists upon seeing her to her home. She invites him in, and Chester, seeing them coming, hides. The old gent is making love to Pearl, when Chester enters the room with a gun and pretends to be very angry. He recognizes his uncle and, after expressing his surprise, introduces him to his wife. Uncle congratulates the pair and leaves the couple serene in the belief that Chester will be re-employed. However, Uncle dispatches a letter to Chester, telling him that as his wife is such a treasure he has no need of any other, so he has made a will leaving his entire fortune to a Chinese missionary fund. The young couple are very much chagrined, but have to make the best of the plot that failed.

MIXED BOTTLES (Dec. 22).—Claude Belmont, the poet, is very fond of Jessamine. Also is he very fond of liquor. So is his housemaid. He keeps a bottle of whiskey in the drawer of his desk, where it being discovered by Bridget, she helps herself. Claude discovers a shrinkage in his stock and decides upon a novel scheme to stop the purloining of his precious stock. He pours the whiskey into a bottle labeled "Carbolic Acid," and pours some crude oil into the whiskey bottle. He then goes out, and proposes marriage to Jessamine and is rejected. He vows that he will kill himself. Meanwhile Bridget is entertaining her friend the policeman, and goes up for some of the whiskey. She brings down two glasses full, and she and the policeman drink it. They both become very sick, the crude oil doing its work well. Claude comes home and, being absent-minded, takes a drink of what he thinks is the whiskey. He, too, is taken very sick, and Jessamine, who has followed him to the house, finds him in a lamentable condition. She determines to join him in death, and drinks from the bottle marked "Carbolic Acid," only to find that it contains whiskey. She runs out of the house and is done with Claude forever, while the three unlucky whiskey-lovers await the passing of their seemingly unending agony.

WHEN AN OLD MAID GETS BUSY (Dec. 17).—Abigail is an old maid and a confirmed man-hater. She carries her hatred to the extent of tearing the faces of all the portraits of her male relatives to the wall. She is informed that she has fallen heir to an immense fortune. In her joy she invites her old maid, man-hating friends to share her home with her. They come, each one bringing her pet, a cat, a dog, a parrot, and some even mice. These pets become intolerable and her life is made miserable. In her despair she resolves to marry so as to get rid of the annoyance. She visits beauty parlors, arrays herself in gorgeous attire and has small photos of herself taken—six for 25 cents. At her first party she gets busy by putting a photo inside the watch of a married man, and one also in the watch of an engaged man. The discovery of these photos are productive of trouble to the respective victims. Abigail is found out and confesses that, being an heiress, she was desirous of getting married. After the ladies concerned have given her a piece of their minds she is left alone. Her maid brings her cat she has discarded, and she hugs it affectionately. And once more the portraits of her male relatives are turned to the wall.

THE VENGEANCE OF THE FAKIR (Dec. 19).—A review of this two-reel subject was printed on page 1087 of last week's issue.

CHAMPION.

RIGHT SHALL PREVAIL (Dec. 16).—Bob and George Morton go to thhe theater where the famous dancer Irene is performing. Both men become infatuated with the dancer, and when the manager of the theater offers to introduce them to her they gladly welcome the opportunity. An introduction is effected, and after the theater a supper is suggested and agreed upon. While at the restaurant George, who has little respect for women of the stage, offers an insult to the girl, which she resents. Bob upbraids his brother for his action, and escorts Irene home.

In the course of a few weeks Bob and Irene learn of their love for each other and decide to get married. Bob informs his father of his intention to marry the dancer. His father objects to the marriage, being influenced by George and Bob's oldest sister. Bob leaves his father's house, declaring that he shall never return until they welcome Irene as his wife.

After several years George is the victim of the drug habit. The father begins to realise that he has allowed the best boy to go away.

Bob, after his marriage, had experienced some misfortunes, one being that Irene was taken sick and compelled to leave the stage. Bob, one day, while returning home from work, chances to meet his father, who explains to him that he has altered his opinion. After learning that Bob's wife is sick, he requests Bob to take him to see her. This visit proves to be the means of uniting father and son. Mr. Morton gives a reception in honor of his son and daughter-in-law. The sister changes her attitude toward Irene and welcomes her into the household, but George still retains his same opinion and on the evening of the reception, while under the influence of the drug, becomes obnoxious and offers an insult to Irene. Bob defends his wife against his brother, who, being aroused to hatred toward his brother and wife, connects a scheme to bring disgrace on them both. He enters his sister's room, takes her jewels and places them in Irene's cloak. Later the jewels are found in Irene's possession. She is unable to bear the accusation, loses all control of herself and runs from the house. Her absence is discovered and Bob goes in search of her and finds her exhausted. George realizes how dastardly he has been and seeks to drown his conscience in the drug, which proves too much for his weakened heart and he collapses. After Bob has carried Irene home in his arms he receives the welcome news that George has confessed to having placed the jewels in the cloak to place the blame on Irene. Irene finally recovers from the effects of the cold weather and exposure which she submitted herself to, and is taken into the Morton family.

MILANO.

LOVE SUBLIME (Two Reels) (Dec. 21).—Happiness reigned supreme in the home of the Baron Dupre; his two motherless daughters, grown to womanhood, were a source of comfort and pride. Ida, the elder daughter, is betrothed to the young Count Alfred. Rosa, the younger daughter, is expected to arrive home from the convent where she had recently completed her studies. Alfred was spending several weeks at the home of his fiancee, for preparation had been made to give a ball in honor of Rosa's return home. Arriving some time before the date set for the reception, she was delegated to entertain her sister's intended husband, Ida being occupied with the preparation incidental to the ball. Count Alfred, fascinated by the fresh young beauty of Rosa, transfers his affection.

Upon the night of the reception, as hostess, her guests command her every attention, and, seeking the seclusion of the conservatory for a brief rest, she overhears her affianced husband addressing her sister in terms of endearment. She hides her anguish from her guests, and at the first opportunity seeks the solace of the gardens, where she is approached by Baron Holden, an aged millionaire banker. The baron has long been an admirer of Ida and takes this opportunity to declare his love. Ida naturally declines, but with the persistence that made him successful in business the baron reminds her that she may change her views, and if ever she does he will be waiting for her. After the guests have departed and the members of the household have retired, Ida discovers her sister secretly leaving the house. Silently she follows, only to witness a clandestine meeting in the garden with her intended and overhears their confession of love for each other.

After a sleepless night, Ida concludes that there is only one course left for her to follow. Next morning she returns to Count Alfred his ring, with a note releasing him from his promise to her.

THE CONSEQUENCES (Dec. 20).—Robert Insley, a rising young lawyer, is engaged to marry Edna Markham, the daughter of a well-to-do widow. One day Harry Blount, a wealthy middle-aged speculator, drives out to the Markham farm in his automobile in order to offer the widow a price for it. While there he meets Edna and falls in love with her. He buys the farm at a good price, Insley acting for the widow in closing the deal. Then Blount flatters the widow, takes Edna automobiling and otherwise makes himself generally agreeable. He finally obtains the widow's consent to his marrying Edna, and between them they force her to dismiss Insley.

Two years elapse, during which time Insley has risen in his profession and Edna has had every luxury. In a cafe Insley and Edna meet, she being accompanied by her husband and mother. At Insley's invitation they join him at luncheon. While they are seated at the table a French count, a friend of Blount's, comes over to them, and he also becomes a member of the party. As they are about to leave, Blount invites the Count and Insley to become members of a house party he is going to give the following week. The Count accepts instantly, but Insley hesitatingly accepts. The house party proves a big success. The Count has admired Edna for a long time, and now seeks to pay his advances to her. Edna forbids his ever speaking to her again.

That night, as she is going to her room, she meets Insley coming in. He requests an interview with her, and they go outside to a rustic summer house, where he tells her he must go away at once and never see her again. As he stoops to kiss her hands in farewell the Count, who has been following them, comes upon them and, nothing the action, hurries away to inform Blount. Blount insists upon knowing the trouble and upon the Count informing him that his wife is faithless to him, Blount calls him a liar. The Count draws a revolver and attempts to shoot Blount, but the latter succeeds in wrenching it from him and, being closely pursued, he shoots the Count.

In the meantime Insley and Edna have entered the hallway, heard the quarrel and the shot fired. Insley urges her to retire and, taking her almost up in his arms, he carries her across the hall, just as Blount enters and sees them. Believing now the truth of the Count's accusation, Blount goes out. Insley then rushes into the room, picks up the revolver and tells the Count, who is still alive, that he deserves what he received for trying to ruin a woman's name. At this point the guests all rush in as do Blount and Edna. The Count is asked who shot him, and he points at Insley and dies. Insley starts to defend himself, but stops, for only by accusing Edna's husband and proving that he himself was outside alone with her at midnight can he do it. Edna starts to exonerate him, when she catches Blount's eye, who by the force of his glance compels her to keep silent. Through bribery Edna finally obtains Insley's release.

Years later Blount, accompanied by Edna and her mother, lies dying in a hotel in a distant land and, being a Roman Catholic, sends for a priest. When he comes it is no other than Robert Insley. Blount, at sight of the man whose whole life he has ruined, is seized with mad terror and dies. Insley performs what office he can for the dead man, and leading Edna to the bedside, he kneels with her, praying for the soul of the departed.

ZIGOTO HAS A GOOD HEART (Dec. 5).—Zigoto takes fair Lisette to a smart country hotel. As the adoring couple sit under the arbor, Zigoto, the unconventional, does sword-swallowing feats with his knife, and when he eats his soup the dissonance drowns the singing of the birds. These eccentricities of genius and his unwashed appearance in general, cause the other guests to believe that Zigoto should dine in a stable. This belief, however, does not reach Zigoto's consciousness and he eats on with appetite undiminished.

Those who had taken exception to Zigoto's conduct, sally forth to the roadway. There sits a blind man peddling flowers. The spirit of skylarking running in excesses, they upset the blind man's stand and steal his dog. As the unfortunate man is groping blindly about for the flowers scattered on the side-walk, Zigoto, with the gallantry of a chevalier, enters upon the scene. He learns of the cruel joke perpetrated upon the flower vender and pursues the culprits. He overtakes them as they are having the time of their lives throwing the dog into the river and hitting him with stones upon the bump of reverence. He throws the principal offender into the water. The man accumulates so much of the liquid through the medium of his open countenance that Zigoto believes that the wet one may contaminate the water or drain the stream. Zigoto, with the nonchalance of a deep sea diver, plunges in and rescues the sputtering mischief-maker. He escorts the party back to where the flower vender is still collecting his violated wares. Zigoto coerces the subdued offenders into giving the flower vender full value for his buds. Accepting a small bouquet from the vender as a proof of the vender's gratitude, he marches back to the fair Lisette. (This subject is substituted in place of "A Telephone Entanglement," which was originally intended to be released on that date.)

ZIGOTO AS A STATION MASTER (Dec. 5).—Zigoto believes that he was destined to become a station master. He gets the job. He likes it and has considerable amusement in regulating the trains which travel back and forth with the rapidity and amusing eccentricity that characterize some of the French comedies. Zigoto gets his train schedule mixed up and there are fifty-seven kinds of trouble in the station. Some of the trains seem too bashful to leave the station unchaperoned and the passengers rage acordingly as the train stalls on the rails. Others impulsively start too soon and the passengers who had counted upon taking them rage and roar when they find that they have missed them. The peevish travelers in the belated trains grow so rambunctious that Zigoto turns the passenger cars into a stable and puts in with the passengers calves, ducks, dogs and other barn-yard ornaments. The fun goes on and Zigoto makes his line a veritable bedlam. The crisis comes when he forgets to shift the switch for the 9:23 express. Accordingly this express jumps the tracks and goes right through the station with the usual accompaniments of damage and hilarity. (This subject is substituted in place of "Twixt Devil and the Deep Sea," which was originally intended for release on that date.)

A HAZARD FOR A HEART (Dec. 17).—Nordiska, an operatic prima donna, has a throng of idolaters, among whom are three Parisian men-about-town. All vie for her favor. After the performance one evening the three adorers take the diva on the round of the lobster palaces and spend their good money. It is suggested that the four go slumming. Getting down into the Apache belt, they enter one den and are much interested in the social doings of the underworld. In the course of their stay, a particularly elemental Apache comes in to find his pet sweetheart in the course of a wild dance with a rival. The cave man hurls his rival to the none too soft floor and trouble in the most threatening form is imminent. The new arrival overawes the weaker man and his is the girl to have and to hold. Nordiska and her companions had momentarily expected to find themselves picking portions of glassware and furniture out of their anatomies, but are pleased that no such violence occurs. Nordiska is peculiarly fascinated by the brute strength and ferocity of the King Apache, and as she and her three companions leave the place she darts ardent glances at this sovereign of the "low dives."

The three gentlemen have been importuning Nordiska to become the wife of one of them. It is difficult for her to make a choice, so she finally writes a letter to each, saying that courage being the quality she most admires in man, she will become the wife of him who performs an act audacious and brave. One of the trio, who had noticed the singer's attraction for the Apache, has a daring thought. He gains admission secretly to the singer's house while dressed in his evening clothes and changes this attire for one of a burglar. He puts on a false mustache and armed with a revolver, enters the songbird's room. He frightens her into giving him her jewels. As he sits in a chair, the diva is perforce compelled to sing and dance before him. So seductive, so soothing is her mellifluous voice and her witching movements in the mazes of the dance, that it exerts a hypnotic influence over the amateur burglar. While he is in this state of trance, the singer hastens to the street and quickly returns with two policemen. In her absence, however, the spell having been removed, her lover escapes into the room where he has left his open face clothes. As the singer and the policemen are searching for him, he enters the room where they are, in his proper state of attire, carrying the burglar outfit and the jewels he had taken. He acknowledges himself as the intruder. The policemen are about to hustle him off to jail when he hands Nordiska the letter he had received and which had given him the suggestion. The singer recognises that this is the man capable of creating and executing an act of audacity and bravery and immediately tells the policemen that they will not be needed and that they had better send 'round a minister and a best man.

WANTED—A HUSBAND (Dec. 26).—After her first husband died, Mrs. Murphy decided to find one that she can boss, as she is tired of being told what to do. She advertises for a small, frail man with matrimonial inclinations, and is delighted when Herbert Rice applies for the job. Rice is made to walk the chalk line, and Mrs. Murphy-Rice makes up for all the abuse she received from her first husband by abusing husband No. 2. But a diet ordered by her doctor to reduce her weight has a wonderful effect upon her size, and she continues to shrink until her husband, who is taking a special course in physical culture, becomes the "Bull Moose" of his own pasture and the real fun begins.

THE DEVIL OF A TIME (Dec. 26).—A harmless inmate of an insane asylum escapes from his keepers and meets Algernon Rich on his way from a costumer with a "devil" costume under his arm. He appropriates the costume and, dressed as his Satanic majesty, starts on a series of adventures that lead to all kinds of amusing complications. He spends a pleasant evening in the home of Jack Sprat and his wife (unknown to both of them), and by hiding under the dining room table and alternately pulling Mrs. Sprat's hair and slapping Mr. Sprat on his bald pate he succeeds in starting a record-breaking family quarrel. The climax is reached when Mr. Sprat slams the bedroom door in his wife's face, only to find the devil in his bed.

SOLAX.

THE FINGER PRINTS (Dec. 25).—Hooknose Jake is released from prison and vows to get even with the district attorney who sent him there. Henry Sterling, the district attorney, is in love with the daughter of Walter Burdett, a banker and broker. The old banker refuses, however, to give his consent to the marriage, and Sterling leaves in a resentful and unhappy frame of mind, while the daughter upbraids her father for his unwarranted objection to the match.

Hooknose Jake has spied on the district attorney and shadows him from place to place. He is up against it, not having been able to secure employment, and plans to rob and kill the banker and shift the blame to the district attorney. The offices of the district attorney are opposite the banker's offices, and Hooknose Jake takes advantage of the fact by shooting from Sterling's office across to the banker with a noiseless revolver. Naturally a big stir is created throughout the city, and after some investigation the police figure that Sterling is the guilty man, and circumstantial evidence almost convicts him.

A young detective on the case examines carefully the murdered body and finds finger prints on the white vest of the dead banker. This he secures for his own purposes, and follows up the investigation. He assumes various disguises, and not only shadows the district attorney and takes occasion to compare Sterling's finger prints with the finger prints on the dead man's vest, but also learns of Hooknose Jake's activity. He follows up the clue and one evening finds Jake in the office of the district attorney. Jake is there placing more evidence to incriminate his enemy. However, just as the detective is about to hide behind the curtain, the criminal sees his reflection in a mirror. A fight and a spectacular chase down fire escapes ensues, in which the criminal makes a get-away. In the struggle the dirty hands of Jake impress themselves on the cuffs of the detective. The detective compares the finger prints on his cuffs with those on the dead banker's vest, and is sure of his man. Later, in trying to overdo himself, he sends a message to the police, informing them that they would find evidence against the district attorney. The detective traces down the source of the telegram and finds Jake in his den.

THE WOMAN BEHIND THE MAN (Dec. 27).—Two couples start out in life, after a honeymoon. One couple has the prospect of living on $100 a week, and the other couple is forced to live on $25 a week. The $25-a-week pair are satisfied with their existence and live within their income. On the other hand, the other couple, who have an income of $100 a week, are discontented, because of the woman's extravagance. Instead of living within her income, she expresses her dissatisfaction and nags at her husband and scolds him for earning so little money. She buys new clothes very often, and spends twice the money he makes, thus causing him to go into debt, and in order to make both ends meet he is forced to steal.

During the time that the $25-a-week couple have been making their way ahead, prospering and becoming successful, the other couple continually keep going down the ladder. The end finds this couple separating—the woman, in poverty, about to take the only road open to a poor woman with extravagant tastes, and the man we find in a saloon, disheveled and shabby, about to be thrown out by the bouncer.

MAJESTIC.

JACK IN THE BOX. (Dec. 22).—A poor little waif visits the Christmas window of a large department store every day and, with the aid of her child's imagination, plays with the toys as if they were in her actual possession. One day she discovers that her favorite "Jack in the Box" and chocolate soldier, along with several of their toy companions, have disappeared from the window. Heartbroken, she wanders up Fifth Avenue and looks in the window of a large mansion. There she sees her toys grouped around the Christmas tree of a wealthy little girl. She falls asleep on the steps and the little rich child, unknown to her parents, finds her and takes her to bed in her own room. The children fall asleep in each other's arms and have a wonderful dream. The toys, led by "Jack in the Box," take the little girls to toyland and introduce them to Santa Claus. They watch Santa make his pretty toys. The dollies and tin soldiers dance for them, and they are very much shocked when the mother of the rich child wakes them up and asks who the little waif is. The daughter announces that she is a little girl whom she has adopted and insists upon her sharing all her Christmas presents. The children have a happy time playing with the toys, but cannot quite understand why "Jack in the Box" refuses to talk to them as he did in their marvelous journey to toyland.

RELIANCE.

A FAIRYLAND BRIDE (Dec. 14).—Young Phillip Gray finds his convalescence at a lonely farmhouse a very dull affair. When he commences to receive little notes and dainty bunches of flowers from an unknown "fairy" things begin to look interesting. He makes inquiries, but can find no one who knows who the unknown girl can be. Often from his window he catches a glimpse of a pretty golden head as the "fairy" steals away. One day, having recovered somewhat, he gives chase, finally catching her. But the exertion proves too much after his recent illness, and he faints. When he wakes he finds himself wrapped in a soft blanket, and he knows it was the "fairy's" kindness that prompted this. He leaves a note for her on the tree, asking her to meet him. She answers and they become good friends. Before long Phillip asks the girl, whose identity he does not know, to become his wife. She consents and the ceremony is performed in Dingle Dell. She insists that Phillip wear a handkerchief over his eyes all during the wedding, and when it is removed he looks about, to see all his old friends surrounding him. Prominent among them is his doctor, the father of the "fairy," who sent her into the country to bring back an interest in life and health to the poor invalid, who later won her heart and hand.

AMERICAN.

THE RECOGNITION (Dec. 23).—Thomas Mercer and his two sons, Dale and Lawrence, take up their abode in a little cottage near the outskirts of the village. Near the home of the Mercers lives Salina Masters and her daughter Ruth. One day while walking to the general store, Thomas Mercer meets Mrs. Masters and at sight of him she faints, falling into his arms. The sons of Mercer hurry to their father's side and carry Mrs. Masters to her home. While there they meet the daughter, Ruth, and Lawrence is attracted with her beauty. While going to their home after caring for Mrs. Masters the boys pass the house of Kit Murphy, a rough woman of the town, and Dale lingers to talk with her, while Lawrence goes home. Dale, too has noticed the comeliness of Ruth Masters and takes the first opportunity to talk with her. This infuriates Kit Murphy, to whom he has also shown attention.

Tom Mercer is sitting in his little home one day when suddenly he starts from his reverie, rushes out into the street and to the home of Salina Masters. While Tom is at Mrs. Masters' home his son Dale meets Ruth and they walk down the street together. Nearing a secluded place he suddenly puts his arm around her and kisses her. This is witnessed by Kit Murphy and she grabs a gun from the holster of a passerby and rushes to shoot Dale for his fickleness. Lawrence has joined Ruth and Dale and the brothers engage in a quarrel. The woman Kit rushes upon them and fires a shot at Dale, fatally wounding him. A crowd of men gather about and some of them take Kit away to her home. In the meantime a tragic meeting has taken place at the some of Salina Masters, where Lawrence and Ruth have gone after the shooting to tell the father of the affair.

Mrs. Masters had recognized that day upon the village street in Tom Mercer the husband who had deserted her and the baby daughter twenty years ago, taking with him in his insanely jealous rage, his two sons, and the husband and father had now come to ask forgiveness of Mrs. Masters, which name she had taken after making the West her home. They all hurry to the scene of the tragedy where Mrs. Masters, much to the surprise of the daughter, Ruth, catches the dying man to her breast and weeps over him. Realizing that he is beyond earthly aid, they repair to the home of Mrs. Masters, where Tom Mercer startles his own son by pointing to Ruth and saying "She is your sister." Lawrence asks an explanation of his father, who tells him all, and in the reunion of the father and mother, the former lovers find enough happiness to compensate them for "what might have been."

BLACKENED HILLS (Dec. 26).—Up in the mountains lives a girl, who had excited the interest of two men. Jack Upham loved Martha Vail with an honest man's affection; Joe Canfield looked upon her with lust in his heart. Among the mountain folks lived Jenny Hart, a woman of unrestrained passions and whose heart was full of evil. Her nature had conceived a liking for Jack Upham and she was determined to win his love in return. Alone in one of the wildest canyons of the mountains lived an old woman, reputed, to be a witch, who was shunned by the superstitious mountain folk and feared because of her supposed supernatural powers. Because of their attitude her heart was full of bitterness for all mankind. Destitute, she wanders from her cabin in search of food. She stops at the home of Jenny Hart, who in fear and fury drives her away with a rifle, and following her, she calls for the assistance of Joe Canfield, who threatens the old woman with violence if she loiters. At the home of Martha Vail she is given food and shelter and human sympathy. Jack's love for Martha is known to Jenny Hart and she plots with Joe to kidnap him and that with the rival out of the way she can secure his heart. The kidnapping is successful and Jack is secured hand and feet and Joe goes to get Martha. She sees him coming and locking the door escapes through the window. Joe breaks in the door and finds her gone, but looking through the window sees her in the distance and pursues her. In the meantime, the witch has released Jack and he goes to the rescue of Martha. In order to stop Joe Canfield, the witch sets fire to the undergrowth and soon an enormous fire protects the lovers from the plotters. They wander away in happiness, but in the morning Jenny looks upon Blackened Hills as a result of her sin.

THE GIRL OF THE MANOR (Dec. 28).—In a beautiful house lived unhappy Marjorie Briscom. Her guardian aunt, a heartless, cold woman, much in love with and loved by the Count de Villiers, conspired to hasten the death of Marjorie so that she might herself inherit the wonderfully rich estate that was now Marjorie's. To this end she exercised her power of guardian by providing a hunchback, horribly repulsive in appearance and a cocaine fiend, to follow the girl about the spacious gardens and never to let her across the threshold of the garden gate.

From the hotel to the beach came Ralph Beresford. He strolled idly along, and seeing a garden, entered. Marjorie, strolling in the path close to the tree in which the hunchback secreted his cocaine, found opportunity to elude him. The attraction was mutual, and in the days that followed they met frequently.

Conscious of the stranger's attention, the guardian aunt sent for Count de Villiers. Leaving him on the balcony she found Marjorie and Ralph in a nook in the garden. She asked him to step to the house and he followed, wondering, leaving Marjorie alone. On the balcony he met the Count, who at a gesture from the aunt, explained that Marjorie was his insane wife. Horrified Ralph left. Strolling the beach a few days later, and drawn by the bonds of love, he went to the garden gate. She came to meet him. There was a moment of hesitation, then explanation, and two lonesome souls had found their mates.

THE DEAD PAYS (Two Reels) (Dec. 20).—Captain King is a Northern officer who is shot and left unconscious on the field of battle, which takes place near the home of Lieutenant Kane, a Southern officer, who is also badly wounded. King regains his senses, and as he sits up and endeavors to take a drink from his canteen he sees a ghoul at work on a group of dead and dying Confederates. Drawing his heavy pistol, he makes short work of the human vulture, and staggers to the spot, where he discovers Lieutenant Kane with a spark of life still remaining. He gives the Southerner a drink from his canteen and extricates him from the bodies lying on top of him, and then binds up his wounds.

In the meantime Kane's mother and sister learn that he is among the missing and go to the battlefield in search of him. The two officers are brought to the Kane home, where King soon recovers, while Kane lingers between life and death. King's command comes back and he joins his regiment. The officers hold a conference in the Kane home, and Lieutenant Kane is moved to an old darky's cabin to prevent his capture.

One of the Northern officers is Dick Stanton, of the Confederate secret service. Helen Stanton has nursed King, and he has fallen in love with her. Stanton forces his attentions upon Helen, who is saved from an embarrassing situation by King's interference. Stanton follows Helen to the cabin and enters, intending to cause the arrest of the wounded officer, but is amazed to find that Kane knows him and introduces him to Helen. Stanton tells them he is endeavoring to secure the Federal plans for General Lee, and Helen promises to aid him. During the conference he, supposedly, accidentally knocks down the candlestick, and when the light goes out he hands the papers to Helen, who has been watching her opportunity, and she rushes from the room. The sentries head her off and attempt to capture her, and she doubles on her tracks and re-enters the house, running up to the attic. Captain King follows and is thunderstruck to find out the identity of the fugitive. He takes the papers from her and, hearing the steps of other pursuers on the stairs, he takes quick action to save her. Hilding her, he kicks the window out and shoots himself in the arm and tells the other officers the spy has leaped out. His coat is torn open to bind his wound, and the missing papers drop to the floor. He can make no explanation, and an immediate court martial is ordered. Rather than betray Helen, King accepts his condemnation as a spy. Stanton manages to stay behind during the excitement in the attic, and finds Helen. She promises to elope with him if he will leave behind a written confession that he is the guilty party, to exonerate King. He writes the confession, but refuses to give it to her, and the overwrought girl attempts to take it by force. She is roughly handled by Stanton, and in the scuffle she pulls his revolver from its holster and fires. The shot arouses the officers on the floor below, and as they come rushing up Helen places the confession in the stiffening hand of Stanton, acknowledging that he is a Confederate spy, and secretes herself. King is restored to his position, and parts from Helen in an affecting scene.

HOFFMEYER'S LEGACY (Dec. 23).—Hoffmeyer is harassed by creditors, but thinks his troubles are over when he receives a legacy of $500. He sneaks away from his wife to make a "dash" around town, and comes home at 2 A. M., feeling happy. His joy is shortlived, however, when he finds the door locked, and his spouse on the other side demands the money before she will permit him to enter. He takes half of it and hides it under a barrel, and his wife, peeping behind the curtain, sees him. After he has retired she goes out to get the rest of the money, and Hoffmeyer locks the door and refuses to let her in until she sends in the money. Clad in her nightgown, she is being thoroughly chilled, when she sees men approaching and runs away. Frightened, Hoffmeyer, clad in his pajamas, goes out to bring her back. The chase is joined in by neighbors and police, presenting ludicrous situations, until Hoffmeyer catches up with his spouse and is arrested with her. The police magistrate in the night court suffers an injury to his dignity when the struggling pair are brought before him, but he quickly counts the money taken from them and fines them $500.

THE DRUMMER'S VACATION (Dec. 23). — A traveling man is vacationing at a summer resort kept by a farmer and his wife, and falls in love with a rich widow. The spooning of the two gets on the farmer's nerves, and he tries in various ways to discourage them. Twice, peeking through the window, he finds the flirtatious drummer making a fuss over his own wife, and when he rushes in he finds that the widow has returned and is occupying the drummer's attention. He gets his shotgun and tries to scare the drummer with it, but his wife takes it away from him and stands guard over him while she makes him do the kitchen work.

THOSE in a position to buy films where they please with the exclusive aim of pleasing themselves will be interested in which are selling upon their own merits in the open market.

Monumental multiple reel subjects, some of them hand-colored, as only the European market affords, will be available at an early date.

The most prominent comedians of the silent stage of Europe, foremost of whom is will contribute to make COSMOPOLITAN comedy releases important events to those in quest of good, clean and wholesale comedy.

COSMOPOLITAN FILM subjects will not be handled by any one else in North America and buyers therefore are fully protected.

A comfortable and up-to-date projection room on the premises, just completed, is ready to carry conviction to those desiring ocular demonstration.

Particulars, terms and conditions upon request.

THE HOUSE OF

SELIG

SELIG'S GREAT CHRISTMAS WEEK PROGRAM.

Dec. 23rd. HARBOR ISLAND

A story of modern American business and of how it conflicted with the old Spanish ideals. Produced on the shore of one of the Pacific's quaintest islands. Full of action and atmosphere. It introduces Miss Kathlyn Williams in a series of dashing episodes. 1000 feet.

Dec. 24th. RODERICK'S RIDE

A picturesque little play of the West memorializing a ranch boy who makes a wild ride to the settlement to get the medicine that saves the life of his baby sister. The scenic effects of this subject, as well as the heart interest, make it very vivid, vital and attractive. 1000 feet.

Dec. 25th. A FINE HOLIDAY OFFERING

A COUNTERFEIT SANTA CLAUS

A pathetic picture of the privations of poverty when the season of good cheer animates the world. A poor father unable to secure work determines to take the desperate chance of stealing Christmas presents for his children. How he is dissuaded and is eventually blessed is cleverly delineated. 1000 feet.

Dec. 26th. THE LITTLE ORGAN PLAYER OF SAN JUAN

A colorful and romantic tale of southern California dealing with the declining power of the beneficent rule of the Padres, showing how that human bread cast upon the waters returned after many days, to stay the hand of the despoilers through the power of music. 1000 feet.

Dec. 27th. A PAIR OF BOOTS

How the "Duke of Leisure" reached his winter home.

This diverting double bill has variety in its comedy call. It shows that a man is not known by his boots; and practical jokers are liable to bring strange guests home to roost. In the case of the Duke of Leisure he experiences unusual difficulty in getting arrested and incarcerated for the frosty winter. 1000 feet.

From the Patrons View Point

What Causes People

to continually patronize one Picture Theatre in preference to another? Of course, location, appearances, films, etc. have a great deal to do with it, but quality of the picture is what builds up a steady patronage that makes the business profitable.

This depends largely on your light and if you are using any other device than a to step down your current you are not getting best results.

With our machine you can produce a clear, white, steady light that won't worry your "house" by continuous flickering and will surprise you with the difference it makes with the films.

It is the only device that can be changed instantly to any of the three intensities without breaking the circuit between adjustments.

But this is not all. We will guarantee that our Compensarc

Will Cut 65% from Your Light Bill and we'll send you one on 30 days' free trial to prove it.

We have a little 22 page booklet that explains all the reasons why If you want a better light at ⅓ your present cost, send for it today. It's free.

MOVING PICTURE ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT

Used and Highly Endorsed by the United States Army.
BIGGEST SENSATION IN THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD
Can be operated by a boy 10 years old. One customer writes: "Plant running like a top and delivering the 'juice' right along every day for our moving picture house. Costs us about one-tenth as much as public service. Also pumps water to all our buildings, 2,000 gallons per day."
Write to-day for Bulletin 101. It is a mighty interesting booklet.

Newburgh, New York,

"Imitation is the Sincerest Flattery."

An old saying, but so true. There is no better way to judge a screen. The RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN, better today than ever, very naturally should have imitators. It's the law of human nature to follow where other shoes have trod, so if you will profit by the experience of others, don't permit yourself to be deceived by "something just as good."

Our brains (could we modestly confess we have some) and the work of the most careful operators, gives you in the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN something way beyond the efforts of those who would ape.

We sell you not only a RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN, but give you a service that will make you thank yourself for all time that you enlisted under us. It's that feeling of friendship and our aim to treat our purchasers as we ourselves would want to be treated, that counts a great deal. But it is only one of the many features why you should do business with us. In the first place WE HAVE THE GOODS.

JANE ARRIVES AT THE RANCH

JACK'S BURGLAR

His father and mother avisiting, Jack is left in charge of the ranch. A beautiful girl arrives, a friend of his aunt's, desiring to stay a few days. Jack, love smitten, knows she will not remain if she discovers the circumstances, so he presses the foreman and cook into service to impersonate his parents. All would have gone swimmingly had she not accidentally discovered Jack's trick and decided to turn the tables. She ingeniously relieves him of his cash, and when the real mother arrives, there is a truly comical situation in which love triumphs.

(THREE REELS)

DRAMATIC SCENES

The administering of the deadly drug to steal an inheritance, plunging a woman's mind into idiocy. The assassination of her fiance as he rows to keep the decoy tryst at the seaside cliffs. The novel stroke of science that restored the woman's sanity by means of cinematography. The detection of the criminal by the veriest chance through dissimilar handwritings. The arrest of the malefactor at the height of a masquerade ball.

THE BRIDGE OF SORROW

(TWO REELS)

The greed of a railroad executive which sent to their death the many when the train dropped through the weakly constructed bridge into the stony depths of the gorge. A juggling with lives which brought disaster and desolation, and which dispatched the juggler to a felon's cell. The overhearing of a wife's fatal denunciation that put convict stripes upon the doer of the crime terrible.

LISTEN TO KENNEDY

A. M. Kennedy, general manager of the Universal's tremendous organization on the Universal ranch, where a dozen of the world's best stage directors are working in harmonious concert to produce the best one, two and three reel pictures that money and brains can make, has just shot this hot wire into headquarters. Read it, every word:

Sheridan's Ride

101 BISON

"Three reel feature film entitled 'Sheridan's Ride' now in process of production is unquestionably the greatest war picture ever made. Otis Turner, producer, is on his mettle and I am not sparing expense. Film historically correct. Plot, theme and treatment perfect. Consider this will be the masterpiece of the decade in military pictures. SEVEN HUNDRED TRAINED SOLDIERS including practically all the state militia of Southern California are being used. You will simply go wild with enthusiasm and excitement when you see the three reels."

Now, Mr. Exhibitor, in the name of heaven why should you split up your profits with any "state rights" man when you can get such a feature as "Sheridan's Ride" once, twice or three times a week WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE if you will only

"JONES' WEDDING DAY" (Comedy).

Monday, December 30th, 1912.

A thousand feet of laughter, at least ten laughs to each foot.

"THE BEARER OF BURDENS" (Drama).

Thursday, January 2nd, 1913.

The strength of a husband's devotion, the weakness of a wife's frivolity, and the disgrace wrought by a dishonest brother form the basis of an emotional King Baggot offering of rare merit.

"WHAT KATY DID"—"PRIZE WINNERS AT THE POULTRY SHOW."

Saturday, January 4th, 1913.

A jolly mix-up of an infatuated youth, an actress, an unsophisticated wife and an angry husband. Exceptionally funny. Along with it an educational industrial.

POWERS

"THE WISE ONE."

Wednesday, January 1st, 1913.

You won't be wise unless you get this comedy. It is full of fun and merriment. Just the kind of comedy that you need to complete a good bill.

"WHEELS OF FATE."

Friday, January 3rd, 1913.

A particularly strong dramatic offering with intense situations well portrayed and handsomely staged. There is something about it that will linger in your mind forever.

"THE RIDE OF JENNIE McNEIL."

Thursday, January 2nd, 1913.

That patriotic poem, so dear to every American, vividly portrayed by an excellent cast, artistically staged. Not a single detail or thrill left out of this historical event.

"IT DOESN'T PAY."

Sunday, January 6th, 1913.

The havoc and shame wrought by gambling is vividly portrayed in this dramatic photoplay. A strong picture with a strong moral.

Cousins of Sherlock Holmes

Released Wednesday, January 1st

Because there happens to be a striking resemblance between Edgar Carroll and a noted criminal, Edgar is pestered by the sleuths. He gets even on some would-be detectives by disguising as a woman, and then there ensues a merry chase, and there is a complication in mistaken identities.

Canine Rivals

Released Friday, January 3rd

When Harry sees that the little Pomeranian entirely alienates his wife's affections, he decides to get some canine rivals, and installs in the house pups of all descriptions, to whom he transfers his affections. A war of jealousy ensues. There are scenes with Mary trying to feed her pet, and Harry endeavoring to feed his. Life in the house eventually becomes unendurable, and a compromise is soon effected, wherein it is agreed that while Mary may keep her pet, she must not neglect her husband; that she is to treat him better than a dog.

A Million Dollars

Released Wednesday, January 8th

A clerk, dissatisfied with his existence, dreams that every man in this world has a million dollars. He goes to the restaurant and finds that there isn't a waiter around to serve him. He reads a notice to the effect that they have all retired, being satisfied with their fortune. Wherever he goes he cannot be served because no one wants to work.

The Mutiny of Mr. Henpeck

Released Friday, January 10th

Mr. Henpeck weighs one hundred pounds and his wife weighs two hundred and fifty. Everything wifey says goes until Mr. Henpeck is sat upon too heavily, and then the "worm turns."

"THE GREAT SACRIFICE"

Two Reels. January 3

Marvelous scenes of battle are shown in which two brothers are arrayed against each other. One brother believes the other dead and marries his wife. The man returns and, unknown to them, extricates them from a dilemma and departs without revealing himself. Countless soldiers are seen engaged in bitter struggles, bombs are seen bursting, men drop from galloping horses. The story is pathetic and acted in a touching manner.

6000 feet of Superb Art and Dramatic Beauty

A TENSE MOMENT
"Slanders! lies! all lies, my Lord!"

The Most Beautiful Motion Picture Ever Made

"Probably the most stupendous and beautiful picture ever produced." —N. Y. Mirror

IT REQUIRES one hour and forty minutes to project this superb motion picture. The Mirror says it "is probably the most stupendous and beautiful picture ever produced." The 6,000 feet of film is divided into five parts — one part to a reel. The picture is greeted with the greatest appreciation ever accorded a cineographic product, wherever and whenever shown. It is an epoch maker in the art of motion pictures. Full of tense and highly dramatic situations, full of pictorial loveliness, the rhythmic beauty and dynamic personality of Miss Gardner permeate the picture from its stirring start to its tragic end. Mr. Harrison, of the Motion Picture World, very kindly says that he "thinks her performance will rank as one of the greatest ever shown on the screen up to the present time." Her support is good, the scenic effects are wholly in character, the costuming as accurate and beautiful as cultured taste and money could evolve.

The story, while one of deep intrigue, is nevertheless told so clearly and well that, as Mr. Harrison says, it is like not only seeing but hearing a great stage performance. These are the last days in which you will have the opportunity to secure the picture for your State. Don't delay any longer. Wire now for particulars. The finest assortment of 5-color lithographs ever furnished with a motion picture, the most attractive display of still pictures, the most interesting herald ever written — these will help you in your work of advertising. The next production by Miss Gardner's company will be Hamlet, Miss Gardner playing the title role.

It is crowded with effective incidents from beginning to end, and the continuity of the story as told by the talented director and sympathetic actress is perfect. There is no lapse of interest at any stage of the production. . . . I rose from the exhibition as I might after watching and hearing a great stage performance.—Louis Reeves Harrison, M. P. World, Nov. 30.

The Edison Kinetoscope

Underwriters' Type "B"

When the crowds begin to drift by your place at night and get jumping around the entrance of the movies on the next block, don't stick an extra arc light out in front and think you've fixed things. Look at the heart of your business — at your moving picture machine.

Pictures look wobbly and spotty and full of specks? Keep the audience waiting for repairs once in a while? No wonder the crowds are going somewhere else.

Ever seen an Edison Kinetoscope? Ever notice how simple and strong it was—how there wasn't any possibility of fire risk in running it? Ever notice the pictures it threw — bright and clear and steady as real life? Ever thought of its economy? Of course you have. Then sit right down and ask us to send you a copy of the Edison Kinetogram and Catalog 500. You'll be glad.

An interesting story of the strong friendship existing between two young boys—one rich and the other poor.

SPLIT REEL FOR FRIDAY, DECEMBER 27

"Palmetto Hat Industry" — 350 Feet — Friday, December 27

A complete, instructive picture, showing the evolution of the palmetto hat from the gathering of the dwarf leaves to a complete hat ready for the department store.

"Once Was Enough" — 650 Feet — Friday, December 27

An itinerant troupe in trouble—the performance is so bad the players are driven from the town in a box car.

"The Blind Cattle King" — A splendid story, described below. — Saturday, December 28

"A Mother's Strategy" — Monday, December 30

A designing mother spoils a real love match, causing her son to marry for social prestige—it does not have the desired effect—the girl seeks and secures revenge.

"The Power of Silence" — Two Reels — Monday, December 30

A most intense dramatic story, told in two reels—every foot is essential to the picture—no padding of any sort.

"The Blind Cattle King"

A romantic story of a blind, yet rich Mexican Cattle King. He poses as a poor laborer, and goes forth to find a mate who does not know of his wealth. On the border he finds a beautiful girl, saves her from drowning and after many trials marries her and takes her to his wonderful estate.

Facts and Comments

BY incorporating an unwarranted and loosely drawn censorship clause into the provisions of the Folks ordinance regulating motion pictures within the limits of New York City, the Board of Aldermen will make it necessary for the Mayor to exercise his veto power. The city charter provides: "In case an ordinance or resolution embraces more than one distinct subject, the Mayor may approve the provisions relating to one or more subjects and disapprove the others." What power has the Board of Aldermen to confer functions of censorship on the Board of Education? What of the legal force of the decisions of a tribunal whose very title to office is doubtful? What assurance is there that the Board of Education is willing to undertake the functions which the Aldermen seek to foist upon its members? Censorship and the regulation of buildings in which motion pictures may be shown are two entirely distinct and separate matters and can hardly be regulated by the provisions of one and the same ordinance. The indications are that the Mayor will veto the censorship clause of the ordinance and sign the rest of it. The provisions of the new ordinance will take effect thirty days after its approval by the Mayor.

CENSORSHIP is the ghost that will not down. At the end of every hostile wave drastic measures are taken by the authorities in order to suppress the crime films. Public sentiment, outraged by a few specially lurid films and an over-abundance of glaring and atrocious posters, demands regulation. The police then step in and begin to exercise the functions of censorship. Now, there is all the difference between a scavenger and a censor. As a rule, the police are good scavengers but bad censors. They possess neither the training nor the education requisite for fair and successful censorship. As a rule, nobody realizes this fact more keenly than the police officials themselves. They, however, are the only relief in immediate sight, and thus a work is thrust upon them which they are incompetent to perform and which is wholly foreign to the scope of their ordinary activities.

What is the result? The police, unable to discriminate, begin to blunder, and their decisions too often work a hardship on exhibitor and manufacturer. This, however, is by no means the worst effect of placing the motion picture, as it were, under police surveillance. The public will associate the motion picture with all kinds of dubious and semi-criminal enterprises in the community. Immediately there is an irretrievable loss of prestige and reputation for the motion picture. A few men, intent upon immediate profits and careless about the consequences of their acts to the industry at large, manufacture, advertise and exhibit pictures showing or suggesting crime, scandal and immorality, and as a result the motion picture is discredited and exhibitors as well as manufacturers of the best reputation must suffer along with the unscrupulous pariahs.

This is truly a matter which concerns every friend of the picture, and especially the manufacturers. Motives of enlightened self-interest should prompt all reputable manufacturers to get together on this subject. It is in their power to greatly limit the evils of lurid posters and crime films. If they will deny service to a man who persists in showing obviously scandalous and disgusting films and in advertising by means of hideous daubs on paper and canvas, there would soon follow a rapid improvement. The organized exhibitors, too, should lose no time in going on record. An offending member ought to be disciplined most severely, and expulsion ought to follow on the heels of an unheeded warning. We are very happy to say that since we began this agitation against the crime-film and the crime-poster, matters have improved here in New York. Fourteenth Street, which a month ago resembled a pictorial nightmare, has partially reformed, and one of the largest theaters there is now using no colored posters of any kind. The result is that this particular theater looks like a refined place of amusement, which men and women may visit without compromising their self-respect.

We cannot help wondering at the cause of all these ghastly murder-posters and crime-films. What is to be gained by this sort of picture, and whom does the dime-museum style of advertising draw into the theater? Decent people, of course, are at once repelled, and wherein lies the profit in catering to the morbid minority? Harry Furniss, the well-known English humorist, who visited us recently, speaks of our moving picture posters in a clever article printed in our esteemed contemporary, The London Bioscope. He says: "Any ordinary theatrical venture would be ruined instanter by the exhibition of posters such as these. They are fifty per cent. worse than the most atrocious poster advertising the most plebeian play in the evilest and most poverty-stricken purlieus frequented by the veriest riff-raff of the amusement-going public. . . . Whether the less-educated section of the community is attracted by them is open to considerable doubt." There are men who commit arson because they are victims of pyromania. Their disordered minds must see flames and hear the clatter of the engines. A similar disease of the mind seems to afflict the poster maniacs. They must see blood, pistols, convicts, etc., hideously colored on a piece of paper or a stretch of canvas. Let us remove them from the exhibiting business.

Aspects of the Sunday Question—II.

By W. Stephen Bush

THERE are many things favoring the spread of the Sunday exhibition. I have pointed out that the crucial point in the whole matter is the proper selection of a program which takes notice of the character of the day. Happily there is enough material for a special Sunday program, no matter what service an exhibitor is taking. Only recently a well-known Eastern exhibitor, who is making a specialty of good Sunday programs and getting an admission of twenty-five cents, expressed to the writer his gratification over the general increase of pictures suitable for Sunday exhibition. "Two years ago," he said, "I had to depend for my Sunday program on just one group of manufacturers, and I often had to take pictures that looked out of place alongside the rest of my program. Things are different to-day. I can arrange my Sunday program without depending on any particular group of manufacturers." The exhibitor ought to have the utmost freedom in selecting his Sunday reels, and the exchanges and manufacturers ought to aid him in every possible way, allowing him to be the judge of his own needs.

Objection has been made to the Sunday exhibition on the ground that, in the course of time, there would surely be some exhibitors who would abuse the Sunday privilege and substitute in place of an educational and uplifting program the promiscuous offerings of the weekdays. This objection is well taken and deserves some notice. If the decision of the matter could be left to a majority of the exhibitors in any part of the country we feel quite sure that they would never deviate from the proper Sunday program. Unfortunately the majority cannot legally bind the minority in such cases, even if it is a minority of just one. Recent events have demonstrated but too plainly that the entire industry is often at the mercy of a few unscrupulous men who, for the sake of quick profits, do not hesitate to bring the pictures into danger and disrepute.

We believe it would be more satisfactory to the exhibitors themselves if the composition of the Sunday program were to be determined by legislative regulation rather than by individual discretion. Without going too deeply into any detailed plans it might be suggested that the control of the Sunday entertainment be placed in the hands of some responsible educational or civic body. There are in every community in the country enough public-spirited citizens, men or women, who will be satisfied and who will be competent to undertake this task. We have but recently called attention to a working arrangement of that nature in the City of Hamburg, Germany. There the teachers of the common schools resolve themselves once a week into a committee on the selection of pictures suitable for children. The plan has worked out to the entire satisfaction of everybody, and has reconciled many conscientious parents to the moving picture entertainment.

We would not like to see the Sunday show made the subject of police jurisdiction. The duty of the police is to stop obviously harmful films, but it would scarcely be within their province to pass on the educational merits of a film. A civic or educational organization would in all probability be willing to act as volunteers and expect no compensation. Such posts would soon be considered posts of honor. It would be deplorable to have the censoring of special Sunday programs placed in the hands of politicians. Anyone familiar with our political system needs to hear no arguments on this proposition.

There are to-day hundreds upon hundreds of exhibitors who take a just pride in the character of their Sunday programs. Except in a few localities there has been no abuse of the Sunday privilege. It stands to reason then that the body entrusted with the regulation of the Sunday entertainment would, at the outset, be sure of the hearty co-operation of the vast majority of exhibitors. He would be a reckless person indeed who would defy the law and public sentiment at the same time.

It would be proper and fitting to have at least one lecture as part of the Sunday program. That would help to emphasize the character of the day. It would also vary the monotony of the offerings during the rest of the week. Right here the Sunday program would serve a most excellent purpose. It would help to convince the doubting Thomases of the educational possibilities of the motion picture. It would insure variety. What a blessed certainty of not seeing cowboys "shooting up" a bar-room or chasing the wrong man through five hundred feet of more or less variegated scenery. A guarantee could be given to spectators that they will not be asked to witness "hold-ups," gunplays, prison horrors, The Temptations of Maggie, the Queen of Sinkers, automobile races, coarse or refined burglars, Mexicans, half-breeds, sheriffs, detectives, outlaws, bandits, convicts, chases or china-smashing comedies. There are to my own certain knowledge quite a number of men, women and children who would be willing to pay handsomely for such a guarantee.

HUNGRY, YET ILL-FED, IN A CITY OF PLENTY.

SURELY New York should be a place in which one ought to be able to get the latest and best of everything. Included in "everything" is, of course, that which is entertaining to the highest degree. If here there are the best of theaters there surely ought to be the best of moving picture houses, but, however, such is not the case.

The admirer of moving pictures need not go entirely hungry in New York, but he stands a chance of being poorly fed. If his appetite is of the voracious kind, with digestive organs capable of assimilating that which is not of the "first-class" style, he may be able to get enough; but if anything of an epicurean, he is likely to go hungry, if not satisfied with that which is of a poorer quality. Hungry for some good and "latest release" pictures, the writer one day visited what he supposed would be two of the best picture houses between the two rivers. What a disappointment! Of eleven pictures shown, only three were "latest releases," the other eight varied in age of from one to four months. There were absolutely no feature films; nothing of either scenic, industrial or educational order except Pathe's Weekly (which, by the way, was the best picture shown); neither were there any of those good pictures advertised in THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

Where can these pictures be seen? Is it not worth some one's while to publish a moving picture directory, even as the theaters do? True, there are difficulties in the way, but enterprise always overcomes difficulties; it seems only half doing a thing to advertise good pictures, without giving information as to when and where they can be seen. Hoping to find better food, the writer crossed the bridge and tried Brooklyn. For the second time his experience has shown that there are as a rule better picture programs here than in Manhattan, but the conclusion must be drawn that for ten cents it is impossible to secure a good up-to-date picture program. Why not have some good twenty-five-cent houses, with, say, a few fifteen-cent seats if the lower prices of admission render it impossible to secure a proper standard of pictures equal to the production. There is, without doubt, occasion for a decided breaking away from the present cheap monotony of what a couple of years ago was called the "same thing." The decided advance in picture making has not been responded to, with a decided advance in picture exhibiting; in all the city of Greater New York there is no one or more well-known places where one can really see the "latest and best" pictures. "Latest and best"—these alluring words are universally painted outside every moving picture place in the country; that the words are supposed to possess value is admitted by every advertiser who uses them; the occasions upon which they are true will not amount to five per cent. If really valuable, when positively true, let some enterprising exhibitor prove it; without doubt his place would soon be a well-known crowded resort, and those hungry people like the writer would know where to go to satisfy a somewhat fastidious appetite.

WILLIAM A. PALEY LOSES FOOT.

William A. Paley, the veteran cameraman, who by reason of an injury suffered while working in the field in Northern California for the Nestor Company has been compelled to undergo several operations, as a culmination of his troubles has had his right foot amputated by surgeons in the Columbia Hospital, Los Angeles. Fred Mace, who has taken a deep interest in the misfortune of Mr. Paley, will be pleased to receive contributions for the benefit of Mr. Paley at his home, 305 South Union Avenue, Los Angeles. The Moving Picture World has before pointed out that this is a most worthy case for the consideration of moving picture men and women of all ranks.

Folks Ordinance Passed

First Well-Drawn Picture Theater Ordinance in New York Certain to Become a Law Despite Futile Censorship Joker.

THE much debated Folks ordinance was passed by the New York Board of Aldermen at a regular session on Monday, December 16th. This bill has been before the Aldermen a number of times, and has been often delayed by the representation of the larger theater interests of the city who perceive in its wording clauses that will be of material benefit to the men who are engaged in the motion picture business in a smaller way than themselves. The Folks ordinance since its inception has been known as Mayor Gaynor's pet ordinance. The espousal of the bill is highly creditable to the mayor, as it is probably the first logical and practical motion picture ordinance, as well as the fairest, from all points of view, that has been introduced in the council chamber.

This measure contains many provisions that by this time are quite familiar to the motion picture exhibitors of Greater New York. In brief, they contain relief from conditions that have heretofore been subject to promiscuous and, in some cases, autocratic regulation. The ultimate object of the ordinance, and one that will eventually be accomplished, is the raising of the motion picture exhibition business to a much higher plane. That part of the ordinance which raises the maximum seating capacity of exhibition halls from three hundred to six hundred, will allow the exhibitor to enlarge the seating capacity of his house, and, in this way, the small store show will become larger and, of course, by virtue of its increased capacity, can afford to give a better exhibition. The one great boon conferred by this act, provided it is not vetoed by the mayor for reasons which will presently be set forth, is the elimination of cheap vaudeville. This in itself assures to the New York exhibitor in particular, and to the business in general, a much cleaner state of affairs.

There are other good features of the bill, among which are more definitely defined powers for the license bureau. The moral regulation of picture exhibition comes more directly under the personal supervision of the mayor, who becomes invested with the right to pass final judgment upon cases where license has been suspended pending investigation for moral delinquency of exhibitions. Educational exhibitions are exempt from the provisions of the bill, except that they are obliged to apply for a license. There are specific clauses dealing separately with exits, stairways, fire-escapes, constructive material, floor grades, aisles, chairs, toilets, fire apparatus, lighting, heating, ventilation, operating rooms, carpets and hangings, and providing for inspection thereof.

These are the salient points of the new measure which it is hoped will be signed by the mayor, but there is some doubt as to whether it will pass the mayor on account of a joker amendment attached to the bill by Alderman Frank Dowling, minority leader on the Tammany side of the house. The amendment calls for censorship of all motion pictures by the Board of Education. It was quite evident that those in opposition to the measure were sparring for wind in the realization that they were not on the winning side. Their plan seemed to be to delay action and by that means put the vote over to a later day.

It was plain that the amendment was also calculated to nullify the act by rendering it unconstitutional. Alderman Marx pointed out the fact that the city council has no power to lay down any new duties for the Board of Education, which is a separate corporate body under state jurisdiction. The fusion side of the house, of which Mr. Folks is the leader, accepted the amendment in a spirit of compromise and voted for it. The amendment as an amendment should not worry the exhibitor to any extent, even though the mayor should pass upon that. If it does become a law, which is entirely improbable, there can be no dire consequences reasonably anticipated. Exhibitors should rather congratulate themselves that the censorship, in the hands of the Board of Education, would at least be done by men and women of intellect and education instead of being done by policemen, as is the sad case in Chicago. However, the censorship question is too serious a matter to be tacked on to any bill as a mere amendment, and is important enough to deserve consideration by itself in a special bill more carefully drawn than is the aforesaid amendment. As it stands it is unconstitutional; the mayor cannot legally affix his signature to it and he surely will not. But he can sign the Folks ordinance as originally drawn and veto the amendment under Section 40 of the City Charter. The meat of Section 40 is embodied in the following excerpt:

"In case an ordinance or resolution shall embrace more than one distinct subject, the mayor may approve the provisions relating to one or more subjects, and disapprove the others."

While this measure is pending the mayor's signature it would be a wise procedure on the part of every one of the New York exhibitors to write to him, calling his attention to the unconstitutional amendment to the Folks ordinance, at the same time reminding him of his veto rights as set forth in Section 40 of the City Charter. This should be done at once to be of any service.

ITALY'S IRVING PLAYS FOR ITALA.

Zacconi occupies in Italy as unique a position as that held in our own country by the late Sir Henry Irving. The full significance of this fact will be appreciated when we remember that the Italians are a nation artistic to their finger tips; a nation whose highest esteem cannot be won by anything but an art developed to its greatest perfection. That Com. Ermente Zacconi merits his reputation none will deny when they have seen his portrayal of "Old Andrew" in Itala's superb drama, "The Palace of Flames." Certainly the most lavish praise would be well deserved in this case. After seeing the performance one realizes more and more how thoroughly the man is master of his art: for it is not by the accustomed artifices of the kinema actor that Zacconi reaches us; not by frothy emotions or frantic gestures. We thrill with the presence not of an actor playing a part, but of a fellow mortal cruelly wronged. The spirit of a noble human being clothes itself in flesh and is framed within the compass of the screen. Not a glance, not a gesture but has its significance, and in the powerful dramatic scenes, for example, where he confronts the man who has wronged him, we become lost to all but the scene before us. In the stupendous spectacle of the burning mansion where he rescues his enemy, we reach a grand climax which has never been surpassed—perhaps never equaled—in its dramatic power.

"When Soul Meets Soul" (Essanay)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE Essanay Company is to be congratulated on a strong production in the one-reel film entitled "When Soul Meets Soul." The title does not prepare one for the surprise furnished in the story, which, by the way, is unique and absorbing. The settings are Egyptian, of about twenty-two centuries ago, and the scenic artist, stage carpenter and property man have done their work well.

Producer MacDonald had charge of the production, and careful rehearsal is evident in several imposing scenes in an Egyptian palace. He has certainly succeeded in creating the atmosphere of the remote period in which the action takes place, and the costumes have been intelligently chosen.

Francis X. Bushman and Miss E. Dolores Cassinelli appear in the leading roles; Mr. Bushman as Professor Delaplace and the Egyptian warrior, Arames, and Miss Cassinelli as the Egyptian princess, Charazel. Mr. Bushman displays fine versatility in his characterization of the old professor and the youthful Egyptian general, the physical frailties of the former and the lusty vigor of the latter being well simulated. Miss Cassinelli is an excellent opposite, and the love scenes between Princess Charazel and Arames are brimful of passionate ardor. It rather shocks one to see Arames, the passionate lover, become recreant to his pledges of faithfulness and loyalty, in a moment's time, at the sight of a pretty face; and one cannot stretch the imagination sufficiently to believe that the warrior would so brazenly and openly insult the woman he is soon to marry. In this the scenario is defective.

This film abounds in fine dissolving views, some of them being decidedly uncanny in their effects. Especially is this so in the scene where Arames holds the dead body of Charazel in his arms before the statue of the god Osiris. To his astonishment she fades away from his grasp, into thin air. The photography is pleasing throughout, and the film will well repay special advertising.

The opening scene reveals Professor Delaplace in his study, opening a mummy case, in which he is aided by an assistant. The outer casing removed, the professor discovers a letter from his friend, Anderson, dated in Thebes, Egypt, advising him that the mummy is that of an Egyptian princess called Charazel, which is remarkable for its state of preservation. The top is removed and the professor dismisses his assistant. Taking up a handful of the spices surrounding the mummy, the professor is seized with a fit of sneezing, but soon recovers and takes from the case a roll of papyrus. He sits down as he translates the hieroglyphics and soon falls asleep, evidently being affected by the aroma from the papyrus.

By a beautiful dissolving view, the spectator sees the live body of Princess Charazel reclining where the mummy case was seen a moment before. She arises and walks toward the sleeping Delaplace. In an instant, we are transported from the little study to the luxurious quarters of Princess Charazel in her Egyptian palace. She is surrounded by her slaves and ladies in waiting. Arames approaches and they plight their troths, each being smitten with love at sight of the other.

Arames is called away to lead his troops in battle, and the princess pines for his return. On his arrival, a great feast is prepared. Arames and Charazel are seen in the foreground at a table, and all are drinking. The cup from which Arames is drinking falls from the table and is picked up by a beautiful slave girl. Smitten by her beauty, he rudely thrusts the princess aside and, taking the slave in his arms, kisses her passionately. Charazel is mortally wounded at the slight, and rushes out to the statue of the god Osiris, before which she stabs herself to the heart.

Recovering from his fit of madness, Arames rushes hither and thither to find the princess. He discovers her on the instant that she plunged the dagger in her breast, and she dies in his arms. Before she expired she swore by the god Osiris to live again and through the ages to search, so as to right the wrong of a true love spurned.

The Return from Battle of the Victor—From Essanay's "When Soul Meets Soul."

By another dissolving view we are again in Professor Delaplace's study. Princess Charazel is seen approaching the sleeping old man, with a drawn dagger in her hand. She vanishes from the picture as the professor awakes. He drops on his knees before the case and prays: "Charazel, soul of the woman I loved, forgive me," he murmurs. The scene again changes, with lightning swiftness, to the statue of Osiris, where Arames holds the dead body of Charazel in his arms. To his amazement, the body disappears. Delaplace is but the reincarnation of Arames, and Charazel has kept the oath she swore before the god Osiris.

"When Soul Meets Soul" will be released Friday, Jan. 3.

The Handwriting on the Wall.

By Hugh King Harris.

LET'S see, it was not so very many years (one might say months) ago that the motion picture house was considered a "hole in the wall." Mothers would have shuddered to think of their children attending such a place; there were many of the theaters catering to a class of trade off color, to say the least. There was no censorship of photoplays, no license for many of the houses. It is a dark and dismal picture to look back upon, isn't it? But nevertheless, the facts are not exaggerated, as many of us well know. But from the inception of the first nickel-in-the-slot picture machine, there was an underlying sense of the importance of the motion picture business; of the real, intrinsic value of cinematography, and so gradually the business has developed, spread and now holds the center of the stage as the one favored amusement of the American public.

In many conversations with managers of dramatic companies there is ever present the sentiment that the motion pictures are making serious inroads on the legitimate stage, on the "profession" at large. Some of the theatrical profession rave and worry; others seem to pay no heed to the writing on the wall. But let us look the situation squarely in the face; let us see just where and how the motion pictures are affecting the amusement field—the "legitimate" stage, if you will.

To go back again, we see the early stages of the motion picture business unpopular, looked down upon. And we need not look so very far back to remember the days when the theater with its attractions was also considered "wicked and for the ungodly." Moving pictures improved in tone, their environment has improved more rapidly by far than the morals of the stage. Today in some theaters are to be seen spectacles which would not be tolerated for an instant in the picture business. Where previously any sort of storeroom or old building would do for the motion picture house, today we see in small towns and large cities alike, imposing theaters devoted solely to the picture business. Theaters perfectly ventilated, well lighted and catering to women and children especially.

When companies are organized to erect playhouses costing upwards of $150,000 for "mere pictures," there is certainly some virtue to the proposition. Where millions of dollars capital and thousands of persons are engaged in an industry, as they are in the production of photoplays to-day, it is evidence conclusive that the business is founded on a rock and has advanced far and away from the swaddling clothes period.

I contend, and I believe my contention will be borne out by facts, that the motion picture business has advanced and improved more rapidly than the "legitimate" theatrical business. Improved not only in the magnitude of the enterprise, but in morals, in better theaters, in the estimate of the public as a form of amusement; in every way is the improvement marked and emphatic.

Some theatrical folks of the old school fear the new order of things; a cry is raised that the stage is being ruined; that to launch a worthy production along tragedy, comedy or operatic lines is a gamble to-day, for the business is not what it once was. All the failures, poor business and troubles of the managers and producers are laid to the door of the moving pictures.

However, there is this to be said: If actors and actresses find that the stage is unprofitable, there is the motion picture business at hand to turn to. Many well-known theatrical folks are joining picture ranks every day, and more will continue to join. If the local amusement purveyor sees that the picture business is the winner, he has a perfect right to install a projection machine, to install a screen and cater to the public demand. The writing on the wall is very, very plain. Motion pictures are in the ascendancy and the "legitimate" interests must do several things if they would continue to prosper. Improve the standard of plays, and in many instances lower admission prices. The theaters themselves must be made comfortable. Criticism is easy. One is prone to forget some phases of a topic in any discussion, but there is this to be said: the public is the gainer in the whole situation.

As a people we like to be amused, but in the old way amusement was a luxury; now it is an everyday, popular-priced diversion which all can enjoy. As the picture houses have increased, as the films have been steadily improved in photography, selection of subjects and bettered in moral tone, so have the crowds increased.

That the photoplay is as strong as it is, is due to the brains, energy and ambition of the many men behind it; the splendid influence of the trade journals and the many exhibitors everywhere who have all seen the advantages of the business and acted accordingly.

Some of the same spirit, push and general co-operation on the part of those who raise the cry of "wolf" would help materially to equalize matters; it is up to the folks who are bothered to enter into the proposition themselves, or to come to the level of the business—in other words, to "read the writing on the wall."

DYER PRESIDENT OF GENERAL FILM.

Frank L. Dyer has just been elected president of the General Film Company and is now the active executive head of that organization.

Mr. Dyer resigned as president of the Thomas A. Edison Company, Incorporated, to devote his entire time to the General Film Company, as he believed there was greater opportunity and a broader field in the motion picture industry, though his relations with Mr. Edison still remain the very pleasantest.

Mr. Dyer has already begun active work in his new office, bringing to that organization the benefit of his legal training, an exceptional business experience and an intimate knowledge of the motion picture business that few possess.

The General Film Company, with its many branches throughout the United States and Canada and its remarkable organization, had need of a man of the scope and capacity of Mr. Dyer. The motion picture business is considered by all to be only in its infancy; and under the proper direction, the General Film Company will continue to progress rapidly, assuming even a firmer hold on the motion picture industry than ever before.

Mr. Dyer has already posted as his motto: "Courtesy and Consideration to All."

"A Shadow of the Past"

Two-Reel Kay-Bee Release.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A SITUATION of high suspense is worked up in this play according to the interesting methods of Tom Ince. He has a great deal of narrative art in telling his story, or in putting it on so that we may clearly see it in action, and he has done some splendid work in rescuing this type of play from the inconsistencies and primitive sensationalism of early examples. He has given dignity to a class of production with which the country has been long inundated, whose poorer specimens seemed likely to destroy intelligent patronage of the picture shows.

There is also used in this photodrama what is bound to become a powerful factor in future presentations when employed in exactly the same way, a device whose full value is imperfectly grasped by directors, a motion-picture advantage that has hitherto been largely devoted to "visions" or to a pictured story related by one of the characters. I refer to superimposing double exposure at critical moments to make known what is passing in the mind of a character engaged in silent self-debate. No auditory means can be used, as in the old asides and soliloquies, and as there is nothing jarring in a glimpse of what is sweeping through the soul of an actor in the drama during a moment of intense emotion, I have often expressed a hope that an effort would be made to draw the audience nearer to the people of the screen by this spiritual means of thought revelation.

Probably the most difficult problem the modern dramatist has to contend with is that of causing characters to lay bare their inmost sentiments to the audience at acute moments without uttering a word, yet no delicate analysis of character is complete without solving the difficulty. Innumerable instances arise on the stage and in actual life where an actor in the drama is called upon to make a decision which might prove fatal to himself or to some one he desires to protect, and two courses lie open for consideration. These can be pictured as he reflects.

A malefactor may consider himself safely hidden behind a curtain, and the one he has injured may enter the room with full knowledge that the villain is there, go to where a weapon is ready for use and hesitate. Shall he stain his own career or let the other man follow his manifest and ignominious destiny to the end? What tremendous sympathetic interest could be aroused by tracing the line of the superior man's thoughts at such a moment!

Not exactly that situation, but one approaching it and picturing a restraining influence when a woman is called upon to make a decision arises in "A Shadow of the Past." The wife of a Raffles, a dress-suit thief, who makes an occasional haul at social gatherings, witnesses the arrest of her husband when he is followed home by detectives and caught with the goods. She is overwhelmed with shame upon his acknowledgement of guilt and subsequently humiliated by her neighbors.

She finds relief in an opportunity to teach school in the Far West and there begins a new life. Among her pupils is the little son of a widowed military officer stationed at a nearby post. The father of the little boy becomes interested in the girlish-looking school mistress and finally asks her to become his wife. It is at this point that the current of her thoughts is shown by double exposure, and the effect is an instantaneous character revelation.

It is no small matter to hold tension by sending the imagination forward to some emotional incident bound to arrive—constant watching is required in order to avoid a lapse—and it is quite another to arouse that expectancy by showing the true relation of character to circumstance during the exposition. It can be readily appreciated that double exposure, laying bare to the audience the self-struggle of an important character, is one of the surest means of stirring sympathetic attention, and this is very effectively done in making known the backward trend of the young teacher's thoughts. Her mind reverts to the imprisoned man she promised to love, exhibiting her loyalty and tenderness of heart.

The thief does not escape from jail, but he enters upon a violent struggle when being carried to a distant point in the Far West to give testimony relating to a more important criminal and jumps from the train while it is going at full speed. He is seen rolling down into a gully and is soon after announced as dead. He is in truth revived by some friendly Indians and becomes one of their number, acting as their interpreter in dealing with military forces near their reservation.

Scenes from "A Shadow of the Past" (Kay-Bee).

The school mistress sees the announcement of his death and weds the officer whose little child she has been teaching. In the course of time the thief, now a renegade Indian, comes to parley with the military men in relation to a treaty violation, and the officer's wife recognizes the man she believed to be dead, though she is not seen by him. She is overcome, but does not confess to the officer she has married in good faith.

Troops are drawn from the post to the protection of a body of white invaders, and the place falls into the hands of the Indians after a fierce engagement. They murder or torture the helpless inmates until the renegade comes suddenly upon his own wife and the officer's child. In a saving moment he defends her against the redskins, holding them at bay until the troopers return. He spares her and the child, but is shot in trying to escape, killed by the officer whose family he protected.

The final scene is that of his death, a highly dramatic moment, and the rest is inferred by the attitude of the principal characters. I say the rest is inferred because it is indicated without open declaration that the officer grasps the situation of his wife. Her position would be a false one without this and her conduct not in accord with her general character, that of a sensitively honorable woman. A heavy contribution to the charm of these releases is the exquisite finish given by the master hand engaged in developing the films. It is largely on this account that the artistic work done on the other end is given adequately beautiful expression.

A Strong Pair of Edisons

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"AN Unsullied Shield" and "The Maid of Honor" have a very similar fine quality of production that points to capable handling, both clearly indicating a directive spirit thoroughly alive to the proper surroundings of a play, to the precise scenic atmosphere. In both the producer has greatly improved the author's mental picture by details that lead up to personality and temperament in the characterization and has thus brought out the full measure of force in the story.

Strange as it may seem to those only beginning to be interested in moving pictures and partially aware that attention to design, color, costume and general appropriateness of settings is absolutely necessary to success, it may overbalance judgment of the whole effect. A man may be lavish in his scenic scope and accurate in all of his details, have unusual visual power and good taste, yet be so expert in detecting flaws in a stage model that his critical judgment of the entire drama is upset and his opinion of his effect on the audience of no earthly value.

In neither of the above cases is a powerful asset turned into a weakness. "An Unsullied Shield" comes right to the edge of a great field to be explored in heredity, is a marvel of exquisite double exposure and has a splendid motif. "The Maid of Honor," a modern short story, holds the interest so tight that tension is not relieved until the last scene is portrayed. We all know the value of suspense, but few of us know how to kindle it and still less to hold it.

The acting in both of these photodramas is in accordance with the mental and spiritual demands of the public. The diversified talents of Marc MacDermott give finish and distinction to both releases; Mrs. Wallace Erskine is delightful in both; it is a genuine pleasure to welcome back Mabel Trunnelle and to see Herbert Prior performing so well, and Miss Bessie Learn does admirable work in a part as modest as her name.

"An Unsullied Shield" comes close to showing that illustrious ancestors count for little, that they cannot transmit the product of their acquirements, except when their descendants are powerfully influenced by intelligent association. The scion of a noble family begins immediately after inheriting wealth and title to exhibit decadence in all its forms. Gambler, loafer, drunkard, crook, in succession, he spoils all that has been done to make famous the name he bears.

After a career of self-gratification and privileged waste of all society has been constructing in the race, he sinks so low as to forge his mother's name to free himself from the importunities of a money-lender. There seems to be no spark of nobility left in his soul when, in a fit of half delirium, he goes to sleep in a hall of ancestral portraits and reviews their splendid achievements in a dream. One by one, they step forth from their frames and picture the scenes of struggle through which they passed to keep the family shield unsullied.

One after another, spirited scenes on the field of battle, aboard ships of war, in legislative chambers, are reviewed in magnificent double exposure, and thus is indicated the dream of the ignoble end of his line. He is roused by his mother and breaks down in a shamed confession of crime, exhibiting the check he has forged with her name. Her agony of mind is dominated by her compassion, by that motherly affection which has helped society along more than all the high-sounding names it has evolved, and she gives her wayward son relief by transforming the forged check into a genuine one.

The man who was uninfluenced by his father's dying injunction to keep the family name unsullied falls into complete subjection of a mother's magnanimity and stainless love and is transformed from a power for evil to one for social betterment. In greater plays of the future I look for more than promise of reform, for the actual working out of moral regeneration, with an exposition of its methods and resultants, for the visible evolution of superior character.

"The Maid of Honor."

"The Maid of Honor" deals with a situation that becomes highly strained and almost beyond reasonable solution. A gentleman visits one of those charity bazaars where ladies confer a double benefit on humankind by selling real kisses. The gentleman, Marc MacDermott, offers to buy one of a lady he has never met, Mabel Trunnelle, and these two pass into a room adjoining the bazaar. He is so much of a man that he does not insist upon a full delivery of the goods—he kisses her gloved hand.

Scene from "The Maid of Honor" (Edison).

A clap-of-thunder love springs up in the breasts of both and is intensified by incidents that swiftly follow. MacDermott and Miss Trunnelle linger longer than necessary in the withdrawing room and fail to note an alarm of fire that empties the bazaar of its gay company. They are confronted with a whirl of smoke at the main entrance, but manage to reach a fire-escape and part there with a soul kiss subtitled, "We may never meet again, but we shall never forget." All of which is natural under the circumstances.

Scene from "The Unsullied Shield" (Edison).

They are bound to meet again and do so under strange circumstances. He is about to wed sweet Bessie Learn, and fascinating Mabel is called to officiate as maid of honor. At a beautiful rehearsal of the wedding, when all is ready for the ceremony to be performed, those who have loved for a splendid moment are brought face to face once more. Again the flash of high responsive feeling. Both realize that natural selection would make this their marriage.

That evening, when the guests have departed and members of the household retired, the natural lovers meet alone in the great hall under high tension and decide to follow the dictates of their hearts. They prepare to elope. They are ready to leave when the bride-to-be comes walking down the stairs in her sleep and goes through the wedding rehearsal in her dream before their eyes. Her pitiful sweetness and sincerity break the spell of ardent desire and the maid of honor gently conducts her back to her chamber.

The wedding ordained by family and friends takes place just as it was planned. The bride is radiant in her girlish happiness. The groom fulfills his pledges like a man of probity. And the maid of honor? She accepts the practices of society as a decree of fate. She stands beside the bride with splendid fortitude while God puts together those she has loved. Only once does she raise her eyes in heart-breaking farewell, then she bows to the inevitable a true maid of honor indeed.

A KLEINE-ECLIPSE INDIAN PICTURE.

George Kleine's special release of December 16, 1912, is a typical Indian film in two reels, entitled "The Red Man's Honor." This subject will prove of universal interest because it marks an epoch in the history of the moving picture business; being the first time that an American and Wild West picture, perfect in every detail, has been produced in Europe to be submitted to the American public. There have been other films released in the past, showing Indians and cowboys portrayed by European actors, but in every case glaring inconsistencies in the plot, characterization, or costuming, made the subject appear ridiculous.

But one can find none of these faults in "The Red Man's Honor." Probably the main reason is because the principal roles are taken by two Americans, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Hamman, who have spent several years on our Western plains, thus being well fitted to portray Indian characters in a subject of this kind and at the same time able to direct others in the details regarding settings, costumes and mannerisms of the American Redskin. The story is of the typical Indian kind filled with savage passion, jealousy and revenge. It contains many thrilling incidents and will be a sensation to the public, and a great money-maker for exhibitors.

The regular Kleine program of releases for the week ending December 21st is worthy of especial praise. It consists of a striking drama of heart-interest and two first-class split reels made up of comedies, and charming scenic subjects.

For the Tuesday Cines, "As Fate Wills" deals with an interesting incident in the lives of two girl friends, one a leader of a gay social set and the other an unsophisticated miss. The innocent way in which the latter gradually wins the affections of her friend's fiance, although without the slightest intention of doing so, is interesting to watch, as is also the pathetic scene at the close of the film in which the society girl after having angrily denounced her friend's disloyalty, experiences a change of heart and insists upon sacrificing her own interests and devoting her energies to the happiness of her friends.

For the Wednesday Eclipse, "Three Rogues Outwitted" offers a hilarious comedy describing the antics of three acrobatic crooks who are finally captured by means of an ingenious trick. The reel is completed by a travelogue of intense topical interest entitled "Picturesque Dalmatia," which shows territory closely adjacent to where the Balkan War is now being fought.

A splendid comedy, "Nearly Lion Tamers," is billed for the Saturday Cines. No one can help laughing at the adventures of the two "would-be tamers" with their donkey dressed up as a "King of the Jungle." What happens when a real lion appears upon the scene can better be imagined than described. The necessary thousand feet is completed by a charming travelogue subject entitled "The Tivoli Hills and the Falls of Anio."

The much expected Kleine-Cines authentic war film entitled "Balkan War Scenes" is to be released December 28th. As advertised, the pictures are "fresh from the fighting front" and show genuine engagements between the armies of the Balkan allies and the Turkish forces.

A MAJESTIC FOOTBALL STORY.

Eustace Hale Ball has written a football drama for the Majestic which promises to be remarkable from many standpoints. Mr. Ball insisted upon directing the picture himself, as he was a popular Harvard athlete during his four years at Cambridge. Several interesting scenes were taken during a recent game at the Carlisle Indian School, and the students of Columbia and New York University helped to contribute to the success of "Jim's College Days," which will be released on December 31.

Mutual Withdraws from Film Supply

Declares Its Intention of Choosing Its Own Program from Manufacturers on a Basis of Qualitative Competition.

THIS week's turn of the wheel brings the announcement that the independent interests known as the Film Supply Company and the Mutual Film Corporation have dissolved partnership. The Film Supply Company is a combination of manufacturers, while the Mutual Film Corporation was incorporated for the purpose of establishing exchanges. A trade arrangement was made between the two interests whereby the Mutual agreed to take the product of the companies allied in the Film Supply. Differences of opinion upon the question of the sale of film is said to have led to the split. Regarding the severance of these relations Vice-President H. E. Aitken, of the Mutual, made the following statement:

"The Mutual Film Corporation is purely an exchange proposition. It is in a position to demand of those who desire to sell their films that the subjects shall be of a clean character, the photography perfect, the settings artistic and the acting of a high class. The first duty of the Mutual Film Corporation is to the exhibitor, from a commercial standpoint, and it is necessary to secure the best program in its power, regardless of distributing agencies. This will result in no change in our program, for if any manufacturers should refuse to deal with us on the basis of quality—which is hardly probable if they have the quality—we are in a position to supply brands in substitution thereof on a moment's notice.

"The standing order proposition favors the manufacturer of inferior films only, and does not benefit the maker of the superior article. It has proven detrimental to the exchange and the exhibitor, for it requires a notice of several weeks to cancel a subject, and if the undesirability of a subject is not discovered within such time the order cannot be canceled. The Mutual Film Corporation will inspect every reel before it places an order. This is practically establishing an open market, and will give to the exhibitor using the Mutual service an ideal program.

"The Mutual Film Corporation will also issue its own Weekly, which will be snappy and interesting, and the best that can possibly be made.

"The policy of the Mutual Film Corporation will make it unnecessary for high-class manufacturers to enter into distributing agencies or combinations, as we shall only be too pleased to encourage good producers. The Thanhouser, American, Reliance, Majestic and Punch companies have already withdrawn from the Film Supply Company, and the Kay-Bee, Broncho and Keystone have never been members thereof."

C. O. Baumann, on behalf of the Kay-Bee, Broncho and Keystone companies, said: "The action of the Mutual Film Corporation is the only sane one for the preservation of the business. My companies are willing to submit their films upon a quality basis, and, in fact, have been doing so for some time. I will leave it to the exhibitor if this competitive element has not brought our product to the front rank."

C. J. Hite, for the Thanhouser Company, said: "I am pleased at the action of the Mutual Film Corporation, and believe it is only right that the same rules of purchase should apply to the film business as any other. The Thanhouser Company is not afraid to enter the ranks in a competition for quality, and has faith in the ability of the Mutual Film Corporation to formulate its programs on a high basis. It means increased prosperity for the Thanhouser Company, for I recognize the fact that an exhibitor must not only have good Thanhousers, but also an adequate supply of accompanying films. I look for increased quality all through the program."

J. V. Ritchey, for the Reliance Company, expressed himself as thoroughly satisfied with the new arrangement. "We are in position to compete for a market with any other makers, and have expended large amounts to bring our company to this point. With the knowledge that increased quality will bring increased sales, every producer will have an incentive to put forth his best efforts, and will hesitate in submitting a reel which is not up to the standard."

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, stated that he welcomed the new regime, which would no doubt prove beneficial to the American Company. "We have enlarged our California properties, have increased our stock company, added new directors, and have brought our photography to perfection. We are willing to submit our films upon a basis of quality, and taking into consideration all points that go to make up high class films we are confident that the 'Flying A' brand can stand upon its own merits, regardless of any distributing agency."

Viewed by the Film Supply.

Among the officers of the Film Supply Company of America, little if any concern seemed to be had because of the deflection of the Mutual Film Corporation. Secretary and General Manager Harry R. Raver explained that the action of the Film Corporation had not come in the nature of a surprise, but has been expected owing to certain conditions which had been under discussion for some time.

He said further that the action of withdrawal would have no effect upon the business of the Film Supply Company and that additional brands of film would be added to the program at an early date. The first of these will be the "Pilot" and "Prairie" films, the latter an exceptional brand of Westerns exclusively. The Film Supply is also now entering into negotiations with prominent theatrical interests for a series of unusual productions which will be handled exclusively by them.

Secretary Raver further explained that "the movement for the organization of the Film Supply Company of America was inaugurated by certain manufacturers in order to offset the efforts of others in the business to exploit the film market for the benefit of a limited number of persons interested both in exchanges and in manufacture. This explains why the Film Supply Company of America, immediately upon throwing open its doors, was able, with a rapidity unequaled in the history of similar enterprises, to establish a business of such large proportions and great importance in the film world. The cardinal principle upon which it was founded was that the public and the exhibitors throughout the country should be adequately supplied with film and should be the determining factors in the selection of film.

"The promoters of this movement felt that the only legitimate means by which a manufacturer should promote his sales were by increasing the interest of the subject matter and improving the quality of the film. Among the exchanges which undertook to handle the output of the Film Supply Company of America, there was a group which entered upon the enterprise with every assurance of carrying out the proposed policy of the company. Time developed the fact, however, that the program of the Film Supply Company of America was not receiving adequate and impartial representation through these exchanges, and pursuant to the principle upon which its business and its success were founded, the company began to secure other outlets in the territory of these exchanges. The question then became acute as to whether the first object of the Film Supply Company was to be the service of the public or the service of certain exchanges. The Film Supply Company of America decided, after due deliberation, to adhere to its policy of a free field with favors to none. The result is a continuance of the principle of the Film Supply Company of America, and a reorganization of its program and of its distributing agencies.

"To those who found both satisfaction and profit in the exhibition of its program under the old conditions, the company takes pleasure in announcing that the new and more complete realization of its aims and objects will enable them to secure an equally varied program of better quality than heretofore, and one from which they may choose freely, solely on the basis of merit and their particular requirements. This follows inevitably from the fact that the manufacturers now finding a market through the Film Supply Company of America recognize that they must obtain their orders solely on the merits of their film. The company invites and expects the support of all those desirous of promoting the best interest of the business."

EXPANDING.

A. J. Clapham, the well known slide maker and dealer in films and apparatus, has installed a complete commercial photographic plant and every modern device for the handling of this class of work has been added to his already large plant. In addition to his slide making plant, with a capacity of 5,000 slides per day, and his film factory which is working day and night, a large business is carried on in the sale of new and used film. In Mr. Clapham's advertisement elsewhere in this issue he gives one a slight idea of the varied class of work his commercial department is prepared to execute. To enable his employees to produce the best work he has on the premises a complete library on all branches of photography from the chemical end up, to which they are accorded access at all times, a complete laboratory is maintained where experiments are being constantly made to discover, if possible, new methods, short cuts, etc. His new moving picture camera, the "Ajasee," which is now being offered, is the results of months of study. To make the taking of motion pictures as easy as to take a kodak picture was his aim and his new camera has accomplished this. No trouble in focusing it, being constructed on the principles of the fixed focus kodak. We predict the more universal use of local films now that exhibitors have available an instrument which can be operated with such ease. We have examined some pieces of film which was made on this camera and it would require an expert to detect the difference between the negative made on the "Ajasee" and one made on a $400 machine.

Picture Making in the South Seas

MR. GASTON MELIES PARTICIPATES IN A TAHITIAN CEREMONIAL FISH DRIVE—PRIMITIVE POMP AND CIRCUMSTANCE—CAUGHT IN A TYPHOON.

By Dore Hoffman.

A NATIVE fish drive in the South Sea Islands is one of the rarest sights that a white man was ever privileged to behold. In a recent issue of The World a promise was made that a description of a South Sea Island fish drive would be given in these columns, supplementary to the article that told of the adventures of the Melies Motion Picture Company in the South Sea Islands. To repeat briefly what was said at that time, a fish drive occurs only about once in five years and is accompanied by much profound ceremony. It necessitates the calling together of many natives from many tribes, because it would be an insult if members of every tribe were not invited to participate. Thus it is necessary to despatch messengers on foot to the furthest corners of the island summoning the various tribal representatives to be present at the fish drive.

Tahitian Dress.

The ceremonies are presided over by the most elderly and venerable chiefs.

The simple action of a fish drive consists of a part of the natives going out into the water and driving the fish into a shoal where they are captured by the rest of the native fishermen. It is not generally known, perhaps, that the shark is the great nemesis of the Malay race. This monster of the deep is feared by them with the greatest of all possible fear. This fear takes a conventional form. The figure of the shark is practically a symbol of the wrath of God; that is, whatever God they believe in. The principal articles of daily food among these people come from the sea. They are nearly all fishrmen. In their skin boats they are obliged to go to sea in search of food for their families. About their work there is ever present the haunting specter of the shark, their natural enemy. Many a boat has been overturned and hundreds are the men who have been devoured by this rapacious monster of the deep.

Bearing these peculiar local traditions in mind, one may readily understand the significance of a fish drive, especially if there happen to be a few sharks included in the round-up. Information reaching us from Mr. Gaston Melies does not go into detail as to just what condition of affairs must exist in order to bring about a fish drive, but in this particular instance, his influence with the Governor of Tahiti, mentioned in the article of December 14th, was responsible for the fish drive in question.

The Melies party left Papeete in a specially chartered 20-ton schooner known as the "Tiura." On board, as passengers, were Mr. and Mrs. Gaston Melies, Edmund Mitchell, the scenario writer, Gus Henschen, cameraman, and A. C. Eugene Caillot, an eminent French archaeologist. Accompanying the party as guide and interpreter was Tauraa Salmon, son of the stern old chief mentioned in the last article. The destination was the Island of Bora-Bora, which is several days' journey from the Island of Tahiti. The boat in which they sailed was the best boat obtainable in Tahiti, but the accommodations were wretchedly primitive and the trip was a very unpleasant one, except for the wonderful sunsets and exquisite moonlights to be seen in that tropical region.

Upon arrival at the Island of Bora-Bora, the party was greeted by the only white man on the island—a lone, French gendarme, stationed there to keep the peace among a warlike horde of savages, and, from all accounts, he is getting away with it fine. His work is a compromise between that of a supreme court justice and a baseball umpire, with a few side issues, such as Sheriff, Justice of the Peace, Coroner, Superintendent of Schools, etc. The visiting party were awakened from their slumbers on shipboard by the rumbling of native drums beating rhythmically to the wierd native chants and grotesque movements of the natives, not altogether unlike those of a cabaret singer interpreting a negro song. Soon after, men, women and children began to assemble and the procession of the sacred fish began. A great shark, roughly fashioned from wood was borne on the shoulders of four men. In front of this image strode four sub-chiefs, with solemn mien, clothed in rich garments, and bedecked with flowers. Following the big shark, the natives marched four abreast, resplendent in wreaths of leaves and blossoms. Alternating with the youths were the "vahines," or young girls, adorned in festive costumes of white, pink or blue, and all doing their best to impart the proper spirit of joy and reverence to the occasion.

Tahitian Drum.

The procession followed a devious course, leading finally to the shore where a couple of hundred canoes were assembled, ready for the work in hand. In these canoes the expert fish drivers took their places, each according to his rank or station. When the participants were ready in their places the High Priest of the region came down to his elaborate altar, which had been erected by the seaside, and there he invoked the blessings of the Gods. For a long time, with much writhing and gesticulating, he beseeched every favor that fortune could bestow upon such gallant, brave and divine heroes. He was also heard to implore that the wrath of the aforesaid Gods should descend upon all of their tribal enemies, living or dead, or yet to be born.

At the given signal, the canoes glide away amid great cheers on all sides, until some coral reef is reached, and then, at a given signal, they start back for the shore, the boatmen beating up the waters as they go, making as much noise as possible. The commotion frightens the fish, whose only course is landward. As the circle of natives in the boats gradually grows smaller the fish are driven into an inlet. In a few hours thousands upon thousands of tropical fish are huddled together in a writhing mass, held prisoners by stout nets, woven from tough grasses.

The Start of the Fish Drive.

It is considered a great honor to have the privilege of spearing the first fish. That honor was accorded to Mr. Melies. He walked into the water up to his waist with a native javelin in his hand. The element of danger was present to a considerable degree, as there was no telling at what moment he Tahitian Crown.

[illegible] encounter a shark or a swordfish. His catch was a kingfish weighing 40 pounds, after which natives swarmed into the water and the spearing of the fish began. The fish were thrown up on the rocks in hundreds and thousands. The rocks were soon covered with them.

When the work of spearing was done other ceremonies remained to be performed. Another distinction rematined for Mr. Melies in being selected as the one who should present the fish, as a whole, to the people, which he did through the interpreter. Anyone who knows Mr. Melies can imagine him performing a public duty of this kind. His massive, forceful and engaging personality stamp him as a man among men. There is something in his rugged exterior that recommends him at once to men of affairs, whether it be among captains of industry or savage chiefs. Therefore he cut quite a figure in the festivities of the fish drive. All day long and all the next night the singing and dancing continued without interruption. There were competitions of various kinds for prizes, these prizes being presented by Mr. Melies, who in return received hundreds of presents, mostly in the form of small live stock and poultry.

Tahitian Shell Necklace.

On the following morning, which was Sunday, the moving picture party reembarked for Papeete, but some of the older sailors among the crew shook their heads, as though reluctant to begin the trip. The typhoon season was at hand and perhaps the skies, to these experienced mariners, portended some omen of ill nature. Their premonitions were correct, for the trade-wind ahead soon lashed itself into a hurricane, and the little craft battled for its life and the lives of those within. At Papeete alarm was felt for them and when on the morning following the third night they drifted into the harbor, a great crowd assembled at the wharf, most of whom had never expected the adventurers to return alive.

Such are the dangers that beset the path of the moving picture man who starts forth into the great world to record its many modes of life. There are inconveniences enough for motion picture companies that journey to civilized lands, but such a trip, taken among the savage tribes in untraveled parts of the earth, is a venture that is fraught with inconceivable privation and exposure. This is the work that Gaston Melies has undertaken for the improvement and betterment of the motion picture. He is willing to do it, because he believes he is doing a great work for mankind.

There will be other pictures of similar nature returning regularly from the various lands that the Melies Company visit, and exhibitors throughout the world will find this series of pictures one of the most interesting yet attempted in motion picture production.

GIRLS, DON'T WRITE BENHAM!

Exhibitor readers of the World who are approached by silly girls for the mail address of Harry Benham, the good-looking young fellow who plays so many lover roles in Thanhouser films, are advised to open their World and point to the above picture. For Harry Benham, despite the romantic parts he plays, is very much of a married man—there are three of his family appearing in Thanhouser pictures to prove it. For the whole Benham family are film-inclined. If you want proof, look up Harry in "The Merchant of Venice," "The Making of An American," "Aurora Floyd,"

The Harry Benhams.

"Nicholas Nickleby," "Dotty the Dancer," "The Ladder of Life," "A Noise Like a Fortune," "Dora Thorne," "Miss Robinson Crusoe," "The Wrecked Taxi," "The Star of Bethlehem," and "Brains vs. Brawn." See the mother in "The Militant Suffragette," "The Wrecked Taxi," "The Star of Bethlehem," "The Making of An American," "The Merchant of Venice," "Lucile," and "Dotty's New Doll." Look for little Leland in "The Making of An American," "On Probation," "The Greatest of These is Charity," "In a Garden," "Cross Your Heart," and "The Ladder of Life." And then see what Harry considers the cutest baby of all in "Don't Pinch My Pup," "The Wrecked Taxi," and "The County's Prize Baby."

It is very likely that the Benham family hold the record for prolificity as family-film-performers.

O'NEILL SEEKS TO ENJOIN "MONTE CRISTO."

In the New York Supreme Court on Monday, December 23, Justice Amend will hear arguments on the application of James O'Neill, the veteran actor, for an injunction restraining the General Film Company from producing a version of "Monte Cristo" in moving pictures, which the plaintiff alleges is an infringement on his rights. The film in question was made by the Selig Company and is in three reels.

In an affidavit, Jacques A. Berst, as president of the General Film Company, denies that the scenes were copied from the O'Neill version. He says further that the pictures have been made and distributed in good faith and that they can in no wise harm Mr. O'Neill.

The actor also asks an accounting from the film company for any profits it may have made in distributing the pictures.

A Christmas Message

"PEACE on Earth and Good Will to Men" is the great leavening sentiment that has been growing for many centuries. It is more of a reality at the end of 1912 than ever before in the recorded history of the race. All the members of the great human family are being drawn together closer and closer as time goes on. All the valuable agencies of our civilization tend toward one chief end, which is the spreading of knowledge. Knowledge liberates and enfranchises the mind of man; with the growth of knowledge come a better mutual understanding, a broader sympathy and a keener and more practical realization of the unity of the human race. Three great milestones stand out on humanity's way to progress and knowledge—the alphabet, nearest to the cradle of the race; the movable type and now the motion picture. We believe the motion picture to be the greatest of the three forces mentioned. The alphabet and the movable type rest under the evil spell wrought at the Tower of Babel, where the speech of mankind suffered confusion. The motion picture is free from such hindrance; it transcends and conquers the limitations of the spoken and the printed word. The motto of the future must be: "Higher Ideals." Let all friends of the picture stand together in unwearied efforts to make the new art and industry a force for truth and righteousness, let the pictures give us a portrayal of right living and thinking, let them become a medium of clean and helpful amusement and entertainment and a beneficent influence in the lives of all people

THE RIGHTS AND WRONGS OF CHILDREN AND THE PICTURES.

There is another outbreak of indignation against the abuses which are creeping into the management of moving picture houses in many places, especially in the large cities of America and Europe. Germany has been having troubles which are being dealt with in an educational manner. France is resorting to legal and censorship methods. In America legal means will seem to be the most necessary, as the difficulty lies with the picture houses, rather than with the pictures. Censorship of pictures is rapidly becoming unnecessary, the tone and quality of the films are constantly improving, everything of a higher and more cultured nature being demanded and supplied. The whole trouble now is found to be with small, dark, dirty, cheap, and sometimes loathsome places; the responsibility now rests with the Health, Fire, and Police departments. It is unfortunate that New York has again to bear the brunt of the criticism, but Mr. Ramond B. Fosdick says (and we have no higher authority), "I am perfectly safe in making the statement that New York has the worst moving picture theaters in the United States. In that statement I am supported by those who have investigated the subject all over the country."

From such a statement it is at once seen that a great wrong is done to the great number of children who are compelled to go to such places, if they seek either amusement, entertainment, or instruction. Another evil is that people of a low mental or moral calibre seek these places to practice their vicious habits. For all these conditions it has previously been the custom to blame the pictures; that day has happily passed, and now the blame is being placed where it most properly belongs. The rights of the children are now being conceded, the moving picture belongs more to the children than to any other class, and every effort must be made to give and protect them in enjoying that which is fast becoming a sacred right. The children must not in any way be deprived of either the entertaining or instructive features of cinematography. On the contrary, special and determined efforts must be made on a sort of—"get together" basis, whereby all present hindrances shall be removed.

The recent "raids" on moving picture houses for admitting children under the age of sixteen without a guardian are in themselves a sufficient proof that something must be done to secure for the children the rights for which they are themselves contending. The daily press to-day is as full of moving picture contentions as it was two years ago, with the great difference, however, that now the question is as to the best methods of governing them for common good, as against the wholesale condemnation of the former days.

A Notable Opinion.

Justice John B. Mayo, of the New York Children's Court, says: "The great demand for pictures is responsible for the production of so many cheap films, and cheap films are always lurid and sensational, and are always exhibited in dark houses." This is a pointed, comprehensive, and helpful analysis of the situation, and one making it easier to master the situation. Justice Mayo further says: "The banishment of cheap pictures means the banishment of the prohibitive 'under sixteen' law. Where the best pictures are shown, the houses are always clean and light, it is for this reason pictures should not be condemned. They can be made attractive and instructive to the young and accomplish much good."

From such an authoritative statement as this, it is easy to see the "right and wrong" of the children's problem. A summary of the conditions show that the pictures are in high favor, they are subject to but one great evil which is the cause of all the trouble, and that arises from "those who love darkness rather than light because their deeds (films or houses) are evil." We are growing, all these contentions are helping us, fighting developes strength, censure secures rectitude, disgust with evil encourages goodness, the disease brings in the remedy. Out of this continued exposure of wrongs, the right will become established and that heritage for the children for which we are now contending will be secured. To-day the moving picture is the strongest factor in both the world of education and amusements, its power and popularity are making it the object of legislative attention in village, city, and nation. When it shall have arrived in the haven of its destination freed from its evil encumbrances, it will fill its mission as the children's friend.

DEATH—DEATH—DEATH.

In an evening's entertainment covering an hour and a half in a New York picture house this week, two films were shown in which there were eight deaths, this is certainly a record number; in one subject there were three, and in the other there were five deaths; two were from natural causes, four were murders, one death resulted from a duel with rapiers, and one was a suicide by a pistol shot. Without doubt such an exhibition ought to satisfy the most sanguinary tastes, and please the most ardent seekers after tragedy.

Concerning these plays in which so many deaths occurred, there can really be no objectionable criticism; one was a feature film reproducing a standard work, and was indeed a most commendable production; neither were there any harrowing details to mar the story, or make any unnecessary lurid illustrations. The other was a thrilling drama in which, besides three deaths, there appeared an automobile dashing down an embankment, throwing the occupant and smashing the machine. There was also a fearful fight between two men on the top of the cars of a rapidly moving freight train, until both were dashed off into a lake. Here again there was nothing of a fearful nature, indeed the work from a photographic standpoint was marvelous.

Wherein then is there cause for complaint? It is that when two such films follow each other it is in exceedingly bad taste. In this instance the thrilling drama was shown first, thoroughly spoiling the feature film, which was a better picture. Good taste is not only desirable in the selection of the pictures, but in the arranging of them. This was an occasion when good pictures were spoiled by a bad program. It is not pleasant to hear people speaking out aloud "another death" or "another killing" or "more deaths."

There is the further offense that the effect upon young people is decidedly prejudicial to the best interests of moving pictures. Only recently the slight value placed upon human life was adversely commented upon in these pages. Under the conditions now being referred to the program was bad, even to the extent of being offensive, besides being prejudicial to the value of the pictures. If the fault is in the exchange, it is inexcusable, because the knowledge and experience there should lead to discrimination and good taste. If the exhibitor feels blameless, in that he is not as familiar with the pictures as are the exchange people, he must be blamed for not placing two such pictures as far apart as possible. Both an exhibitor and his operator are supposed to have some knowledge of the fitness of things.

There is such a thing as an educational management of an exhibition, which shall cause a well balanced program to cover the crudities of that sameness of subjects which destroys their value. May we never again see eight deaths in two consecutive pictures in forty-five minutes.

It might further be added that it is such thoughtless and badly arranged programs that arouse opposition to picture places and incur unjust and wholesale condemnation, and goes to show that in the main the pictures are not to blame.

LUBIN GOES ABROAD.

Siegmund Lubin, the photoplay manufacturer, sailed recently on the Kronprinz Wilhelm, North German Lloyd S. S. Line, for Berlin, Germany. The trip is partly a reunion and probably business observations, as the producer is anxious to establish a plant in the German capital. Mr. Lubin will be accompanied by his wife, two daughters and two grandchildren. On the return trip the party will visit Paris and London.

The Pictures in the Pulpit.

By the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, S. T. B.

THE churches of San Jose, California, have taken up seriously the consideration of the picture as a means of instruction and amusement for the children and are planning to give a regular exhibition for the children of all the Sunday schools in the town on Saturday afternoons. The experiment has been undertaken by the Sunday-School Cabinet of San Jose, an organization that includes the officers and teachers of all the Protestant churches in the city and the preliminary meeting was held in the parish house of Trinity Protestant Episcopal church on Sunday, November third last. The Rev. George W. Brewster, of the San Jose Christian church, who has for some time already been doing successful work along these lines and has been instrumental in starting several of his clerical brethren in different parts of the country in the same work, gave the meeting a resume of what he had been able to accomplish by means of the picture and led the discussion that followed. Before the meeting adjourned a committee was appointed to investigate the subject and report to the next meeting of the association.

"From the Manger to the Cross."

The following letter from the Rev. Richard M. Sherman, M. A., (Protestant Episcopal) of New York city, contains several things that ought to be brought to the attention of everyone connected with or interested in the pictures.

> This is to express to you my appreciation of your courtesy in securing for me a card of invitation to attend the private exhibition of Kalem's most remarkable production of moving pictures, "From the Manger to the Cross."
> I was very deeply impressed by the exhibition and by its evident means of instruction. The scenes were so wisely and faithfully portrayed, the actual localities so skillfully used, the actors were so well adapted for their parts, and acted so well—it is difficult to choose any one special feature of their work for commendation; yet I wish to congratulate the company and the actors upon the fact that the dialogue was so well shown that I could in many cases clearly distinguish the words which were being spoken, and that I could not help realizing the value of this excellence to such persons as were somewhat skilled in lip-reading. An exhibition of this sort is most valuable to the deaf mutes—persons who are able to receive but a little of the ordinary instruction on account of their deafness, but to whom the moving picture is a remarkable boon. When we add to the moving picture such an exhibition of the dialogue as is shown in the Kalem Company's film it presents a perfect instrument for the instruction of the deaf.
> I should be glad if you would convey this expression of congratulation to the Kalem Company, and my best wishes for their every success in showing this dignified and helpful picture.

The Rev. Mr. Sherman is not only an authority on the Scriptual and other points he brings up; he is also an accomplished lip-reader and a teacher of the deaf and dumb of many years experience. Except for the "dialog" criticism, he simply sums up the comments that we have heard again and again from those who have had an opportunity to see the picture and also from many others who have not but who from what they have been told are anxious not only to see but also to use it. One of the largest and most influential churches in New York City even wishes it for use at their children's festival on Holy Innocents' Day (December 29) next Christmastide, and has queried us as to the possibility of obtaining it. As to the "dialog" we hope every director will take Mr. Sherman's criticism and the example of the Kalemites to heart, as we have more than once read, and not so many days ago at that, speeches on the screen that we should not care to have our women and children hear, and with the large number of persons of all kinds that are now seeing pictures there is no telling when "there's a chiel amang ye takin' notes."

A New Way to Use the Pictures.

The St. Paul, Minnesota, Dispatch reports a method of using the pictures in religious work that differs from those that have been already put into practise and is somewhat novel. According to the report, the Park Congregational church of St. Paul, employed several of the Kalem Egyptian pictures as the settings for a series of tableaux illustrating the struggles of the Children of Israel in captivity in Egypt, the flight of Moses into Milian and his sojourn among the Midianites in preparation for his work of delivering the Chosen People, his return to Egypt and his successful efforts to free his race from bondage. There are some distinctly novel and excellent educational features about this plan and we shall be very glad to hear from any one who has or does try it as to how it succeeds and the practical difficulties to be met with. If the Sunday-school children are employed to do the acting and posing, even more successful results ought to be accomplished than have already been obtained by the adaptations of the old miracle and morality plays produced by the Sunday-school of St. Agnes Chapel, Trinity parish, New York City, in the past few years and by the children's "Pageant of the Saints" given in Fond du Lac, last summer.

Woman-suffrage and Tuberculosis.

On Saturday, November second and Sunday, November third (Tuberculosis Sunday) the Congregational church of Appleton, Wisconsin, joined the ranks of the photoeducators. Saturday night, the topic was the political equality of women; the picture shown was Reliance's two reel drama, "Votes for Women," and an address on the subject was given by Miss Harriet Grim, who has long been well known throughout Wisconsin for her sane, able and womanly efforts in advocating woman suffrage. On Sunday night, there were several stirring addresses urging the vigorous prosecution of the campaign for public health illustrated by three pictures showing how the present war against tuberculosis was being carried on, that were furnished by the Wisconsin Anti-tuberculosis Association. The expenses of both evenings were defrayed by charging an admission fee of five cents for the exhibition on Saturday night, the Sunday night's exhibition being free. All churches and societies that are interested in this subject of the war against the great "white plague" should write at once to either their local or state anti-tuberculosis association or to the National Association, 105 East 22d street, New York City, for full particulars of the special campaign that is being inaugurated in connection with the Edison release of November sixteenth: "Hope—A Red Cross Seal Story" by James Oppenheim, produced in cooperation with the National Association. This advice also applies to regular exhibitors for whom the association has provided special cuts and advertising literature on the picture, a description of which will be found in Mr. Sargent's "Advertising for Exhibitors." The picture itself is not only one of the best that the Edison company has produced but apart from its hygienic value contains several strong moral lessons that make it particularly useful for Sunday work.

October Sermon Photoplays.

Several requests have come in for the photoplays suitable for illustrating sermons that have been released in October. Most of the requesters refer to the list we published in the issue of The World for November 9th and one of them offers the excellent suggestion that if educational workers with the pictures would keep track of the recent releases as they appear and make their booking arrangements as far ahead as possible instead of waiting until the last minute they would find half the difficulty of procuring what they want would disappear and that much of the complaint about a scarcity of suitable pictures would turn out to be imaginary. There is a great deal in this, altho we must say we wish there were more sermon photoplays (we don't mean photoplay sermons), and in order to help along the men who are working under difficulties and to encourage the manufacturers who are actively assisting them we publish the October list as desired. As before, the list contains only those photoplays we know and can vouch for either from personal inspection or on the authority of an actual religious worker.

Licensed Manufacturers.

"Where Love Is, There Is God Also" (Selig.—Tolstoi's story of the same title, illustrating St. Matthew 25:45: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Good for a sermon on Charity or the two great commandments of the law.

"Forgive Us Our Trespasses" (Melies).—Based on the petition for forgiveness in the Lord's Prayer, and good also for sermons on the seventh commandment.

"Young Mrs. Eaton" (Edison).—Good for sermons on extravagance, society gambling and the relations of husband and wife.

"The Usurer's Grim" (Edison).—A story of the loan shark system, one of the best of its kind, more sociological than theological, but contains a very strong moral on the relation of employers and employed.

Independent Manufacturers.

"The Warning" (Thanhouser).—Good for sermons on intemperance, the duties of parents and children, conscience and the guiding hand of God.

To All Concerned.

It will be noted in the above lists that each picture is useful for illustrating a number of topics. This is true of almost all photoplays of this character and very probably we have not exhausted the themes in any one instance. Every worker in this line can, if he will, add something of value to the experience and suggestions of others, both in respect to the subjects the pictures illustrate and also the other pictures that are useful. Will not every one interested send us his experience for the benefit of all? Remember, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

APOLLO THEATER OPENS.

The Apollo, a new house with a seating capacity of 407, was opened in Indianapolis on December 12. There are now fifty-six picture theaters in Indianapolis.

OBSERVATIONS
BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THE annual crusade against moving picture theaters is on in full blast. Every day during the past week the newspapers have been working on an overtime scale to further the interests of those who inaugurated the movement. A singular feature about all these crusades is that they are launched on the eve of the Christmas season. Why this should be has not been explained. The first big crusade was precipitated on Christmas Eve, when Mayor McClellan shut up all the picture houses in Greater New York, which were promptly reopened by Justice Gaynor from a standpoint of fair play. Each Yuletide since that time has brought a crusade, but none of them since the original has equaled the present one in vigor and widespread interest, and none has had so much apparent sanction from the moving picture people themselves. The explanation for this is that people who have the future of the business at heart want the authorities to know that they have no complaint to make when honest efforts are made to drive out of the business people who make no effort to bring credit to it.

Quite a surprise was sprung upon the offenders last Saturday when some of those arrested for violating the laws in selling tickets to and admitting minors were arraigned in court. Heretofore it has been the custom to impose nominal fines, but the accused in the present cases did not get off so easy, being held for trial at Special Sessions. Two proprietors of a place in Manhattan, charged with admitting girls between the ages of seven and eleven years, unaccompanied by parents or guardians, were among those arraigned in Special Sessions a few days ago. To escape spending sixty days in jail they paid a fine of $200 each. This is the severest penalty imposed in such cases. A hotel clerk was convicted in the same court for creating a scene in a Ninth Avenue picture theater through his action towards a group of young girls and received a sentence of six months in the penitentiary. All this will have an effect upon such proprietors of picture shows and certain frequenters of them who have persistently shown their disregard for laws of order and decency.

To my mind a power for good can be exerted by letters written to newspapers expressing views on public affairs, provided the people who take advantage of it understand what they write about. When such is not the case, the correspondents should lay their pens aside. One "R. E. Platt, New York," wrote a long letter to the Morning World a few days ago and not only displayed gross ignorance of the subject written upon but also betrayed a high quality of prejudice. In the first place, the correspondent urged that the announcement, "Passed by the National Board of Censorship," be barred from the curtains of the picture theaters, declaring it is a "cruel deception" and conveys a false impression. "As you probably know," says the writer, "the board leaves the duty of visiting film manufacturing plants to a sub-committee, and of the sub-committee only one or two members may be present."

This statement of the correspondent is absolutely false. In the first place, the board sits in session and passes upon films that are sent to their meeting place and projected upon a screen so that they may be amply inspected and commented upon before they are placed upon the market. Neither the board nor any of its committees, or sub-committees, visit the manufacturing plants for that purpose. Secondly, there has been but one session of the Board when there were less than five members present, and the small attendance was due to a severe storm prevailing that day. The next smallest attendance was eight members. At the last session there were thirteen present, and at times as many as twenty have been in attendance and passed upon the pictures.

This "R. E. Platt" betrays his prejudice when he (or she) expresses an inability to understand why objection should be made to giving the Mayor power to pass on films through his own committee, "unless the objection comes from the motion picture trust." The correspondent evidently does not know, or is holding the truth in the background, that the Board of Censors passes upon films manufactured by the Independents as well as those of the Licensed manufacturers, and that both groups of manufacturers are opposed to the method of censorship favored by "R. E. Platt," or by an aldermanic or police board of censors. Why? Well, no better justification for opposition to the proposed change can be cited than the revelations made by Mary Goode and others before the aldermanic investigating committee and the district attorney. It is better expressed in one word—Graft!

When I read letters to the public press like that of "R. E. Platt" I am impelled to quote what Martin Green, one of the Evening World writers, says: "The fanatics are all extremists, and extremists in morals are constitutional hypocrites."

The ordinance introduced last January by Mr. Folks for the regulation of picture houses increases the seating capacity to 600. The ordinance has been a subject of considerable discussion in the newspapers the past week and among the questions asked regarding it is one seeking information as to why the ordinance was shelved last Spring. Some people answer that it was on account of bitter fighting over a censorship clause; others say the large vaudeville interests side-tracked it because its passage threatened their business. Both explanations are correct to an extent. One of the most prominent truths in connection with the matter is that the small exhibitors were hoodwinked and double-crossed by the real opponents of the measure. A number of the small exhibitors wanted the seating capacity increased to 600. They had money to invest in enlarging their places and put their places and put themselves on better footing to compete with the constantly increasing big picture houses. The latter did not want the competition, but did not want to show their hand in opposition to the proposed ordinance. A well-known lawyer, who enjoyed the goodwill of the small exhibitors, was selected as a missionary by the big interests to go among "the small fry" and point out the disaster that would come to them if the ordinance became a law. "Why," said he, "the moment that ordinance is passed, the big fellows will put up a 600-house next door to you and wipe you off the map. Even if you have the money and space for a larger house, you cannot compete with those fellows. They want the ordinance passed so they can wipe you out." It can be readily imagined that the small exhibitors lost no time in exerting their influence to have the ordinance beaten or shelved, much to the gratification of the big fellows who did not want any of the proposed enlarged houses in their midst.

One of the most important interviews of the past week as to the purification of the motion picture business was one had with the president of the children's society. His views were chiefly upon improvement in the character of films. He says censoring is not the proper means. He thinks it is unconstitutional and there can be no more legal authority to do it than there would be to censor the newspapers. His idea is to regulate the character of films by law. Mr. Lindsay is a very able man, but it is extremely doubtful that he could frame a law that would come within a mile of establishing a standard that would be equitable to all concerned. To justify his views he says that after the enactment of such a law a person who saw a picture calculated to impair the morals of a child could cause an arrest, and if shown that the law had been violated, the exhibitor could be punished and his license revoked. Mr. Lindsay's sincerity and honesty of purpose is above question, but his views on this score cannot be concurred in. If, as he thinks, the censorship of films is unconstitutional, it would be far more just to amend the constitution and make censorship national and legal than to place a legitimate and law-abiding exhibitor at the mercy of every impostor, blackmailer and thief who might enter his place. No better measure could be devised to drive the exhibitors out of the business; in fact, ruin the business as a whole. They would be subjected to constant persecution by persons no more competent to pass upon the character of a film from a moral standpoint than the "gunmen." The placing of the power of censorship upon each individual cannot be sanctioned from any point of view when upon that power he can base a prosecution. The temptation for abuse of that power is too great. The jeopardy in which the exhibitor would be placed as a citizen is sufficient to knock the props from under Mr. Lindsay's suggestion.

Doings at Los Angeles

Monopol Film Company Gets Busy—Large M. P. Interests in Southern California—Reel Club Active—Brevities.

S. E. V. TAYLOR, of the Monopol Feature Film Co., who came here last week for the purpose of obtaining a location for a Southern California company, found it within two days, entered into a lease for a piece of property which pleased him, signed up contracts for the erection of necessary buildings and hired a bunch of extra people and went to work all within a week. The new studio is located at 1339 Gordon Street, in Hollywood, only a block from one of the Universal studios on one side and a couple of blocks from the Kinemacolor studio on the other.

With Mr. Taylor came his wife, the new star leading woman of the Monopol forces, who is known professionally as Marion Leonard, and a large company of actors from New York. Mr. Taylor has announced that the southern California company is to do nothing but big features and nothing less than three reels. The first production is already under way. Writers of photoplays are warned not to waste stamps sending scripts to the address noted above for the reason that the company has obtained motion picture rights for a long list of famous dramas and stories and will be kept busy with these for at least a year.

Southern California Claims the Palm.

It is now claimed for Southern California that it is the largest motion picture producing center in the world. There are 35 legitimate motion picture companies of recognized standing in the industry actively at work today in or near Los Angeles. Another will arrive within the next thirty days and four more are due within sixty days. It was only a little more than a year ago that there were but seven companies at work in this section, not counting those which since then have died painless deaths. The total amount of money which the various companies have invested in Southern California is estimated to exceed $1,500,000. The list includes the Biograph with one company here and another overdue; the Kalem with one company at Glendale and another at Santa Monica; the Essanay with one company at Hollywood and another at Niles; the Selig with four companies at Edendale; the Western Pathe at Edendale; the Powers with two companies and the Rex with two companies, all four at Hollywood; the Bison with two companies and the Nestor with three, all at Oak Crest; the big Universal outdoor studio in the San Fernando valley; the Vitagraph at Santa Monica; the Kaybee and the Broncho with one company each at Santa Monica; the Keystone with two companies at Edendale; the American with two companies at Santa Barbara; the Kinemacolor with three companies at Hollywood; the Monopol with one company at Hollywood; the Ammex at San Diego; and the Egan with four companies in Los Angeles.

Reel Club May Change Name.

The newly organized Reel Club of Los Angeles, consisting of men engaged in the producing end of the motion picture industry in Southern California, has obtained a clubhouse. A lease has been signed whereby it takes possession jointly with the Gamut Club of the latter's building in South Hope Street. The Gamut Club is an organization of professional musicians.

The name chosen on the spur of the moment for the new motion picture organization has not met with the approval of the members and in all probability it will be changed before the articles of incorporation, which are now being prepared, are filed with the Secretary of State. One objection to the name Reel Club is that it suggests an organization of fishermen.

Negotiations are now in progress with the Screen Club in New York looking toward an affiliation of the Los Angeles organization with the New York organization.

He Invaded the Holy of Holies.

The Kinemacolor Company lost a promising young actor from its company this week under circumstances which deserve to be chronicled in the annals of the industry. It would be cruel to name the unfortunate absentee.

The story itself has a prologue which tells of how Director LeSaint, with half a dozen hired automobiles and sixty extra performers, made a long trip away from the studio to take a big scene in the field.

It was to be the big scene in a three-reel production and when LeSaint returned at night he was enthusiastic over the 600 feet of film that had been exposed during the day. Everything had gone smoothly. It had been one of those days when luck hovered at his side.

The promising young actor had been hired as an extra in a scene which was being rehearsed in the studio under another director.

Idle for a few moments and being of an inquiring turn of mind, he set out to explore the premises. A closed door excited his curiosity and he entered. Another door confronted him and he opened that. There was a wild shriek from inside which so alarmed the young man that he turned and fled. He was not able to understand later why they made so much fuss about the incident, or why every person connected with the institution, from David Miles, the producer, down to the property man, should have taken the liberty of discharging him. He had only interrupted the developing of LeSaint's 600 feet of film and couldn't see how a trifling delay could make any difference.

Brevities.

The fair Lillian Russell, if not the queen, at least the dowager empress of musical comedy, is scheduled to arrive in Los Angeles the last day of this year to begin a series of motion picture productions in connection with the Kinemacolor Company. There will be several releases in which she will impart the secrets of her beauty regimen for the benefit of her sisters, and David Miles, under whose direction she will work, is also figuring on putting on silent reproductions of several of the past successes which contributed to her fame.

Mrs. Anita Hendrie Miles, photoplay editor of the Kinemacolor Company, is experimenting with a system in her department. She has placed a daily limit on the number of scripts she will read. Fifty a day is her regular stunt and since the supply far exceeds that number she has engaged an assistant to open the mail and select the 50 most promising.

Billy Clune's two-year wrestling match with the city authorities and the local courts over the issue of how tall an electric sign ought to be has just ended in a decision in his favor. It was more than two years ago that the city council passed an ordinance providing that no electric sign extend more than 35 feet above the top of any first class building in the fire limits of the city. Clune has ordered a sign for his Broadway motion picture theater which was several feet over size and he went ahead and put it up despite the ordinance. He submitted to technical arrest and took the case into court. At the same time he opened negotiations with the city council looking toward the passage of a more liberal ordinance. Since then the matter has been kicked around among various sub-committees and special commissions until finally the council's legislation committee has recommended that the limit be raised from 35 to 60 feet. The case against Clune which has been continued from time to time pending final action by the council probably now will be dismissed.

James Young Deer, director of the Western Pathe company at Edendale, is now on his way home after a trip to New York, where he went on business for the company. During his absence George Gebhart has been in charge of the studio.

Frank Green, a local photoplay writer, rises to ask a question. "When I send scripts to a photoplay editor for his inspection I am required to enclose return postage in case it is rejected," he says. "Whenever a script is accepted the studio keeps the postage and sends me back a contract to sign, but I have never found a company yet that sends postage for the return of the contract. It's only a small matter, but the studios tell us that it is mainly on account of the principle involved that they insist on return stamps accompanying scripts. What is the difference?"

HOW TO PUT ON THE PASSION PLAY.

The Passion Play remains one of the great moving picture classics. It is always seasonable, but at this time of the year it is in special demand. If you are about to show it in your theater you will get the benefit of years of experience by ordering the little book, "How To Put On the Passion Play," prepared by W. Stephen Bush and printed by the Chalmers Publishing Company. It contains valuable musical suggestions for the proper presentation of "Dante's Inferno," and "The Crusaders" may likewise be had from the same source. Price of each book is one dollar.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

All Pennant Winners.

THE Gardella Theater, Oroville, Cal., sends a sample of a pennant that is to be given out as a souvenir of their second anniversary some time this month. The letterhead suggests that a green pennant is the general trademark, since this design is embossed at the top of the paper. The pennant itself is of green felt thirty inches long, with the name of the theater and town in white fabric; the sort of pennant that sells for a quarter or more at street fairs. It costs the house about fifteen cents each and Manager C. E. Howard writes that they have had more than a thousand calls for the pennant already since they have been booming the distribution by poster, newspaper advertising, slides and dodgers.

Fifteen cents seems to be a lot to spend for a souvenir, but the pennant craze is upon us and nine-tenths of these really handsome flags are going up on the walls of homes where they will hang, a year-round advertisement for the theater. Surely fifteen cents is not much to pay for a year's advertising right in the home of a patron. Smaller flags in a lower grade could be had for much less than this price, but Mr. Howard has the right idea in getting something that will look well on the wall of the handsomest den in town, for these flags are really desirable and the mail clerk almost wept when he turned our sample over to us. If you are going to do something, do it well. It pays in the long run.

From the Arcade.

The Arcade Theater, Tientsin, contributes only one sample this week, a special folder for "The Glass Coffin" with a four-page insert of halftones. The folder is chocolate paper done in black ink, and frames up very effectively. Did you ever get together with your printer over some special bit of work? We think the manager of the Arcade must spend a lot of time in the composing room of the Tientsin Press, but he gets results and it is largely because he does get results that he is able to celebrate anniversaries where all other ventures in North China have not lasted a year out.

Inspection by Invitation.

A. P. Dickinson, of the Nutley Amusement Company, Nutley, N. J., sends a very fine invitation card to an inspection of the Park Auditorium. It is printed from a copper plate on heavy card with a fabric finish and invites to an inspection and exhibition, the former between 2:30 and 4:00 and the latter from 7:00 to 10:00. He explains:

> I call it inspection night because some folks feel hurt if they do not manage to be present at an opening night, and on the other hand we are having an invitation affair because there are a great many people who will attend our inspection who never have been in a motion picture theater before. They have seen the pictures at Proctor's and in other vaudeville theaters, but never in a picture theater. They will come to an invitation night where they could not be tempted to an opening. From the start we are making our appeal to the very best people in town; best both socially and morally. The town has heretofore been antagonistic and it has taken a great deal of educational work to bring them to a receptive mood. We have the support of the Women's Club and educational bodies and have arranged to follow the public lectures this winter with films from Mrs. Dolese's department, using the same subjects as the lectures.

Good Work.

Persons who mentally group the dives and the picture theaters under the same head are likely to be surprised at the receipt of a copper plate card of invitation, and they'll be won over, but even better is the idea of supplementing the public lectures with the films appropriate to the subjects lectured upon. Here is a splendid opportunity to drive home the educational value of the pictures in a way that will be profitable to management and the public alike. It is work such as this that banishes the old disrepute in which the pictures were held and places them in their proper classification. The films will be talked about at the lecture and brought to the attention of the audience in a way that will draw them to the house. We wish Mr. Dickinson all the success he deserves—and he deserves a lot for his plan of campaign. The house will be a ten-cent admission, with music occasionally, but no vaudeville.

Mr. Dickinson wants to know about the New Handbook. It should be from the press by the time this gets into print, and it will be found worth waiting for. The delay has been occasioned by a double proofreading and the unexpected bulk of the volume, but it is off the press now and will be delivered in a few days.

Lots on It.

On a sheet eight by nine Lou Wittman, of the Star Theater, Hamilton, Ohio, not only gets a seven-day program that does not seem unduly crowded, but has the space for a display advertisement of Monte Cristo. The sheet is folded twice to make a six-page leaflet. On one side in three columns appears the weekly program and on the other one-third of the space forms the cover and a six by six advertisement of the feature reel for the following week takes up the remaining two-thirds.

A careful choice of type and the use of a brief line or full description as may be most expedient gives the suggestion of amplitude rather than economy of space. Poor proofreading stands against the printer, but the idea is distinctly good. A little six-point type, some seven and eight point and some few lines in larger sizes produce a sort of optical illusion of space where the reverse is the fact. You can do a lot of juggling with type if you "get next" the foreman and get him interested. Printers, as a rule, are a bunch of mighty nice chaps if you go at them right. Off and on we've stood on the editorial make-up side of the stone for twenty-one years and we never yet saw a grouch we couldn't break up into smiles by not putting on airs or asking impossibilities.

How Should We Know?

Harry Marsey sends in a small one-page slip from the Happy Hour Theater, Buffalo. It is on yellow paper with a huge red question mark on the front and in black the question:

What Happened to Mary at the Happy Hour
Tuesday, November 26.

We don't know what happened to Mary at the Idle Hour on November 26, but we imagine that a lot of Buffalonians went to find out, for the leaflet is striking and effective. Red on yellow always works up effectively, particularly with some black to back it up, and the form of the question will catch the eye more quickly than some arrangement of the phrase following more conventional lines. The only other wording is the explanation that this is the fifth of the series, "A Letter to the Princess." What Happened to Mary may be worked up in many ways. Send in what you have done with it.

Winstock Again.

Melvin G. Winstock sends a clipping of the report of the meeting of the State Federation of Women's Clubs for Oregon. The morning session was held in the People's Theater, and Mr. Winstock made an address in which he pointed out the good that the pictures can do, aided by three illustrative reels. There were delegates from every town in the state and they all went home with a better idea of the pictures. Mr. Winstock writes:

> Enclosed please find a clipping which does not in any way do justice to the occasion. Representatives from every city and town in this state were at this gathering, and the audience was very attentive, appreciative, and demonstrative. I did not insist upon rigid censorship. I agreed heartily with the plan which I have fathered for the last two years, which is Voluntary Censorship, of a Board composed of representatives of the various Clubs and Societies, and they sit with us every morning and act in a suggestive and advisory capacity. The Chairman of this Committee gave a very good talk and complimented us on the sincerity with which we had co-operated, and spoke depreciatingly of those who had not played fair. Then followed my talk, which was rather extensive on the question of Motion Pictures in general.

We are not in favor of that local censorship idea because one never can tell when the idea will turn out to be a boomerang. It may run along for months or years, but there is certain to come a time when the censoring becomes arbitrary and unreasonable. The intelligent manager is amply able to censor his own films and a voluntary censorship will do the other sort no good. It is a thing well let alone.

Rather Neat.

Mr. E. L. Blanchard, of the People's Theater, Sunbury, Pa., sends a newspaper advertisement in which very effective use is made of white space. The advertisement drops six inches across two columns. The name of the house appears at the top in white against a black background. The remainder of the advertisement is a series of four boxes set in a light six-point gothic and boxed in with one-point rule. There is a thirty-point space between each box and the lines are thrown into relief in a manner that for a change is vastly more effective than the usual black face type. We cannot indicate the make-up of the advertisement, but reproduce these lines, which may suggest something to others.

Making It Known.

Frank Montgomery has been booming the Bernhardt pictures with full page advertisements and offers about the best work he has done in this line. We have before us a page from the Dayton Journal. We are inclined to think that the text is a bit crowded where there is so much white space at the top, but Montgomery advertisements are all solid reading and this adheres to the tradition.

At the top is a large portrait of Mr. Montgomery himself, for his face and name are his trademark. There is a large cut of Mme. Bernhardt and smaller cuts of the local manager with a frame of repeated titles and players' names similar to that reproduced in this department not long ago.

The top line is "So high as a tree aspires to grow, so high will it find an atmosphere suited to it." Then follows a characteristic Montgomery talk. It is earnest, honest and sincere and good for you to read whether you can use it or not. Here it is:

> Read the above line over again and then just stop and think—think—let it work down deep in your brain and after you have fully realized what it means, let me say to you
> "THAT LINE IS MY MOTIVE POWER"
> Without that thought I would be as a ship without a sail. A man, if he pulls himself together, is able to steer the ship of life and dominate the rudder, but it takes motive power to make the ship advance, and that little line is what helps me.
> THAT THOUGHT IS WHAT MAKES MONTGOMERY WIN
> Some people say: "Montgomery, you're too much of an idealist, and ideals are expensive." Are they right? I firmly contend that they are not. Did you ever know a man who put all his time and thoughts to doing things right to lose in the end? There are many things which I do in the interests of my patrons, which I need not do and, perhaps, if I never did them they wouldn't be missed. For instance, take the "Ladies' Parlor" at my Majestic Theater.
> I never heard of any great amount of hue and cry being raised before I conceived the idea of spending a little money to make the patrons of a picture theater comfortable, because such theaters did not afford a parlor for the ladies, which commanded a view of the screen. But, after I added it, how many, many ladies said:
> "MR. MONTGOMERY, YOUR MAJESTIC THEATER IS SO ENJOYABLY COZY"
> The same thing applies to the box seats. I don't charge extra for them to my regular patrons, and all you have to do to prove that you are a regular patron is to buy a dollar's worth of admissions at once. This gives you a coupon, admitting you to Montgomery's Majestic ten times, with free use of the boxes.
> THE WHOLE TRUTH OF THE MATTER IS THIS:
> In every trade, business or profession you will find a representative person; that man excels; and it is the thought and worry he applies to his business that makes him stand out pre-eminently in his class. To be a leader in any line requires deep thought, and thought causes worry, and worry causes gray hairs, and therefore I say to you:
> "THE GRAY HAIR TELLS THE STORY"
> Some men devote a few hours a day to studying your wants, but the man who lies awake nights figuring out an advantage for you is the man who wins out in the long run. I worry over every detail of my performances, and one of my greatest thoughts is to secure features which will be particularly suited to my patronage. With this particular thought in mind I have booked a production which I consider
> THE GREATEST PICTORIAL PRODUCTION SINCE THE ADVENT OF THE PHOTOPLAY.

There follows the descriptive matter and then an offer to refund the admission of any person who is dissatisfied, and since Montgomery patrons know he means it when he says it, it clinches the matter.

Novel Box Scheme.

The scheme of offering the boxes free to those who take ten tickets at a time is a novel one. If the offer is too liberally accepted it might be well to qualify with an if to the effect that there must be room in the boxes, but it is a good scheme for getting the people to come regularly and the possession of such a coupon is viewed with pride by a lot of people who see in it an intimate connection with the house. If you can erect a loyal clientele you will never have to worry about paying your bills. And here is a point in passing. For the Bernhardt engagement the admission was advanced to twenty-five cents, but the holders of box coupons did not surrender their rights. They were entitled to the boxes without extra charge other than the admission. It's a small point on paper, but it's a big one in the mind of the regular patron who would not relish being thrust aside on a special night were that to be done. Two reels in addition to the four parts of "Queen Elizabeth" were shown each day in addition to the musical program, the other subjects being changed daily the three days the special remained.

To show that it was a draw there was a news cut picturing the crowd attracted to the Atlanta house when the picture was shown there.

More Bleichisms.

George A. Bleich, whose work has recently been extensively mentioned in this column, sends in some more stuff now that his Empress Theater, Owensboro, Kentucky, has been opened. He writes:

> I should give your department in THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD credit for a good many ideas obtained. For instance you will notice "A Show You Would Take Your Mother to See." That was lifted from some other exhibitor through your department. If any of my stuff is worthy of use by others I place it at their disposal cheerfully.

One line that catches the eye reads:

"Not a new feature, but new to those who have missed seeing it in the past." It has reference to "A Tale of Two Cities," now more than two years old, but as good now as when it was first produced. Don't miss a good thing because someone else had it six months or a year ago. Evans and Hoey played "A Parlor Match" fourteen years, and we saw it every year. There are a lot of last year's films that we would be glad to see again, and there are others who feel the same way about it. Why not dig up some of the old hits and play them back?

Another advertisement reads: "Not new. This is the original production made a year or more ago. If you have seen it, you will enjoy it over again. If you have never seen it, don't miss this opportunity."

Two Styles.

Mr. Bleich seems to believe in printer's ink, and newspaper advertising as the best way to use the ink. He has two styles of advertisement—a cross-page, three or four inches deep, across the bottom of a page, and a two-column panel without display. One of the latter reads:

> A SIMPLE REMEDY FOR THE "GRUMPS."
> Have you got 'em? They afflict you mostly in the evenings when you sit around the house, with your mind on your affairs of the day.
> What you need is a little mental recreation. You want to forget your business and bothers, and the best way to do so is to pick yourself up and come to the "Empress." An hour spent here will just fresh you up wonderfully.
> Bother an old picture show, maybe you say. That's all right. If moving pictures don't interest you, it's probably because you have seen only "bum" ones put on improperly, or else you have formed an idea that they are intended for people inferior. My, but you've lots to learn if such thoughts as these are in your head.
> The kind of moving pictures and the way they are put on at the "Empress" are not like others. I will guarantee to make you see this form of amusement in a different way if you will come to my theater.
> Consider just a moment. I offer you over an hour of recreation and entertainment for 10 cents. Perhaps you imagine yourself a spendthrift when you "loosen up" to the extent of a dime. Do you give any thought to the many dimes you spend during the day for little fleeting indulgences? You don't.
> Well, you are cheating yourself by missing the good shows I am providing, and it's high time you changed up a little. Try the panacea I offer for mental relief—come out tonight. No fixing up necessary to go to the "Empress."
> Yours for wholesome amusement,
> GEO. A. BLEICH.
> P. S.—Bring your wife along.
> THE EMPRESS.

Note that postscript. It's a good thing to play up in your advertising. It gets you solid with the women and right-minded men.

Says "Not So."

Here is a letter from Mr. F. E. Rutter, of the Odeon, Bellefontaine, Ohio. We give Mr. Rutter's denial. We have not the publication at hand, but we very distinctly recall some blank pages and are willing to compromise on the advertising, though it is our recollection that there was some house advertising. Mr. Rutter says:

> Many thanks for the kind words about the Odeon News, but you made a slight mistake. You said that it was a 20-page paper and that some pages were blank, while others were devoted to advertising. There are no blank pages and not a word of advertising in it, although I could make it a very profitable investment if I would take all the advertising matter that has been offered. I cater only to the very best people, and get them, too, and would not think of intruding a lot of paid advertisements upon them. It is a rare occurrence with me to even use the screen for advertising my own program, but I do lots of newspaper and personal advertising, aiming to never over-estimate any picture. In this way I have that when I do advertise something special the public has confidence in every word that I say about it.

We do not see why Mr. Rutter should not carry a little paid advertising in his little book. In these days of the popular magazines it is clearly understood that the advertisements pay for the material given the reader, and only this last issue the American changed its form to get a make-up that would give all advertisers the coveted "next to pure reading matter" position. If we had a house we would make limited but effective use of slides for our own attraction, though we should not use the material of outside advertisers. Mr. Rutter is sending a copy of the second issue, which will be commented upon later.

A Special American Poster.

The American is issuing a special three-sheet frame for a one-sheet poster. The top sheet carries the wording:

"The American Film Mfg. Co.
presents a Flying A Feature
at this theater."

The bottom sheet carries the well-known winged A and between is space for a one-sheet in an ornamental frame. Frames for general subjects are to be had of the advertisers' supply companies, but this enables the American to be specially played up.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Here's S. T. Again.

HERE'S Steve Talbot once more and as usual he has something to say that is something, though he wrongs us grieviously when he says that we have only hinted at single spacing. We've told time and again in this and the inquiry department that most directors like single spacing and that the editors are more or less evenly divided on the subject. As the director is the man we want to please we do single spacing. Bannister Merwin double spaces and we do not know what Mr. Harris does. Most regulars use the single space because it looks more business-like. We use one page for the synopsis, scene plot and cast and from one to three pages for the action, according to length. Now comes Mr. Talbot:

Prompted by your statement that a script should not exceed five pages, I wrote you some time ago that my scripts ran to from six to fourteen pages. I neglected to state that I was in the habit of double spacing everything. This was some months ago. Now, my longest photoplay does not exceed seven pages—I single space everything. But this change has not come about through any advice or direct information from anyone. I am a steady reader of this department, "The Photoplay Author," "The Photoplaywright," "The Dramatic Mirror," "Photoplay Magazine," "Motion Picture Story Magazine," and "Telegraph," and in none of them have I ever read a word which would give me a hint as to whether single or double spacing is most desirable, except this department, and I can only credit it with the vaguest of hints. But a succession of vague hints gave me the idea that single spacing is customary and so I do it now—and get my stuff down to the five page limit. I might mention, incidentally, that since I have done so, my scripts have received better consideration and I have at hand three requests for more scenarios—one from a company which is repeatedly referred to, as "not buying from outsiders." To tell the truth. I don't know yet, whether Bannister Merwin, Epes W., Hugh King and others who sell, single or double space their "sellers," but have arrived at the conclusion that the former is "it" by my system of filing hints and information culled from the above mentioned publications.

I see frequent reference, in this department, to "my card index," "my files," etc. I must confess that I have not yet arrived at that enviable stage, where I feel the necessity of having a card index, linen envelopes (printed or otherwise), catalogues of releases, or the other elaborate arrangements I have seen described here; but I have a system of keeping in touch with the market that may commend itself to others. Here it is:

I have a book of about two hundred pages (it was "The Life of McKinley" before I started to write photoplays, and had six hundred pages), I cut two pages out, to within an inch of the binding, between every two pages left intact. Then I assigned a double page (two facing each other), to each film manufacturing company, by cutting out their name, address, and trade mark from some trade paper, and pasting at top of left hand page. I find that I have now, ten pages devoted to the Licensed companies (use one double page for the two Kleine companies and same for the two Pathes), twelve for Film Supply and thirteen for Universal. Also a Kinemacolor and Arrow page. The rest of the book, I fill with matter from this column, classified under twenty headings—"Submitting the Manuscript"; "The Synopsis"; "Plots," etc. On each company page, I paste all matter I run across pertaining to that company's activities, wants, etc. For instance, my "Majestic" page starts off with an article from THE WORLD, headed "Majestic Wants Split-reel Comedies." Next is an article from this column—"Hoadley For Majestic." Then an advertisement from the Photoplay Magazine, for scenarios. Then an article from Gordon Trent's Gossip (Sunday Telegraph), mentioning the photoplays that Herbert Prior has written, and an announcement of the engagement of Robert Goodman as author and producer. On the opposite page I paste each week's list of the company's releases. If I get a rejection from a company, I paste the slip to one of the inch tabs (left after cutting out pages between), and write on it, the name of story, date submitted and returned. So, with each rejection, I have a new page to use in case the matter gathered is so voluminous as to require more than two pages—paste it on the back of the rejection slip. My Reliance department covers six pages now, owing to the numerous rejections from that company. My Bison, or Spencer department, covers six pages, owing to the abundance of news published regarding the changes in the New York M. P. Co. My Lubin takes up lots of room owing to the size of their slip, but I have each slip pretty well plastered with "Sayings of McCloskey," lists of releases, etc.

This book is only about eight months old, but I think it would surprise you to look through it and see the amount of information it contains. I consider it the best book of instruction and up-to-date information for a photoplaywright "in the ring," taking it as such, and it only takes up a space on my desk, 9 x 6 x 4 inches.

The scrap book idea is a good one, but we think that the ideal arrangement for those who lack a six hundred page Life of McKinley would be a loose leaf book and cover. One of a proper size would cost two or three dollars but would be worth the money in the long run. If you do not want to make so heavy an investment get a pack of envelopes large enough to take a sheet of typewriter paper. Paste up on these sheets, number the pages and bind them with McGill fasteners. Write the name of some company on each envelope and file the information inside. The cover might also carry the address, the average length of time it takes them to read and the prices received.

Oversensitive.

We've been asked to express an opinion on this question.

A novice sold a script to a licensed company last spring. It has not yet been produced. She thinks that honesty requires that she return the money since it was evident that the script was of no value.

There are few writers who will refund money for work not used and we see no reason why they should. If an editor accepts a script he knows precisely what he is buying. If he has made an error of judgment he or his company should sustain the loss, not the writer who sold the story in good faith.

Several years ago one of the big magazines had a housecleaning. They threw into the furnace $20,000 worth of scripts that had been bought and paid for. They did not return them to the writers and ask for the money back. Someone in the shop had bought the stuff. It was the company's loss.

It's the same way in photoplay studios. A story may be taken and never used for any one of a dozen reasons. It may have been made by some director who did not get the value out of the story. Perhaps it lies on the shelf to be taken down some day and remade. Perhaps it is being held for some favorable opportunity to get certain scenes. Perhaps it was bought because its release would hurt some subject already made, or it might have been purchased because it suggested some entirely different play to the editor. If you sell a story you have completed a transaction. It is up to the studio to get its money back from it. We know one studio that has held half a dozen scripts for more than three years through no fault of the author.

Saving Words.

We are not in favor of a parsimony of words, but on the other hand we do not believe in using a line to tell what can be told in a fraction of that space. To the director the script is little more than a memorandum of the action and he cannot wade through half a page of single spaced typewriting for a single scene. He wants something that can be read almost at a glance and will favor the short script, provided it is fully informative.

The other day a correspondent to whom we loaned a script wrote that we had given in two words a stage direction for which she had used nine and we had conveyed the idea more clearly, at that. Now she is studying condensation. If you cannot fully explain yourself in less than nine words do not use the two and leave the editor to guess the rest, but if you can make two words tell as much as ten, do not write the extra eight. The shorter the script, if the story is all told, the more favorable impression it makes on editor and director because it argues the trained writer and the trained writer argues good work.

Take some old script. Pick out the longest scene and see how many words you can cut out without destroying the complete sense. If you work slowly and painstakingly you'll be surprised at the words you can leave out; probably enough for another play, and you'll find that at the same time you have gained in directness of action and clearness of plot. You're likely to get the action so condensed that you can see the faults yourself, for it is easier to pick out the flaws that stand out in all their nakedness than when they are bundled up in a mass of useless words that confuse you even more than they do the director. Condensing the script is one way to expand the bank account.

Not the Right Spirit.

We got a letter the other day from a man who wanted someone to put his plots into plays. He wrote: "The plot comes easy, but I find the writing hard work. Can you put me in touch with someone who can do this for me on a sharing basis?"

Probably the writer thinks he is a photoplaywright, but he isn't and never will be until he is willing to work and work hard and long. If you really are a writer, the work is part of the fun. There is a real joy in writing, and it's fine to sit back and feel that you have done something well. Primarily we write photoplays because we can and because we like to see Ira Lowery's signature at the bottom of a check, but we like the work. We don't feel so much that it is work. If you go at a play in the right spirit it is like putting a jigsaw puzzle together. They are out of fashion now, but do you remember the time when you used to swear that a piece had dropped on the floor and was lost because there was nothing in sight that would fit that hole? And then all of a sudden some piece of a shape wholly unlike that you were looking for bobbed up and made the snuggest kind of a fit?

Photoplay writing is a jigsaw puzzle of words and situations instead of wooden shapes. You'll be ready to swear that there isn't a scene in your imagination that will fit in this particular spot, and then, all of a sudden you get the inspiration and you grin at the action and feel proud of your creation. Every photoplay is a puzzle, a puzzle of how to make the best possible use of your material. If you look at it in that light it is not work at all—it's play.

It's the same with everything else that is worth while. You must work and work hard to win and if you have not the heart for work you never will be more than a miserable failure, but if you put your heart into your work, the work becomes play, the burden rolls from your shoulders and you take pride in creation. If you dig a ditch dig the best ditch possible; dig a better ditch than anyone else ever dug, or if you cannot, do the best you can and study constantly to improve your work. If you write a play, put the best of you into every script. If it takes a week, give a week to it willingly and cheerfully. If it takes three days, give three days. The time will come when you can rattle them off if you keep at it long enough.

You cannot take the same pride in the work of another. Anyone can form a plot. We used to have an office boy who could give us a short story plot as quickly as we could form one ourselves, but he couldn't write one to save his life, and he knew it. He's writing stories now because he was not content to merely supply someone else with plots. He worked to perfect himself and he's drawing royalties from half a dozen vaudeville sketches because he wasn't afraid of hard work but was willing to buckle down and labor until practice lightened his labor and then made it play. He had no fluency of diction, no smoothness of phrase, not even a grammar school education, but he had imagination and a willingness to go home after a hard day's work and hustle along on a story.

He had the right spirit, ambition and a willingness to pay in labor for his achievement. Don't be content to be a tipster. Be a worker. It's worth while but you won't know how well worth the while it is until your hardly earned success comes to you. That's one of the things that cannot be put into words.

Sound Sense.

There is a lot of sound sense in this letter from B. Franklin Townsly. It is rather long and it deals with a subject that has been hammered out time and again, but if the free lances could know how close to the edge many of the studios are, they would be as insistent as this writer. The dog-in-the-manger incompetent is spoiling the market by unwarranted abuse of the men with whom he seeks to do business. More and more the competent writer is being assured a certainty to the exclusion of the free lance and if this puppy barking of the school manufactured genius isn't stopped, the gates are going to be shut and stay shut against the outsider who piles his bromidic effusions into the studios and then raises a row when he gets them back. Editors are not sending back good stories that fit that studio's style of production. They want them; they welcome the good new writer like a letter from home with a check in it, but they are tired of the yapping of the novice who is certain that his scripts are good because some school professor who knows no more of real photoplay needs than he does, told him so.

If you can't write, don't make the way hard for those who can. Now listen to Mr. Townsly:

> Why it is some fellows cannot use a little common everyday horsesense and figure things out for their own benefit? All this raving about the treatment received from the editors isn't going to help matters for the "down-trodden, unfortunate and mistreated" script writers, who are endeavoring to better conditions from a money standpoint. It could be bettered somewhat, I will admit. But if all this continues much longer, it will become tiresome to the manufacturers. When they get to that point, it will mean that the market will be closed permanently to outside scripts. Then we can politely go to-rot, as far as they are concerned. I do not mean this as a lecture, but I would despise myself, if I sat with folded hands and watched some other cuss "spill the beans" on a good thing, without a word. Yes, a good thing. The photoplaywright profession is an art, also a Godsend, to lots of poor devils who have more brains than pocketbook—and to some who have neither. If you were an artist, would you write to papers, articles containing knocks about your patrons, who bought your best efforts, even at their own price; a price which gave your bread and butter? Figure out how long you would have that bread to butter. A slice from the loaf is better now than none at all in the future. For future there will be for the manufacturers. But with the market closed, how long will we last? They know the screen and market value along with several others unknown to us, better than we do. Give them credit for knowing more than we do when we get our scripts back. That is why they are the editors. Some editors do not know it all, but the manufacturers give them the benefit of the doubt—why shouldn't we? I hate to have a script turned down, but I would rather have that to happen, than have it accepted, produced and placed on the screen for me to see how really rotten it was, knowing then, I had not given value received.
> After a few more get on the blacklist, they will cut it out. With the market closed against them, they'll naturally have to write for their own fool pleasure. Something is bound to happen sooner or later. I have put two and two together, and the answer isn't three, five or seven. It means finis to a good profession for the free-lance. I have had as many scripts refused as the next one. I have never inquired for one although it lay out to one firm for three months or more. But when I did hear from it, it wasn't what I had sent out by a long shot. And I received as perfect an apology as a free lance could wish or dream for—along with the check. They stated what they wanted, and I have managed to get them two a month for the past four months, and all were accepted. I studied my market. If I wrote out of their style, the others got a chance at it, not the one. They stated what they wished from me and I am not anxious to spoil a good market.
> We are the Keystone, you might say. The ones depended on mostly by the market to furnish sensible ideas, which will bring in the bacon to the exhibitors. Ever figure out how much Mr. Exhibitor has to say about your ideas? If licensed pictures do not fill his cash-drawer, he figures the independent pictures will. The exhibitor, manufacturer and the free-lance form the market triangle of picturedom. If one doesn't fit the other, there is apt to be a change at either angle. If you can get the ideas that will cause an audience to grip each other, or the arms of the seats, you have caused them to talk about your idea and a betterment of conditions will result for all in the triangle. If you have a well-founded grievance; something to make the kick go home, I say make it. But these petty howls that are raised each week are not going to better conditions any more than they are at present—and they might become a great deal worse in the future. A good many of these kickers who are looking for sympathy themselves need a kick well placed.

Getting It Right.

The other day, when the four informers in the Becker case were released from jail, the technical charges on which they had been held were withdrawn before the committing magistrate. In photoplay they would have been run out of jail by some turnkey with no formality whatever. In spite of all that has been said on this subject, there are scores of stories in the studios each week in which the wrongfully convicted man is bounced from the jail with scant ceremony, or the wrongfully accused person is shot out of the station house with no more formality than a muttered "Git!"

There are two ways of getting out of jail if you have been wrongfully convicted. You may be pardoned by the Governor and have your rights as a citizen restored, or an attorney may move to reopen the case before the court. If a man has been charged with a crime and has not had a hearing he cannot be discharged without a court appearance, when the charge will be withdrawn.

These simple legal facts are so well known that it is astonishing that writers do not follow these very simple rules. If you don't know, ask someone who does, but get it right.

James Dayton

We wrote Richard Willis for his photograph for the gallery of Photoplay editors and he sent back a portrait of James Dayton, who is doing the reading for the Pacific Coast division of the Universal Company. Unlike the eastern sections, the Los Angeles companies do not depend upon tame authors, but are in the market for good outside material. There are sections from several of the eastern studios and the Nestor and Bison, which are essentially western, notwithstanding the fact that some of the house organs credit Nestor with still being in Bayonne, N. J. This is Mr. Dayton's picture. You can frame it or make faces at it according to how your scripts fare in the west.

Mr. Dayton was formerly a member of the Selig staff and is not only a writer but an actor of some note. He stands six feet two and Mr. Willis adds that he has a very sunny temperament.

Comments on the Films

"TOLL GATE RAIDERS" (Kalem), December 12.—There's a good deal of fresh historical interest in this picture of Kentucky at the time of the toll contentions. When the country was first being opened up, highways were constructed by private corporations which levied tolls every few miles. This was but a form of special privilege, an old world, undemocratic practice, that soon incensed the common people who had to pay the price. The trouble was not confined to Kentucky; New York had its share with other states. The incident pictured in this offering, is melodramatic. The raiders have set the toll house on fire and by chance, not only the keeper's daughter but the daughter of the road's chief owner is in danger and both are rescued from the flames by a young lawyer. Without doubt it was taken in the very place of the story and the photography is clear enough. The players are pleasing and their work fair. As an offering it is better than the average.

"THE PROSPECTOR" (Essanay), December 12.—Crude western life as a setting for a story seems becoming pretty barren ground. When fertilized by a good scenario, a producer can still raise a good picture on it. This offering lacks a fresh or very interesting idea and we fear to commend it very highly as entertainment; its crude happenings have been pictured too often. It is very well acted.

"GLIMPSES OF THE BALKAN WAR TERRITORY" (Eclipse), December 11.—This offering is sure to be watched for and is well worth seeing. For the most part, it deals with Bosnia, a province that Austria helped herself to a year or so ago, but it also gives some excellent views of Constantinople from along the water front. The photography is good and especially the Bosnian scenes give a very fair idea of the inhabitants. An instructive and very valuable offering.

"A SUNDAY AFTERNOON IN RURAL ENGLAND" (Edison), Dec. 11.—Unfortunately the photography in this picture is not up to the standard. Some of the views are clear and show the misty dream-like atmosphere said to be peculiar to English country scenes; but some are too dark to give much idea of the land.

"FATE'S DECREE" (Pathe), Dec. 11.—A pleasing but not strongly dramatic picture of hacienda life in Mexico. Its backgrounds are a patio with ferns, palms and fountains, a flight of stone steps or a garden path flooded with sunlight and one or two interiors, perfectly set and trimmed, and it is played in rich brocaded costumes. The owner of the hacienda has found his wife in the arms of a friend and has turned her out of the house. She was not very guilty and is now living in a cottage not far away. Their child, a very pleasing little girl, is lonely and falls sick. This brings about a reconciliation. The producer has skillfully handled his material and the offering will probably be liked.

"THE WONDERFUL ONE HORSE SHAY" (Lubin), Dec. 10.—Once Oliver Wendell Holmes in a jocular mood wrote of a wonderful shay that went for a hundred years and then suddenly crumbled up as though it had been in the mill and ground. This Lubin comedy, which doesn't give us the history of the contraption, introduces it and the catastrophy, which we see has an important effect on the outcome of a love story. As for this story, it is made fresh by little things, like the shay for instance; for in outline it isn't new. Mrs. George B. Walters carries off nearly all the honors as the widow. Her daughter has just eloped. She is following the pair in the shay, which is owned by one of her own swains, who at present is more favored than his rival, her daughter's new father-in-law. The shay goes to pieces and this changes the complexion of the whole situation. It's a very fair offering, well photographed and pleasing.

"THE RANGER AND HIS HORSE" (Selig), Dec. 10.—William Duncan, author and producer of this picture, deserves much credit. He, himself plays the ranger, the leading role, and has made an offering that keeps all eyes glued to the screen. It is thoroughly romantic without being luridly melodramatic and its value as entertainment is much enhanced by the smooth and natural way the scenes come out and by the skill with which natural peculiarities of its backgrounds are used to create a feeling of mystery. Myrtle Stedman plays the heroine, captive of a band of outlaws. Lester Cunio is the chief desperado. The ranger, posing as a badman, gets in with the band and with the help of his horse effects one of the most sensational of rescues. Rex de Rosselli plays the girl's father. It's a much better picture than the synopsis would lead one to expect.

"THE CAPTURE OF MR. SOFTY BEATIT" (C. G. P. C.), Dec. 13.—One of those trick films full of absolutely incomprehensible doings and brim full of laughter.

"THE APPLE INDUSTRY IN WASHINGTON" (C. G. P. C.), Dec. 13.—And this on the same reel is a very instructive subject and one that will be more than welcome in many places. So many people, it is said, have made fortunes from apples that we all are interested in how it is done. This shows a good deal.

"THE ERROR OF OMISSION" (Essanay), Dec. 13.—Many things are possible in real life that are much too improbable for use in fiction. As Mark Twain said, and we can afford to repeat it again, "Truth has the advantage over fiction, for fiction has to seem true." The idea behind this farce comedy doesn't convince us enough to be truly amusing. In it, for lack of a birth certificate, a boy grows up from one difficulty to another; he is refused admission to a school (where was the truant officer?); he loses his first vote; is denied a marriage license, and finds the sole record his father left only on the back of a dog license. Perhaps someone disgusted with the red tape required in modern city life made the farce; but we didn't hear any laughs from the spectators.

"IRELAND THE OPPRESSED" (Kalem), Dec. 14.—An Irishman is a good lover and a good fighter and the world loves him on both counts. Pictures dealing with oppression in Ireland strike a ready chord and are likely to be acceptable nearly everywhere. They stir indignation and this would be their drawback were they not, as this one surely is, relieved by loyalty and heroic self-sacrifice. This picture is not a love story. It deals with a priest who gets into trouble for daring to take the part of the penniless tenants, thrown out into the cold by their pitiless landlord. It shows how the "White Boys" jumped into a squad of redcoats and rescued him, how he was fed in the hills, sold for the reward by an informer, and helped at the last moment to escape by a girl, who paid the penalty of seven years in prison. All this is pictured as a tale told by an old man at a modern Irish harvest party. We find in it lovely Irish scenes, and its story is clearly developed and very effective. Jack Clark plays a lad who takes the lead in the rescue; Alice Hollister, the girl, his sweetheart, who sacrifices herself to save the priest; Sidney Olcott, the priest, and he is also the picture's producer. J. P. McGowan plays the major, in the same makeup that he used in "Kerry Gow." Robert Vignola plays the informer.

"A CHRISTMAS ACCIDENT" (Edison), Dec. 14.—Annie Eliot Trumbull has written a picture with true Christmas atmosphere which is something worth while. The holiday spirit is feeling not cold fact; one can't find it by sitting up for it and, in describing it, something more than realism is demanded. It is like the thorn that blossoms in the snow. It isn't believable except at Glastonbury.

Dickens' "Christmas Carol" is also not wholly believable, but it is most convincing. And the same is true of this picture. It is a story of two adjoining houses just alike and of two families, one with no children and rich, the other, poor but blessed with five likely youngsters. It shows how the rich man refused to allow his wife to "do something" for the children next door and then by accident presented them with a turkey and so found Christmas without expecting it, like Sir Launfall. It is a clean-cut, true and wholesome offering; just the thing for any occasion, and all occasions. William Wadsworth and Mrs. William Bechtel play the rich people. Augustus Phillips, Mrs. C. J. Williams and Edna Hamel, with four other children, play the poor family and all do very well at nearly all times.

"BUSTER AND THE CANNIBALS" (Lubin), Dec. 14.—A picture played by children and as such very interesting. It is the same delightful crowd of youngsters that have acted in other pictures for us, and it will be liked.

"HIS FIRST SKATE" (Lubin), Dec. 14—On the same reel is this farce with speeded-up action that makes a few laughs.

"NATOOSA" (Vitagraph), December 11.—The chief interest in this picture comes from its scenes as illustrations rather than as steps in the progress of a story; for the story as pictured is not plausible. It has some very pretty views. Natoosa is an Indian princess who falls in love with a white man. Her father offers her to him as his wife and being refused is incensed. His revenge is, after capturing the man and his white sweetheart, to stake them down in the desert; but they are rescued by Natoosa. If the red men had been the dominant race, which they never were so near well-built houses, the story might have convinced. No one would suspect that Robert Thornby, in the part of the chief, was not a real Indian. Natoosa, Mary Charleson, is almost as perfect. Robert Burns plays the cowboy. It was produced by Rollin S. Sturgeon from A. S. Behrmann's scenario.

"THE GOD OF GOLD" (Selig), December 12.—A rather bitter picture of a man who gives everything for gold until he has absolutely nothing else and dies. The author, G. V. May, has written a sermon not a work of art. He has not shown true imagination in his character drawing, hasn't convinced us that the man is human like ourselves and gets no gripping hold of our imaginations. Thomas Santschi plays the votary of the false god and is ably assisted by Bessie Eyton and the two little Wades, Lillian and Frankie. Camille Astor and Lillian Hayward have short roles as have Messrs H. Rawlinson, E. James, W. Oakman and D. Simpson. Collin Campbell produced it. Photographically the picture is fine; it makes a fair offering.

"THE COMPACT" (Pathe), December 12.—A very popular novel of a few years back, by Mrs. Katharine Thurston, dealing with two men who looked exactly alike and who made a compact to exchange lives for a few hours, furnished the idea for this picture. One was a rich drug fiend, the other a struggling young lawyer. The compact enabled the drug fiend to endulge his weakness and have his important work carried on efficiently. In the picture, his work is that of an assistant district attorney with an important trial on his hands. Everything turns out as expected except that the drug fiend dies on the poor man's bed. The suspense comes when the rich man's wife fails to see through the imposition; thinks the new man is really her husband. We do know at this point what the end is going to be for it is only later that the real husband is found dead. The picture fails to get hold of the situation very effectively; it doesn't show what the wife's feeling is, nor what she wants; it wasn't the best kind of a situation for a film offering. Yet it has much that is interesting; is well acted and the camera work, a double exposure, has been perfectly accomplished.

"WHEN LOVE LEADS" (Lubin), December 14.—A picture somewhat more romantic than usual and not very convincing as conducted. Ormi Hawley and Edwin August play the leads, but their roles call for actions sometimes not sensible. In one instance, the former is run over by an automobile. The producer's straining for effect at this point resulted in a comical accident which made the audience laugh. A trite situation and a few weak places like this have kept the offering from being effective.

"ALL FOR A GIRL" (Vitagraph), December 14.—A newspaper man's love story which, without being very believable, is convincing enough to be entertaining. The reporter, to win a raise that will permit him to marry the girl of his choice, contrives to purloine from a woman seeking a divorce a package of letters. His sweetheart is this woman's friend and finds him making love (somewhat disgustedly) to the cook. She is holding the very package of letters, which in her astonishment, she drops on the kitchen floor, and after she has flounced out, the reporter picks it up. Later we have a pretty making-up scene. The author, Wallace Ried, has given producer Frederick Thompson a good chance to make some pretty scenes. Dorothy Kelly plays the girl; Leah Baird, the woman in the divorce case; Kate Price, the cook; Mr. Fox, the reporter, and Harry T. Morey, the editor.

"TURNING THE TABLES" (Vitagraph), December 14.—On the same reel, is this comedy, a true laugh-maker, by N. Burnham. It was produced by William Humphrey. Edward See draws a queer character who loves to doll up before the glass, but who is no fool. The office force tries to play a practical joke on him. A vain man is usually credulous and when he gets the decoy letter from an admirer (?) he believes it until he catches the crowd laughing. What comes of it made the house laugh heartily.

"A LEAP-YEAR PROPOSAL" (Vitagraph), December 16.—Mrs. Dean Willets has used a freshly pleasing idea in writing this photoplay of a newspaper woman who wins the love of a rich man's son. Leah Baird plays the girl who is sent by her paper to verify a report that the young man is to marry one of his father's employees. She gets a job in the store as a fashion model and before she knows it, is making the story true herself. E. K. Lincoln plays the hero; Tefft J. Johnson, his father, and Hal Wilson, the editor of the paper. As an offering, the picture entertains. It is well-acted and well-put together; but it is only a story, not a picture of life.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 51" (December 16).—What could possibly be a greater feature anywhere in the world today than an authentic picture of the battle of Lulle Burgas? The topical this week has two or three views of the battle taken on the fireing line and they're immense. It also has a glimpse of the lake near Scutari and a good view of the King of Montenegro. The other items are good; they include a spectacular fire; but the war scenes will certainly be a drawing card.

"THE BURGLAR'S DILEMMA" (Biograph), December 16.—If this picture is a story about a burglar, it isn't built in the best way; for it brings and keeps another character to the fore from the first. It labors under a poor title which is certainly a defect, for a name at the beginning of a picture directs the attention, it might almost be said, prepares the space in the mind which the picture is to fill. And if the offering fails to fill that space, there is almost sure to be a feeling of dissatisfaction. In this case, where the situation is neither very likely nor significant, the shortcoming is the more noticeable. It's a story of a man who was stunned and thought to be dead. His brother who had knocked him down, discovers a burglar in the house and contrives to have him caught and suspected of murder. This was the burglar's bad fix; it wasn't a true dilemma which is a choice between two bad fixes. The unconscious man comes to. It isn't up to the best Biograph pictures.

"STRANGE PLACES AND QUAINT PEOPLE IN NEW YORK" (Kalem), December 13.—Views of the different quarters of New York, among them Syrian, Italian, French, Chinese, Jewish, etc. It will of course be far more interesting outside of New York than in it.

"THE MUMMY AND THE COWPUNCHERS" (Kalem), December 13.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this weak comedy.

"MY HERO" (Biograph), December 12.—Henry Walthall has the role of Indian Charlie, who, although strong in mind, has failed in the hero test through a weak body. He incites a massacre in order to raise himself in the estimation of his fellows. If one of the latter be not Frank Lanning then this writer has poor eyesight. There is a love story running through the picture. As in most Biograph pictures there is a flash of comedy at unexpected moments, just enough to ease the tension. There are some fine outdoor settings. In one of the scenes, where the boy and girl lovers are seated on a hollow log, the head of an Indian protruding from the end of the decayed tree gives one a start. There are several situations similar to this one. The picture goes over all the way.

"FOG" (Edison), December 13.—Here is real drama—and why not, with Marc MacDermott, Miriam Nesbitt, and, as the coster girl, Mary Fuller? The opening scenes are laid in London. The story, which is by Bannister Merwin, is deeply interesting throughout. Miss Fuller, by her work, will add to her admirers.

"THE CROOKED PATH" (Lubin), December 13.—In this two-reel story of the underworld, most of the work falls to Jack Halliday, who has the role of Dan Lyons, a crook who steals a watch and is sent to prison. His escape from the institution is a feature of the story, and many feet of film are devoted to it. Ormi Hawley has the part of Nell Harris, a girl of the underworld, who under the guidance of a clergyman and his blind mother changes her mode of life, later falling in love with the clergyman and becoming engaged to him. Edwin August is the clergyman. What little he is given to do is in his usual finished style. Mr. Halliday, as Dan Lyons, is excellent. He plays his part. Mary Stuart Smith as the clergyman's mother is also worthy of praise. Miss Hawley's portrayal in the earlier scenes is along lines different from those in which she is usually cast, but she was convincing.

The best situation is where Lyons has broken into the minister's home at night; Nell has discovered him and gone to the burglar asking him to take her jewels and leave the house. The clergyman also has come upon the two. Misunderstanding the situation, he denounces the girl. "Forgive me," says Nell, "for telling you he was my brother. I knew him before I took the straight road." Frederick Wright is the author of the story. The photography is excellent, the action smooth.

"THE CASTAWAY" (Melies), December 12.—A story enhanced by fine views of a rocky shore. There is an interesting child in the picture, which makes a good release.

"THE RED MAN'S HONOR" (Eclipse), Dec. 16—If for no other reason than that this is the first Indian picture ever made in Europe, it would excite interest. It must be admitted, however, that in spite of the distance from the home of this class of pictures its producer has done well. He has caught the Indian spirit. There is high dramatic quality and a judicious selection of natural settings.

"THE VIRTUE OF RAGS" (Essanay), December 17—The writer herewith makes a confession. After seeing this picture he determined to look up the identity of the Old Grouch. When in future he sees the statement that Francis Bushman is a master of makeup he will remove his hat and acquiesce. He was able, however, to discover Howard Missimer playing the butler and the club member; and one of the other club members also playing the police sergeant.

This is a fine picture—a sort of Christmas Carol on the screen, although there is no suggestion of Christmas in the play itself. It is notable for the work of Mr. Bushman; it is convincing and it reaches the heart. The cast gives splendid support. It may be of interest to know that the little one in the film is Margaret Stepplng; she looks it.

"TIME FLIES" (Essanay), December 11—Augustus Carney in this picture takes the part of a husband who plans to go out with the boys and get rid of a promise he has made his wife to hang pictures. The plans go awry, but there is considerable fun.

"THE NIGHT BEFORE CHRISTMAS" (Vitagraph), December 17—This is a pathetic story. The work falls to Maurice Costello and little Helen Costello. There are some tense moments, one when the father enters the operating room and learns that his wife is dead, or when, the night before Christmas, the child hands her stocking to her aunt; again, when the convict, escaped from prison, comes to his home, dresses in his old Santa Claus costume, and goes to the bedside of his little one.

"BAR K FOREMAN" (Lubin), December 16—An interesting picture. It is a western, in which Edgar Jones has the lead.

"A RIVAL OF CARUSO" (C. G. P. C.), December 17—Comedy, which makes considerable fun. A man in order to win a woman pretends a talent for singing which is not his. He engages a substitute; all goes well at first, but he gets caught in the end. It is not new, but it is well done.

"METAMORPHOSES" (C. G. P. C.), December 17—On the same reel as the foregoing is this bit in colors. It is unique and very pretty.

"LADY CLARE" (Edison), December 17—This portrayal of Tennyson's poem was made in England by Marc MacDermott and Miriam Nesbitt. Arundel Castle is used for some of the backgrounds. The picture was reviewed on December 7.

Independent

"THE MOUNTAIN GIRL'S SELF-SACRIFICE" (Nestor), Dec. 13.—This drama at no time rises out of the ordinary. A mining expert goes to examine a mine; swindlers have "salted" it. When the engineer discovers and denounces the trickery he is assaulted. The criminals are finally brought to justice.

"OWING MORE" (Victor), Dec. 13.—This is the suggestive title of a comedy in which Owen Moore plays the lead. He plays it well. So also does the supporting cast. It is all well done.

"TO THE CITY" (Rex), Dec. 12.—The story is of an elder sister who goes to the city, and in the battle loses out, but retains her respect. She rebuffs a man whose manner is sufficient to engender a strong desire on the part of the spectator to kick him. He plays his part. A younger sister who follows to the metropolis falls into the hands of the same man, but is saved from him through timely discovery by the older sister.

"THE BUSY BEE" (Eclair), Dec. 15.—Very interesting pictures showing the raising of the bee and the making of honey.

"FUNNICUS' HUNTING EXPLOITS" (Eclair), Dec. 15.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this amusing broad comedy of the man who is so imbued with the hunting spirit that he shoots up the house and is sent to bed by his wife. What he then dreams is shown on the screen. By means of triple exposure he is shown in bed, also climbing a tree, and at the foot of the tree is shown a lion.

"THE OTHER HALF" (Thanhouser), December 17.—A film produced in conjunction with one of the charity societies. The picture shows a family on the downward path through misfortune. Injury to the breadwinner has discouraged him; he becomes a panhandler. Through the agency of a charitable society the sick mother is taken to a rest, where she is taught the proper care of children; the father secures a situation. Fortune again smiles on the family. Mr. Cruze should not have been cast as the father of a daughter of twelve years. He is too youthful. The picture is well done.

"SAVING THE INNOCENTS" (American), December 21.—Showing the care of afflicted children in an institution. There is a fire drill, calisthenics, also scenes of the youngsters working at basketmaking, chair caning and weaving. It is an interesting release.

"MRS. BROWN'S BABY" (American), December 21.—On the same reel, a burlesque.

"BRAINS VS. BRAWN" (Thanhouser), December 15.—Riley Chamberlain and Margaret Snow try to interest in this comedy, which seems to be in several parts. In the first the two mentioned go to some athletic games, where a crook tries to get away with Margaret's purse, but a husky athlete restores it. Then the professor dreams he is in Ancient Rome, and to the insistence of Cæsar that he lick somebody he offers to fight six, choosing his own weapons. He picks a bomb. Then by means of an electric current the professor has fun with a blackhander. There are laughs.

"THE RECOGNITION" (American), December 23.—The story does not get over. In the last scene there is some explanation of the story, but it is too late to make the film interesting.

"THE RACE" (Thanhouser), December 20.—The picture seems forced, artificial. The story appears to have been hastily thrown together, just for the purpose of showing a motorboat in the water. There is an alleged race, but no start is shown nor is the finish clear.

"THE WONDERS OF SURGERY" (Majestic), December 17.—The title of this film would indicate to some minds that the picture would portray a gruesome subject. A boy at play is hurt, and the doctors decide that skin grafting is necessary. By the payment of money a little girl is secured who will furnish the necessary cuticle. By a subterfuge the sister of the little sufferer obtains entrance to the hospital and substitutes herself. The operation is shown with some detail. There is a moment of suspense when the parents are searching for the daughter and their departure for the hospital is delayed.

"THE CLUE IN THE DUST" (Majestic), December 15.—This drama contains novel situations. There will be some who will miss the significance of one or two of the opening scenes, but to those who "get" them the drama goes over well.

"THE STIGMA" (Nestor), December 18.—William Dowlan here enacts very creditably the role of a young ex-convict wavering between the right and wrong. Shunned by his old friends he goes West, determined to become an honest man. But he falls in with horse thieves and highwaymen. Unknowingly he helps them rob his own father's house. The father, recognizing him, sends him away, but he gets the stolen money and returns it. In so doing he is fatally shot. A story of real life, well presented.

"COPS AND COWBOYS" (Nestor), December 16.—This is something different in the comedy line and works out in an entertaining way. Two young chaps from the East decide that a certain Western town needs a police force. They don uniforms and proceed to act in that capacity, with results that are unsatisfactory to themselves, until they succeed in arresting Peevish Pete, the terror of the countryside. Then, of course, they are real heroes and have their pick of all the girls in the vicinity.

"MOTHER" (Rex), December 19.—Mixed babies bring about the situations here depicted. It is naturally brought out that a young mother nurses her own sick babe and thinks it is another's. The young father becomes jealous of her because the child likes her so well. He, of course, does not know that it is really her child and that his own child is dead. A letter from the former nurse clears up the complications. The picture is well taken throughout and the plot is a novel one, making it quite a desirable offering.

"HIS DAY" (Gem), December 17.—This is a "woodsy" story, with a fine out-of-doors appeal about it. The waterfalls and other scenes are attractive, though static light rays mar the general effect somewhat. The manner in which the wandering hunter teaches the brutal, domineering husband how to treat his wife better, holds the attention. John Adolph, Fern Foster and Frank Powell are the characters who work out the story.

"THE LONG STRIKE" (Imp), December 16.—Here is a splendid film in two reels. The factory strike and subsequent shooting of the superintendent are well pictured. The hero finds himself in prison, accused of the crime, but his wife hires a tug boat to go in pursuit of an ocean liner and bring back the only witness who can prove an alibi for him. The scenes are dramatically good and the suspense well brought about. Wireless messages and special trains are employed freely as the pursuit goes on. From a legal standpoint, however, the arrival of the witness was ill-timed. The impression is conveyed that the jury has already rendered its verdict of guilty and that the witness was allowed to rush dramatically into court and clear the man without a second trial. But the fault is a minor one to the average observer. There is a good view of the famous " Bridge of Sighs" in this film.

"RIGHT SHALL PREVAIL" (Champion), December 16.—In the first scene George and Bob, brothers, watch the dancer, Irene, from a box in a Broadway playhouse. They call upon her later and George insults her. Bob interferes and falls in love with the girl. They are married over the father's objections. George renews his advances and is again repelled. He plans a revenge by having her accused of theft, but in the end makes a confession. The story is interesting and the pictures varied and well chosen. It is a good offering.

"THE NEW FIRE CHIEF" (Imp), December 19.—This is a carefully prepared burlesque on the volunteer fire department of the average small town, but it is only passably amusing. Still, there is an interesting lot of characters, including a sailor, an Irishman, a Jew, etc. The pretty heroine waits vainly at her window to be saved, and is finally obliged to rescue herself, as the department is so slow.

"A PEACH FOR A PRISONER" (Gaumont), Dec. 24.—A beautiful, hand-colored film, telling a very romantic story of French aristocrats, perhaps in Louis XVI days. The backgrounds are certainly appropriate. The prisoner, a young count, has been most romantically trapped by his aunt and kept in a tower until he shall be willing to marry the girl of her choice. His fare is bread and water. It is the girl who every day picks peaches and climbing a ladder to his window, leaves them for the prisoner. He has never seen her, but catching her one early morning, falls in love and elopes with her, much to his aunt's amusement. It is full of lovely scenes and makes a good offering.

"THE CONSEQUENCES" (Victor), December 20.—Based on a marriage for money, this picture with many possibilities and good situations seems to have been written by some one quick to see openings that lead to fresh dramatic situations, but somehow not sure in his development, not able to make any one situation wholly effective to us. What is in the picture might furnish material for three; but the whole of it is not strongly effective. Fritzi Brunette plays, with her usual grace, the girl who is persuaded by her mother to marry for his money a man she dislikes. Owen Moore plays the sweetheart she leaves. All three principals act very well; but his part in the tragic consequences of the match doesn't fit Owen Moore so well as other roles he has carried.

"A MAN" (Powers), December 20.—In Powers' pictures we find a big improvement during the last six months. It obtains all along the line; but is most noticeable in the acting. In this picture we have an entertaining story; but we could wish a better and more worthy medium for its producer and his company. It is a little backwoods love story like many another we have seen; but has a charming heroine, Jean Macpherson, who makes the best of company for people who want to be entertained. The well set-up hero (G. White) acts his part as convincingly and as naturally as does the heroine and as do the two other players who furnish the struggle. The girl's father is J. Mackensie and the rough man he wants her to marry is Mr. Russell.

"JACK IN THE BOX" (Majestic), December 22.—A Christmas phantasy as good as a chapter from Alice in Wonderland. The rich child calls a poor little girl in to spend the night with her. They dream that the toys surrounding the Christmas tree in the room below comes to life, and the dream is nicely worked out. Jack-in-the-Box and his merry companions make a fine company for the holiday screen.

"HOFFMEYER'S LEGACY" (Keystone), December 23.—A legacy of five hundred dollars lead Hoffmeyer and his wife into a series of eccentric situations. They are pursued through the streets in night attire, and are haled into court, where the judge fines them the exact amount of the legacy.

"THE DRUMMER'S VACATION" (Keystone), December 23.—This is on the same reel with the above. It tells of a drummer's experience on a farm. He makes love to every woman in sight, including the farmer's wife. The farmer of course resents this, and brings his shotgun into play. The reel as a whole is fairly amusing.

"THE PROSPECTOR'S DAUGHTER" (Broncho), December 25.—A romantic story of a girl who masquerades as a young man after her father's death. The Western setting is well depicted. The scenes wherein she and her partner strike gold follow naturally. He rescues her from ruffians and discovers she is a woman. Their love comes later. An entertaining film.

"THE LAW OF THE WEST" (Kay-Bee), December 27.—A three-reel film. The extended narrative begins with pioneers crossing the mountains and plains in prairie schooners. The father resents the attentions shown his daughter by two young men. He is killed and a good case of circumstancial evidence is built up against the hero, who is next seen abandoned on the desert, with his hands tied behind him. The pictures in the Indian camp are good, and the problem of the hero, who has become a squawman during his life there, is interesting. But at the close of exciting scenes, he rescues his former love from captivity, his squaw kills herself, and he rides away, with his papoose behind him. The story is coherent and the interest is sustained.

"CLEANLINESS IS NEXT TO GODLINESS, BUT—" (Lux), December 20.—A French comic of the exaggerated type, which appeals so strongly to certain observers and less strongly to others. The shiftless maid and her relatives in tneir efforts to "clean up," flood the whole interior of a fine home. They put ducks in the bathtub and start miniature waterfalls all over the house.

"A NEAR TRAGEDY" (Punch), January 2.—Little Herbert Rice and a small girl indulge in much mischief in this photoplay. They cut up a fine ball gown and spill red ink on the floor, which is mistaken for blood.

"HER MISCHIEVOUS BROTHER" (Punch), January 2.—This comedy on the same reel is more amusing. It reveals the diminutive Herbert Rice in Buster Brown costume, reveling in pranks that create many a smile.

"FIRES OF CONSCIENCE" (Reliance), December 18.—Depicting, in this two-reel production, the way in which a jealous couple interrupt letters between two lovers and bring about an estrangement. The ball room scenes, the marriage of the girl to the scheming count, and the father's loss of fortune in Wall Street, make an interesting first reel. The second is even stronger, showing Bob's efforts to find happiness, and the way in which this was accomplished after five years. His finding of the small boy, the play in the gambling house, and the scenes in the church are all well executed. The photoplay, written by Marion Brooks, proves a very good offering.

"THE LOVE THAT NEVER FADES" (Comet), December 16.—An illustrated poem, in which an old man sits by his fireside dreaming over the days when he loved and lost the girl of his heart. The pictures progress in a leisurely manner and altogether make quite a pleasing offering of a pathetic, human interest kind.

"THE POWER OF THE CROSS" (Nestor), December 20.—This film contains a curious study of a man with a lost identity. A young rector is struck down by a thief. When he recovers his physical health he has become a different man. He steals whatever he can get hold of and is very quarrelsome. As the story progresses, in its Western setting, he makes an attack upon a girl. As he kisses her, her necklace breaks, leaving the gold cross in his hand. The sight of this affects him with such force that it restores his reason. He wires his mother and later goes back to his church. The idea is very well developed and the reel is pictorially good.

"HIS WIFE'S STRATAGEM" (Crystal), Dec. 22.—A sophisticated farce with far less spontaneity in its humor than usual in Crystal pictures. It is also a trifle vulgar in its idea; but it is acted by competent players.

"THE MIXED BOTTLES" (Crystal), Dec. 22.—On the same reel is this neat little farce with a good deal of fun and laughter in it. The scenario is cleverly put together, freshly conceived and even brilliant at times. Competent players sustain the humor of the situation very well and it makes an offering that will be acceptable generally.

"WHO IS THE BOSS" (Powers), Dec. 18.—A well-acted office-life farce in good humor and good taste. There is no doubt about who is the boss; it is not the man who employs the pretty stenographers, but his wife. She catches him making love once too often and takes the job herself. This, as far as outline goes, is old; but it is acted to be fresh and breezy. The wife takes the lead, a harsh, old-maidish kind of character.

"CHRISTMAS TURKEY" (Powers), Dec. 18.—On the same reel is this picture of a colored family. The old man steals a turkey for their dinner. It is of the slightest.

"THE NEW FIRE CHIEF" (Imp), Dec. 19.—A new presentation of an old farcical situation by new players in a fairly fresh way. For instance, the new village fire company buys its uniforms at "a fire sale." It is also a "union company" and can't work after five o'clock; not a stroke after the clock strikes, etc. There are laughs in it; but it is not a masterpiece.

"WHEN AN OLD MAID GETS BUSY" (Eclair), Dec. 17.—A satirical farce, with Mrs. Stewart in the leading role, and one that is very well acted throughout. The old maid gets rich, and in her more or less frantic efforts to get married manages to complicate two love affairs. It gives amusement, but the large number of characters and the fact that we don't always know who is who, obscures the thread of the story and at times keeps the spectator guessing.

"INDIAN DANCES AND PASTIMES" (Bison), Dec. 21.—An extremely valuable picture mostly of ceremonial dances of Pueblo Indians. In our own vaudeville sketches skillful dancing is always acceptable. Some of the most interesting dancing we have ever seen is in this picture. It would stand among the best of offerings on that count alone. That "Eagle Dance," for instance, is something worth seeing and there are a half dozen others almost as good. Besides, it is very instructive. We commend it most highly.

"SEA ANEMONES" (Eclair, Paris), Dec. 22.—An educational picture of the best kind for the ordinary show. The sea anemones are half plant, half animal. They are wonderful things glued to the rock, yet able to send out delicate branches to capture and bring in their prey. These glimpses of them at work seem like the beautiful dreams of some exotic poet. The creatures grow in an underwater forest as marvelous as anything in the "Arabian Nights." The offering is scenic as well as scientific. A very desirable picture.

"AN UNFORESEEN EVENT" (Eclair), Dec. 22.—On the same reel a farcical love story in the costume of the time of Louis XIV. As a photoplay, it doesn't amount to much; but is full of lovely illustrations. It is somewhat sophisticated, not at all spontaneous in its humor.

"LOVE SUBLIME" (Milano), December 21.—A two-reel feature picture giving a very dramatic romance, full of good scenes, that makes a first-class offering. The backgrounds are mostly in and around a palace-like home of wealthy people; they are luxurious and full of the atmosphere of high life. Some of its scenes make lovely pictures. We don't think the title is the best that could have been chosen; it seems stilted, and we could also find fault with some of the leaders on the same score. The story is of a girl engaged to a count who, on her sister's return from college, finds that he has made a mistake. The older sister gives him up to the younger. After the wedding, the young people live very extravagantly and the older sister sacrifices herself in vain trying to save the man from ruining himself. It is a tragic picture without being a harrowing one. Audiences will probably find it entertaining.

"A MILITANT SUFFRAGETTE" (Thanhauser), Dec. 27.—A farce comedy, fresh, lively and funny enough to tickle real laughter out of any normal audience. We don't think that real militant suffragetts will like it wholly, its a bit too sharp for that; but it is good tempered, if it is witty, and was made for the average spectator. If cranks see themselves in it as others see them, so much the better. Marguerite Snow plays, with her usual grace and charm, a society girl. She meets the Chugworths, man and wife. They are English militant suffragetts, whom it would be fun to meet anywhere. These two players are clever enough to keep from burlesquing the cranks too much and they make them seem like real people. The outcome of this meeting is very laughable, perhaps most because it is humanly probable, but it is acted naturally by all in the cast. James Cruze plays the heroine's fiance. It's a real comedy, worked out with a good deal of brilliance and will make a first class offering.

"BRINGING A HUSBAND TO TIME" (Comet).—The young husband is too fond of club-evenings and is neglecting his wife, so sister-in-law and wifey, the former in man's cloths, frame up a flirtation to make him jealous. One of grandma's love letters, presumably undated, helps. We cannot call the story wholly fresh, but at least by the principals, it is fairly acted and there is a smoothness in its development and there is in its scenes enough artistic feeling to make it fair entertainment.

"HEY RUBE!" (Comet).—A rural love story in comedy vein. Two swains are in love with the pretty daughter of a farmer and the picture exists for the laughable vicissitudes of their courting. It has a good scenario behind it; but it fails to convince laughter from the audience very often, chiefly because it is not naturally acted.

"DANISH HUSSAR'S (Great Northern), Dec. 21.—A good picture of fast riding over a rough country and of cavalry passing in review. It is very fairly photographed.

"A CHRISTMAS GIFT" (Great Northern), Dec. 21.—The husband has hidden his wife's Christmas surprise in one of his old coats which she has sold to a second hand man. On Christmas eve, there's a very interesting chase for it. It is amusing; and its scenes are very good. We could have stood more of these glimpses of how people in Denmark celebrate Christmas. The two on this split reel make a good offering.

"GAUMONT WEEKLY NO. 41" (Dec. 18).—The gathering of the governors at Norfolk, Va., gives to the topical this week some extremely interesting portraits. People in the different states will be glad to see their chief executive. The million-dollar fire in the Standard Oil Company's plant in Bayone is another item, and among other good things, there are the usual fashion plate, the weekly cartoon, an exciting cross-country gallop in France, and a hydro-aeroplane in action.

"THE REPORTER" (Thanhouser), Dec. 22.—A naturally presented picture of sentiment, with Christmas atmosphere. It will make a good offering in the holiday season. The name describes it only in a roundabout way and doesn't seem fortunate. The story's hero, a reformer in politics, has been accused and convicted of "padding the registration lists," but on procured evidence and on a frame-up, made by the ring leader's heeler, William Russell. He is sent to prison and the story works out to his coming home, a cleared and rehabiliated man, on Christmas eve. In a convincing way, the heeler's conscience has been touched and he shows up his former ring leader in order to set free the innocent man. Marguerite Snow and the Thanhouser Kidlet play the family to whom the father comes home on Christmas. There are many good scenes, some showing the politicians at work, one or two in a big department store and, scattered through the picture, some very lovely ones, showing the reformer's home life. It is a picture that will be liked, for it is well acted throughout and beautifully photographed.

"BEDELIA HAS THE TOOTHACHE" (Reliance), Dec. 25.—Every one will remember Bedelia, who nevertheless doesn't appear often enough to be tiresome. In this offering, which will hardly fail to make laughter from first to last, the big cook is troubled with an aching molar. The dentist gets it out, but has trouble doing it.

"FOOLING THE SPECIALIST" (Reliance), Dec. 25.—A farce that is very light. A comic keeper of a sanitorium plays he is mad to fool a specialist who has called him a quack. It will be found amusing, but it has very little substance.

"ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A BANANA" (Majestic), Dec. 24.—A realistic and seemingly truthful picture of police grafters. It is convincing anyway and may, probably will, make many a spectator get "hot under the collar." The trouble starts when one of our cops helps himself to a banana from Tonio's cart. Tonio objects, is arrested, fined, loses his stock which is left unguarded and becomes the spoil of street boys. The cop is in love with the judge's cook and it works all around in a ring to a happy ending. It is a well made and naturally acted picture and is a good offering.

Kinemacolor

"THE BALKAN WAR" (Kinemacolor).—There are many scenes of events in the theater of war. Most of the views are not of marching troops. They are of the side of war which is usually neglected by the layman and forgotten by him—the supplying of the troops. Many pictures are shown of troop trains; also of artillery being hauled by oxen. Turkish prisoners do not seem particularly downcast. Certainly they enjoyed having their pictures taken. All very interesting.

"A CHRISTMAS SPIRIT" (Kinemacolor).—A Christmas drama prettily told.

THANHOUSER ACTIVITIES.

The Thanhouser road companies are off—or going! The California stock organization left New York for Los Angeles, Sunday, December 15th. The principals were Flo La Badie, Jean Darnell, Wm. Russell, Wm. Garwood, Fred Vroom and Riley Chamberlain, under the direction of Lucius Henderson.

Thursday, January 2nd, the Middle Western company go, directed by T. N. Heffron, and headed by Harry Benham, Ethyle Cooke Benham, Mignon Anderson, Leland Benham and Frank Urson. Their first stop is Chicago. William Zollinger is the cameraman, while Arthur Cadwell is the operator for the California crowd.

This will leave as principals in the home (New Rochelle) stock company, Marguerite Snow, James Cruze, David Thompson, Eugene Moore, Justus D. Barnes, Victory Bateman, Lila Chester, The Thanhouser Kid and Kidlet, under Lawrence Marston's direction. This organization is now producing the historical story of Mrs. Charlotte M. Yonge, "The Dove in the Eagle's Nest." They are making it in two reels, for release on Tuesday, January 28th.

The New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor announces that in co-operation with C. J. Hite they have produced a Thanhouser film entitled "The Other Half," which, it is thought, will help to reduce the number of street beggars and point out the evil effects of indiscriminate almsgiving. The association feels that through motion pictures it can emphasize the fact that helping the other half to help themselves will bring happiness to many persons who seem to be headed for the prison or the almshouse.

AMERICAN COMPLETES SECOND OF CALAMITY ANNE PICTURES.

"Calamity Anne's Inheritance" is the title of the second film on the subject, to be released January 11th by the American Film Mfg. Co., of that delightfully erratic woman of the hills. "Calamity Anne's Ward" was the first of the series, and the instant success that greeted this Western comedy assures a series of really funny subjects, centering around her.

"Calamity Anne" beautifully typifies that ancient woman of the rough mining camps, rough, coarse, cussing, smoking woman, more man than woman, but hiding beneath the uninviting exterior a heart full of warmth and kindness. Calamity Anne was a familiar figure in every camp during the '49 days of California, and the picture given here is as careful a photograph as painstaking research would permit.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON

Mortimer Film Cleaner.

PURSUING the policy of this department in describing appliances pertaining to projection, where the article is furnished by the manufacturer for inspection, we present to our readers the Mortimer Film Cleaner. We must, in the first place, compliment the manufacturer of this little device on the excellence of its mechanical construction. Everything about it shows good workmanship, and that is something we do not always find these days—in fact, it is something which is all too often lacking. In the picture, 1 is the body of the cleaner, its base extending to and supporting brush holder 6; 2 is the top of the cleaner, on the upper surface of which is a square of glass, set into the wood, for convenience in patching film. The top is hinged to the bottom, and when in operation is closed down, being held in that position by latch 3, which engages with catch 4 on the top piece. 8-8 are pieces of soft felt, stretched tightly and held in place by swinging clamps 5-5-5-5, one of which is open in the illustration, thus releasing one end of the upper strip of felt. 6 is a metal standard, holding two brushes, between which the film first passes before entering the cleaner proper.

These brushes are held in place by wing nuts 7-7. In operation the film cleaner is placed between the two rewinding reels. The film is passed between the brushes and laid on the top of lower felt 8. Top piece 2 is then closed down and fastened by latch 3, thus clamping the film between two pieces of felt with just enough pressure to cause the film to wind on the reel tightly as it is rewound, but not with sufficient pressure to make rewinding laborious. As the film passes between the felts it is cleansed of all the dust and dirt which can be removed with that kind of process, and the tight rewinding of the reel will make the process of "pulling down" unnecessary, thus reducing the damage to the film. I can give to this little device my hearty recommendation. Within the limits of such a machine it is effective. I believe that by adding some carefully prepared cleansing compound, such as was recently published in this department, films could be very thoroughly cleaned with the Mortimer cleaner. The address of its maker will be found in our advertising columns.

Various Ideas.

Mr. B. W. Sanders, Winfield, Iowa, writes thusly:

> In your answer to Winfield, Iowa, September 28th issue, you say that 25 amperes is hardly sufficient to get good results. I am operator at this theater now, and am using 15 amperes at the arc, projecting a 12-foot picture at 50 feet, and get good results. On some pictures I have too much light. What is the matter?

In the first place, Winfield, if you are using an ordinary screen, such as cloth, plaster or even aluminum, and are getting "too much light" on a 12-foot picture with 15 amperes of current, you certainly are a wonder. I have never seen that particular trick done yet. Assuming your shutter to cut 50 per cent. of the light, you would only have 7½ effective amperes to illuminate 108 square feet of surface. Your ideas of too much light and my ideas of too much light are evidently at wide variance. You might get a very fair illumination if you are using a mirror screen with a satin finish, and your picture is a small one—not otherwise, I think.

Information Wanted.

Marinna, Ark., inquires:

> Would you kindly inform me as to where I can secure literature dealing with the history of the moving picture as an invention?

There is no such work published that we know of. There would be small demand for a book of that kind. There have been brief magazine articles on the evolution of motion photography, notably in the Scientific American during 1907. There are a number of court decisions which you might get on track of by writing to Messrs. Kenyon & Kenyon, attorneys, 49 Wall Street, New York. Most moving picture men are more interested in the present and future of the business than they are in the past. There are so many claimants for the inventive honors that their song has become monotonous.

Information Wanted.

Mr. F. F. Greene, 1752 West 45th Street, Los Angeles, Cal., writes:

> Upon opening a stereopticon slide recently, found the coloring was a sort of transparent enamel, applied to the cover glass, not on the emulsion glass, as is ordinarily the case. Can get no information as to what this coloring is, or where it may be had. Can you advise me?

I cannot. If any brother knows, let him please communicate with Friend Greene; also send the information to the department.

Threading In Frame.

Chicago contributes the following:

> On page 880, November 30th issue, is set forth a method of threading in frame, which, while very good, does not induce me to change from my own way. Before starting the show I cut the very first title of the film exactly along the dividing line and cement in an inch or so of transparent leader, unless, of course, it is already in that condition. When I thread the machine I push the framing lever clear down, make the upper loop, allowing enough title to reach well below the aperture from the upper sprocket. I then place the first title picture over the aperture, with the transparent strip as close to the lower edge of opening as it will go, leaving the margin above the lower edge. I lock the film on the intermittent sprocket and, placing my finger in the upper loop, pull the film tight and frame the splice into position with the framing lever. It does not take nearly so long to frame in this way as it does to tell about it. I occasionally find it unnecessary to touch the framing lever at all during the whole evening, after once placing it in the correct position with the first reel. This method is good on any make of machine.

No one could dispute the practicability of your scheme, Chicago, but why go to the bother of making two splices in every reel, when the other method is fairly accurate and is available without any bother whatever. Of course, by your method, once having set the lever, there being no misframes in the film, and using due care in setting your film in the intermittent each time, you might not have to touch it again that evening. I can readily understand that. We thank you cordially for having submitted the idea, which is passed on to our readers for their consideration.

Good Idea.

A lady is a certain town in a certain state, both of which for obvious reasons are suppressed, writes as follows:

> Find enclosed money order for $2.50, for which please send me one of your new handbooks in time to be given as a Christmas present to my husband. He has one of your old books and values it very highly. We are doing a good business. House seats 300; snow-white screen and Power's "6-A" machine, with good, steady, clear projection.

At the risk of being misunderstood, I will say that theater managers could please their operators, while at the same time benefiting themselves, by making their operator a Christmas present of the new book. It would be a good investment, from any and every point of view. The book will positively be ready a week before Christmas, and perhaps sooner. It's only a matter of days now.

Lamp Lubricant.

Mr. N. S. Ward, Royal Theater, Abilene, Texas, writes:

> Have noticed different things suggested, from time to time, as lubricants for screws, rack and other parts of lamp. Have tried some of these, but found none entirely satisfactory. I recently blundered on something that is most excellent for this purpose, and it only costs a nickel. Those who have not tried it will do well to invest 5 cents immediately in a stick of Dixon's No. 691 Cycle Chain graphite, made by Joseph Dixon Crucible Co., Jersey City, N. J. It can be bought at any bicycle store.

We thank you, Neighbor Ward, for passing along the idea. It is the graphite that does the work, and I dare say that Dixon's graphite would do the trick very nicely, indeed. I suppose, of course, you apply the graphite while the lamp is warm.

Lens Trouble.

Redondo Beach, Cal., is puzzled by the following:

> Use Power's "Six" on 110-volt, 50-cycle a. c.; 2-wing shutter; projecting a 13-foot picture at 61 feet; convex screen, with every point of same exactly the same distance, by accurate measurement, from the lens. The trouble: We get an unusually clear, sharp and distinct picture, except a perpendicular strip about two feet wide on the extreme left, this strip extending from top to bottom of screen. The out-of-focus effect is slightly more noticeable at bottom. It cannot be gotten into good focus. It is not out bad—just enough to be noticeable. What is the reason? Use two 7½ condensing lenses; have tried others, with no appreciable change in result; also have tried turning the glass in projection lens one-half around, without result. Projection lens is perfectly square with condensers and in perfect line with the lamp. No obstruction in the path of the light, or any conditions differing from those governing the opposite side of the picture.

Either you have inadvertently misstated something, Redondo, or else I think your trouble can only be due to the lens not being properly centered; that is to say, too far to one side. Loosen the screws holding same and see if you can move the lens a trifle one way or the other sidewise—the whole lens, holding ring and all, I mean. There is one very ppuzzling point, however, and that is that the picture at that point cannot be brought into focus. If you mean by this that it is impossible to focus that section on the screen, regardless of effect of the other part on the screen, then I hand you my goat. You have fairly captured it, and I do not know what is wrong. If, however, this part may be focused by throwing the other part out, then the condition might be due to the lens setting to one side, thus being out of center with the condenser. If it is possible to focus this section of the screen by throwing the other part out, and nothing else helps, then try loosening the aperture plate and blocking out one side slightly with a narrow, heavy strip of paper. If this makes it worse, try blocking out the opposite side. I can suggest nothing further, except that you try another lens.

An Argument.

South Berwick, Me., comes in with the following:

An argument with a friend, an operator, again brings me to the department. He claims if I change my 60-ampere fuse plugs to 90 amperes, I will get a 20 per cent. better light, while I say it will make no difference whatever. I am using a transarc, and the highest I can get is 60 amperes. Can you tell me how a transarc can be overhauled, if it can be done? I think mine is not right, and am afraid I will injure it if I attempt to do anything.

Your friend is wrong, South Berwick. The substitution of 90-ampere fuses would not make any difference in the light, even if the fuses were on the secondary. They are, or should be, however, on the primary, and you are not pulling more than 30 amperes from the primary—not that much, in fact. Better send that transarc back to the factory. The manufacturer is the only one competent to repair it properly, I think—that is, assuming there is something wrong with its windings.

Glass Ports.

New York City writes:

Have been operating in one theater in New York City for more than two years. Am amused at some of the foolish questions asked and the way you roast them for it. But there are, nevertheless, some who use good judgment in asking questions and answering others. The one thing I am particularly interested in is glass covered lookout ports. There is no ordinary glass perfect enough to see through and get a good clear cut focus, even though its surface does not reflect. The way I fixed my lookout, more than a year and a half ago, was to cut a piece of glass two inches wider than and just as high as the hole itself. I then placed an L-shaped screw, such as the small brass window rods are attached to, one inch from the edge of the hole, three inches from the top on each side, and one at the bottom in the center about one inch, or a little more, below the hole, to suit your taste. This leaves an open space across the top part of your lookout, through which you can keep your eye on the picture with nothing between you and the screen, but at the same time have the protection you are after with a chance to keep your focus sharp. I hope this idea will start the glass port business in the right direction. I am sending you a sample of a new reel hub and spring for you to test and give your candid opinion concerning the same, as I am its inventor and patentee. I have placed it with the Stern Manufacturing Company, Philadelphia, on a royalty basis. You will do me a great favor if you can recommend it as being a good device.

I am not exactly prepared to either affirm or dispute the brother's contention that focus cannot be kept absolutely sharp when looking through ordinary glass. I am, however, rather inclined to believe he is correct. His idea seems to be to cover all the port except an inch or two at the top of the port with glass. It seems a better scheme than this would be to set a sheet of glass in grooves, with a counterweight so that it could be instantly lowered to examine the focus—provided such a thing is necessary. The reel hub spring is similar to those in common use, except that it is made in the form of a maltese cross, two of the ends being bent down at right angles and fastened into a curve cut into each end of the hub. This is a great improvement over the old method of fastening. I can certainly recommend the spring as being very much better than the ordinary reel spring, but would suggest that its ends be bent up just a little bit more to give the operator a better chance to raise it when slipping the film under. The accompanying picture illustrates the spring.

Lamphouse Ventilation.

Claude Warner, Lowell, Mich., contributes the following:

I read of the trouble a Michigan operator is having with his Motiograph lamphouse. The extra heavy deposit of white, powdery ash is due to insufficient ventilation. I remedied this by cutting out the top of the lamphouse, leaving a hole 2 x 6 inches, which I covered with a ventilating tube, which is shown in the picture.

The white powder then collects in the tube, instead of on the condensers. Have been experimenting with a new mica shutter, and if I get it to work successfully will send pictures. It is to make an a. c. projection as flickerless as d. c.

As you all are aware, this department has long contended that lamphouses do not have sufficient ventilation. I would certainly advise not only the Motiograph manufacturers, but the others as well, to make the whole top of their lamphouse of perforated metal. I know of but one machine on the market with a lamphouse giving, according to my idea, sufficient ventilation. I do not know that the Motiograph is any worse in this respect than the others. That film tank, Brother Wallace, certainly looks like old times. First one I have seen in three or four years. Thought they had all gone out of existence. We welcome you to the department, and trust we shall hear from you again. As to the shutter, will be glad to examine it, but——?

Less Resistance.

Bowmanville, Ont., propounds the following:

Am using 110-volt, 60-cycle a. c., and do not think I am getting sufficient number of amperes. What change must I make in my resistance to increase the current?

In replying to your question I would refer you to pages 113 to 120, inclusive, of the new handbook. Meanwhile, you must cut out one or more of the coils of your rheostat, provided the remaining coils do not heat too much. If the remaining coils show red in a dark room, they are overloaded, and you must cut the others in again, and connect in another rheostat in multiple. I think you had better wait for the new handbook, in which all these things will be explained. It will not be long reaching you now.

Low Current Cost.

Mr. John R. Wade, Star Theater, Trenton, Tenn., discourses as follows:

I have two Standard machines and a Brush electric lighting outfit, the same consisting of a Fairbanks-Morse gas engine, belted to a d. c. generator. I am not using this now, since I figured up the total cost and struck a monthly average upkeep of $26.70, whereas my city current only cost me $16 per month, and the light nearly as good. Have a d. c. generator, 125 volts, 5 k. w., speed 15,000 r. p. m. Would it be possible to belt this to an a. c. motor, current supply being 110 volts, 60 cycle, single phase a. c.? Would want to produce 30 to 35 amperes d. c. After making this connection, would I be obliged to use my field rheostat to hold the pressure down to the arc voltage, or would I need a resistance in a series with the arc? Would my consumption of current (a. c.) at the motor be less than at present? Would light on the screen be as good as it would be with 110 volts through a resistance? If practical to make this connection, what size motor (a. c.) would you advise me to get? For more than a year I ran my machines with an old d. c. fan motor. Am now using an a. c., 1/20 h. p., clutch type Emerson motor, connected to the flywheel with a cord belt. Have always had perfect results from same. Could you advise me where I can get two reels of an educational film for use one night, in conjunction with service furnished by the Mutual Film Corporation of New Orleans? The principal of the public schools here will boost pictures if they have some educational value. My questions may seem elementary to you, but they are vital ones to me. I enclose check for $2.50 for the new handbook.

Your current bill certainly is remarkably low, Brother Wade, particularly if you are using any number of incandescent lamps. Yes, you can readily pull your d. c. generator with an a. c. motor, taking current from the city lines, but will find there will be a considerable loss in conversion—that is to say, in the motor itself. The motor efficiency will probably not exceed 66⅔ per cent., which means that only two-thirds of the actual current taken by the motor will be reproduced as d. c. at the generator terminals; therefore if the generator output is 5,000 watts, then the motor input must be half as much again, or a total of 7,250 watts. You therefore not only do not effect any saving in energy consumed, but actually have a loss, and a large one, too, always assuming you would use the same number of amperes d. c. that you would use a. c. But right here is where you do, in fact, effect a real saving, notwithstanding the apparent loss, since it would not be necessary to use nearly as much d. c. as you would use of a. c. in order to get the same curtain brilliancy. As a matter of fact, you would only need approximately 2/10 ampere d. c. per square foot of screen, whereas 3/10 ampere a. c. would be necessary to get anything like equal illumination. This would mean that with a screen having 200 square feet you would need 60 amperes a. c., as against 40 amperes d. c. With your present generator another question enters, viz.: Your dynamo is a 125-volt machine and, being wound for that pressure, would not operate very satisfactorily at any other, though you might hold it down to 110 with the field rheostat with fairly satisfactory results. I doubt if this would be economical, but in any event you would necessarily have a heavy loss in the resistance which you would have to use to reduce your generator pressure to the arc voltage. This could be not be done with the generator field rheostat. By this I mean that your generator would not operate successfully at 55 volts, and even if it did you could not handle your arc without resistance, except the generator be of a type wound especially for that kind of service. I would suggest one of two things: either exchange your present dynamo for a 70-volt generator, which might mean the rewiring of your house, since the incandescent lamp wattage would remain practically the same per lamp, thus calling for heavier amperage; or else get one of three machines, viz.: Mr. Hallberg's A. C. to D. C. Economizer, the Fort Wayne Electric Works' A. C. to D. C. Compensare, or a Mercury Arc Rectifier. With either one of these two latter machines you would do away with all resistance, thus effecting a considerable saving on your arc circuit, but you would have to operate your incandescents from the city lines. Of course, if you use less than 5 k. w. on the d. c. side you would not have to have too large a motor to pull your present generator. Multiply the number of amperes you purpose to use by 125, the voltage of your present dynamo, and add one-half that product, which will give you the necessary motor size. If your exchange cannot furnish you with educational subjects I would suggest you take the matter up with the nearest branch of the General Film Co. As to flywheel connection, I cannot advise it.

A Demonstration.

Recently in Bilbao, Spain, about fifty children were killed in a panic in a moving picture show. Only one adult was found among the dead. A large circus had been converted into a continuous cinematograph show, and the building was crowded to its utmost capacity, for the most part with women and children. A film ignited, and the operator, who was himself able to extinguish the fire with difficulty, lost his nerve and yelled "Fire!" The blaze itself did no damage, but the resultant panic killed about half a hundred children and one woman. They were trampled to death. This department has for more than two years been pointing out to authorities this one fact which this incident demonstrates, viz.: That there is no danger whatever to an audience through a film fire viewed as a fire. It is not the fire that does the damage, but the resultant panic.

We have been trying to get managers and the authorities to understand that it is quite possible—and, in fact, a very simple matter, indeed—to so construct an operating room and so arrange the shutters covering its openings that, in conjunction with an ample vent flue, the audience would absolutely never know there was a fire in the building, should a reel of film, or half a dozen reels, for that matter, be set ablaze inside the operating room. We are glad to say that we have partially succeeded in accomplishing our object. We have at least gotten the vent flue installed in many houses, and the new handbook will tell how to arrange the shutters in such a way that they will drop within two or three seconds of the time a fire starts. We again say that with proper construction, with a vent flue of ample size, not less than 24 inches in diameter, and with shutters properly suspended from a master cord and rightly arranged, there need never be an alarm of fire in a moving picture theater, or never any damage whatever done, outside of the operating room itself. In this connection we desire to say that asbestos rooms, so popular just now with law-making bodies, are by no means ideal operating rooms. They are far inferior to either hollow tile, gypsum blocks, concrete or brick.

Light Trouble.

Michigan contributes the following wail of woe:

> This is my first appeal, and perhaps, as you help so many, you may also assist me. The light through my stereopticon lens has a yellowish ring all around it. I have tried several lenses, but with the same result. Also through the moving picture lens it shows on the screen where the carbons meet. Current is 110 volts a. c., 133 cycle, using 30 amperes through a rheostat. I quite understand that this is not just the thing, but would it cause this trouble? As regards making announcement slides, I take a bottle of ordinary ink, any color, and mix it with a bottle of mucilage. In this way one can have varied colors cheaply and make some very attractive slides.

You need not expect anything like good results in your moving picture, using 30 amperes of a. c., unless it is a very small picture, indeed. With 30 amperes a. c. the crater is so very small that it is difficult to handle the light. I am of the opinion that your condensing lenses are of the wrong focal length, but I cannot say definitely until you give me the width of your moving picture and of your stereo picture and length of throw. I will then tell you what condensing lenses you ought to use. Possibly you are projecting a relatively small stereo as compared to the moving picture, or vice versa. Operators asking questions of this kind should invariably give the length of the throw and the width of the picture, both stereo and moving picture but the width of the stereo picture should be measured when using an ordinary Standard slide with a mat three inches wide. If the mat is not three inches wide, give it its exact width.

Evansville's Union.

Mr. E. S. Musgrave, Evansville, Ind., contributes the following:

> I send you herewith photograph of our Labor Day turnout. It was our first time to parade, as we only received a charter the 13th of last month. Brother James Chambless, secretary of our union

> Auxiliary No. 10, I. A. T. S. E., is the patentee of the motor-drive attachment recently referred to in the department. He has been sick for perhaps seven weeks, but will soon be out and in shape to fill orders. Have heard no complaints as to the device, but, on the contrary, have heard many words of praise. I was > a crank turner long before the five cent show was thought of, and we of the old days can more thoroughly appreciate the Projection Department than can the operator of today. The boys here are all hungry for the World. My helper is no good at all until he has gone through the paper when it arrives each Monday. I would like to make remarks on a great many of the letters appearing, but am a better operator than writer. We would be glad to hear from union boys in all parts of the country.

We welcome you to the department circle, Brother Musgrave. Those desiring to write can address E. S. Musgrave, Lyric Theater, 707 Main Street, Evansville, Ind. We trust the new auxiliary will meet with all kinds of success. It certainly has the hearty good wishes of this department. And now as to Brother Chambless' motor-drive attachment. I would not like to say too much until I had personally inspected this device, but so far as I can see, from the excellent illustration submitted, it seems to be entirely practical and very excellent, indeed. I think Brother Chambless will do well to submit one of these devices for our inspection at his earliest convenience. The cut shows the device attached to the Power's machine and to the Edison machine. Never mind your lack of ability as a writer, Brother M. Just make yourself clear and I'll do the rest. Glad the Evansville boys like the World.

Shutter Patent.

Alex, Burnside, Weyburn, Sask., Canada, contributes the following interesting letter:

> In a recent issue I note your request for reports on the three-wing inside shutter pattern for the Edison machine. (Presume you mean the one published in October 19th issue.—Ed.) I made an outside shutter for my new Edison from it, enlarging on the pattern, of course, and find that after getting it to the proper size it gives better satisfaction than the two-wing shutter which came with the machine. There is less flicker and more light. Brother May is to be congratulated in contributing the three-wing shutter pattern to the department. I now ask a little space to comment on aluminum screens, as I have had considerable experience with the same and find that the following method is the proper way to make a good one: Aluminum for this purpose should not be mixed with oil or put on with a brush. The oil is, I believe, responsible for the glare, which, together with the flicker, injures the eye and to a great extent spoils the effect. First paint the screen white, to give it a good background. When this is dry put on a coat of white shellac, and just before it is dry, using a good sized sponge, daub the aluminum powder over the surface. This is an easy way to get it spread uniformly, and when the shellac is dry it will not rub or peel off. When finished, project the clear light (without any film in) and paint all the screen outside the light with black. I might add that my throw is 110 feet, with a 16½-foot picture. I use 60 amperes through a Fort Wayne compensarc. Our picture is very clear and distinct. Am glad to say our film exchange puts the films through a cleaner before sending them to us. We find it much easier to get a good light through them after they are cleaned. Regret to say, however, that some of the reels are in pretty bad shape, and it is tough for the operator to be bothered quite often with what is known as a "bum reel." By this I mean reels with screws out, or part way out, or the spring gone and a nail in its place, or, worse yet, the hub chewed up so that the pawl on the take-up spindle will not hold. Quite recently I had a reel which was bent so badly it caused the film to run on the outside of the reel until the take-up reel stopped. When I opened the magazine door the whole works fell on the floor—a nice thing to happen with a packed house and many waiting outside to get in. Of course, such happenings are always charged up to the operator, but I believe brother operators in this section will quite agree that it is more often due to the above named cause. Such cities in this province as I have had the pleasure of visiting have both good projection and good business. All were playing to packed houses; admission 10 and 15 cents. Since the projection is good, it follows that they must have good operators, and I would like to see the brothers in this part of the country wake up and come into the Projection Department Circle of Good Projection Fans, thereby helping to improve their own work, as well as the work of others, and to elevate projection to a high standard, keeping pace with our other brothers across the line.

I think, Brother Burnside, you are in error about the three-wing shutter giving a greater percentage of light than the Edison two-wing; however, it might give better results otherwise. As to the aluminum screen, I am sorry to say that I cannot recommend your plan for general adoption. You might get very good results, while the very next man who tried it might not be at all satisfied. In fact, I have found so much trouble and dissatisfaction with the home-made aluminum screen proposition that I have ceased to recommend it all. In this connection I would call your attention to the leading article in the December 7th issue of the department. As to the reels, I would recommend you to follow what used to be my own procedure in this matter, viz.: Have a half dozen operating room reels, which are owned by the theater, and are kept in perfect condition. When you get films from the exchange, either rewind them on your own reel when inspecting, or else place your own reel in take-up magazine the first time you run the film, laying the exchange reel aside. The last time you rewind the film, rewind it on to the exchange reel again. The house reels should be painted a bright red, or some other conspicuous color, so that there will be no danger of shipping them back to the exchange by mistake. This procedure would obviate all your trouble and give you perfect reels to work with all the time.

It Didn't Work.

Mr. J. T. Beck, Faribault, Minn., encloses $2.50 for handbook, and writes:

Am a constant reader of the World, and find something helpful in every number, though I have never contributed to the department. Have been operating for three years. I find that Milwaukee is a little off in regard to threading in frame, page 880, November 30th issue; at least it does not work on the Power's "Six" I now have. The films we are getting are in first class condition, and I handle them with the utmost care. If there happens to be a little scratch or a drop of oil we are sure to hear all about it the next day. Not long ago I visited the exchange, and one thing I noticed in particular was the way they cleaned the films. I can always tell when I get films that have been cleaned, as they are covered with lint, and the first time I run them through, the machine is covered with lint and there is a regular border of shrubbery all around the picture. Have I a kick coming or not? Would like to hear from others in this neck of the woods, who are using licensed service, in regard to this. Am now running my machine with a fan motor belted to the flywheel. Do you approve of this, or should I get an attachment for crank shaft? If so, where can I get it?

We welcome you to the department, Faribault. I wish all exchanges were as particular about their films. Much of the damage done to films is due primarily to rank carelessness on the part of operators, and still more is chargeable to the speed-maniac managers who demand that a thousand feet of film be run in ten minutes. I would like to see exchanges shut down absolutely on both propositions. If the cleaning process used by your exchange leaves the films covered with lint, they should adopt a different process. You certainly have a legitimate kick coming. I most emphatically do not approve of belting to the Power's "Six" flywheel. You should either get the regular motor-drive attachment from the Nicholas Power Company, No. 90 Gold Street, New York City, or else get the Chambless attachment illustrated elsewhere in this issue.

Water Cooled Condensers.

Mr. R. E. Miller, Brooklyn, N. Y., contributes the following information concerning water-cooled condensers, recently inquired about by a manufacturer, page 981, December 7th issue:

About fifteen years ago Lumiere, Paris, produced, for use with his Cinematograph, a condenser consisting of a spherical flask filled with water. This device was described in the annual of the British Journal of Photography, 1897, '98 or '99, I have forgotten which, thought I think it was '98. Some time after this appeared an English apparatus, called the "Electrical lumiscriptor," was shown at Keith's Boston theater. This latter was a combination of pantograph and magic lantern and had the above named type of condenser. The operator wrote, or drew, on a card, his work being reproduced one-quarter size on a coated glass in the lantern, and was projected in the form of white lines on the screen. The water condenser was to keep the glass from breaking, and served that purpose very well. I have just rounded out sixteen years in the moving picture business, starting December 14th, 1896, and am still learning.

We are very much obliged to Brother Miller for his explanation of the water-cooled condenser. The nearest approach to anything of this kind I had knowledge of was known as the "Allen" or "Alum" (I have forgotten which) cell, which consisted of a glass tank about five inches square by one inch thick, filled with water impregnated with alum. This cell removed the heat from the light ray, but it absorbed too much of the light; therefore its use was discontinued. We do not think, however, that that is what the manufacturer referred to, as it seems to be something in present use, or at least supposed to be in present use.

Threading in Frame—Something New.

Cleveland, Ohio, writes thusly on the threading in frame proposition:

Enclosed find sketch, which will possibly give you an idea of what I am driving at in the following: To thread film in frame, any make of machine, set the edge of the blank leader at the lower edge of the aperture when locking the film on the intermittent sprocket; then close the gate and the picture will always be in frame. Also to focus picture while the other machine is working, thread the machine with the top of the blank leader at the top of the aperture, so that the blank leader covers the aperture opening. If the room is dark the picture from the curtain will reflect upon the blank film, and if this reflection be focused sharply the picture, when projected upon the screen, will be in focus. I would like very much if you would give this a personal trial, as I have not given it out to anyone, though it has proven very satisfactory every time I have tried it. I am sure it will work in every case. We hope you will pay us a visit in the near future, as the members of 160, I. A. T. S. E., myself included, would be very much pleased to have you with us. I trust what I said will be of some assistance to those who make operating their means of livelihood.

Your sketch is excellent, Cleveland, but it is hardly necessary to go to the expense of making a cut for something which can be explained quite clearly without it. Of course, where a blank leader is used, it would be easy to set the top of the leader at the edge of the aperture, or nearly so, lock the film on the intermittent sprocket and frame until the top of the leader came exactly at the lower edge of the aperture, which would, of course, provided the leader be spliced to the film in frame (which is by no means always the case), bring the picture into exact frame. As to the focusing by reflection, you certainly have sprung a new one. I could not personally test this without considerable trouble, whereas thousands of our readers can do so without any bother at all, and can then report. What puzzles me is, how do you see this reflection? If you look in the lens end your head would cut off the reflection. Perhaps, however, you can see it through the leader, though I would not suppose so, if you mean the ordinary opaque white leader. Anyway, the experiment will be quite interesting, but the operating room would have to be pretty dark, or else you would have to shade the aperture when looking at the reflection. I spent a week once in your beautiful little city, and would certainly like to meet with the Cleveland boys, though I do not know when I can do so. I took a week's vacation last summer, and when I got back there was work piled up knee high all around me. It took two weeks of hard work to catch up again.

Light Trouble.

F. M. Bloom, Box 281, Bolivar, Mo., writes as follows:

I have a Power's "Six" machine, 52-foot throw and a 12-foot picture, using one 7¾ and one 6½ condenser, the former next the arc. Current is 110 volts a. c., through a rheostat. Have had good light, but have now run into something I cannot figure out. For the last few nights the picture has flickered. Shutter seems to be in time and everything O. K. Would be glad if you would give me a little help on this, as it is too much for me. The best thing I have found to prevent the condenser breakage is to keep the draught off the lenses after the arc has been shut off. Would be glad to hear from any of the boys who care to write.

You will have to describe that flicker more accurately, Brother Bloom, before I can offer you any help. Have not changed your screen lately, have you? It is also possible that you have had very light films lately, which has caused you to observe the flicker more than usual. Likewise, it is possible that, for some reason or another, you have been running the machine slower than usual, and this would produce a flicker. The shutter being out of time would cause flashes of white up or down from white objects in the film, or from letters in the title. It would have no effect on flicker. In asking questions of this kind the brothers should describe the defect minutely, so that I can form an accurate idea of the effect produced.

Patents Company Files Answer

INDIVIDUAL COMPANIES ALSO REPLY IN GOVERNMENT'S ACTION BROUGHT IN FEDERAL COURT AT PHILADELPHIA—DOCUMENTS ARE VOLUMINOUS.

ISSUE has been joined in the cases brought by the Federal Government against the Motion Picture Patents Company, and the allied defendants and the case is now on the Equity Calendar of the Federal District Court in Philadelphia. Answers were filed in all the cases. While nine separate and distinct defendants were named and served by the government the answers are much alike in all cases, because the matters traversed therein are substantially the same.

The answers go very fully into all the points raised by the contentions of the government. They set forth the conditions of the business as they existed before the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company. The claim is made that the business at that time was in a chaotic condition and that the Patents Company succeeded in bringing order out of chaos and confusion. The Motion Picture Patents Company, it is alleged, developed the production of motion pictures into an interesting and instructive art after the business seemed like to degenerate into a nuisance and a menace to public morals, and that there is $100,000,000 invested in the business.

With the denial that it committed the illegal acts as alleged by the government, it is explained that prior to the organization of the moving picture producers no lawful art or trade in moving pictures existed, and that the respondent could not agree or combine in restraint of trade.

On the other hand, it is asserted that it created whatever lawful trade there is in such pictures, and that the organization of the defendants is necessary, not solely for convenience and profit, but to the very lawful existence of the moving picture art.

A history of the litigation, beginning with the patent infringement suits brought by the Edison company, is given in the answer. According to this explanation there was not a single concern or individual in the United States that was able to do a lawful business before the organization of the defendants. One company owned a patent on film, another a patent on projecting machines and others on cameras, making it impossible for any one to produce and exhibit pictures without infringing upon some part of the numerous patents. The result was that every one was suing every one else, until manufacturers were afraid to make investments and exhibitors hesitated to erect theaters.

This condition caused the importation of foreign films, many of which were indecent and which were used long after they had become worn out. The use of the latter became so prevalent that the medical authorities began to condemn the production of moving pictures, contending that they were injuring the eyes of the public. The patent owners, recognizing the unfavorable conditions, desired to terminate the expensive litigation and get the business under a single and efficient management so that films could be produced successfully as an instructive art.

With this end in view the organization was formed in 1908, and it is averred since that time the defendants have used every effort to regulate the business fairly, going so far as to form a national board of censorship composed of well-known citizens, who receive no salary, who pass upon the productions before they are exhibited to the public.

It is contended that if the suit, which the defendant asserts is an experimental one on the part of the government, is successful the business will again be cast into its former unlawful and infringing condition, and that all lawful competition will be rendered hazardous and that no further exercise of the art can lawfully be had in any of the 10,000 or more theaters in this country.

The answer, in conclusion, denied that the organization is illegal and asks that the bill be dismissed. It is expected that an examiner will be appointed to take testimony in the case.

Nine separate answers have been filed. They are in two general groups, one headed by the Motion Picture Patents Company, the other by the General Film Exchange.

The answer of the Motion Picture Patents Company is the largest and most complete of the series and comprises 175 printed pages, making a bound volume with numerous charts and halftones explanatory of the patents which it controls. It was filed by Attorneys David J. Myers, George R. Willis, Luther M. R. Willis and Frederick R. Williams, solicitors for the respondent, as well as for the Biograph Company, the Armat Moving Picture Company, Jeremiah J. Kennedy and Harry N. Marvin. Besides the answer for the Motion Picture Patents Company these attorneys filed separate answers for each of four other defendants above named.

In the second group of answers those of the General Film Exchange and Thomas A. Edison (Inc.) are the more elaborate. These answers were filed by Caldwell, Messlich & Reed of New York and John G. Johnson, J. H. Caldwell and Charles H. Zug, of counsel. Other well-known lawyers are associated in the case, but their names do not appear on the answers.

Separate answers were filed by this group of attorneys for Thomas A. Edison (Inc.), Frank L. Dyer and William Pelzer; Pathe Freres, Kalem Company. Gaston Melies, J. A. Berst and Samuel Long; also for the Melies Manufacturing Company. All of the answers in both groups are shorter than that of the Motion Picture Patents Company because it was not necessary to duplicate in each separate petition much that is contained in the very elaborate and complete brief of the Motion Picture Patents Company, the first six sections of which are adopted by the other leading defendants as part of their answers.

In each petition, however, the defendant for which it has filed responds with such admissions as were correct in the government's suit and then each defendant sets up for itself the denials of matters in the government's petition which they will challenge in the consideration of the case in the courts. Generally the answers deny the allegations of the government that the defendants are acting, or have acted, in violation of the Sherman Law, and challenge other contentions made by the government's lawyers.

The answer contains the following exhibits:

1—Photograph of a man operating a motion picture camera.
2—A diagram of the interior of such a camera.
3—Diagrams of exposed and unexposed motion picture films.
4—A photograph of a motion picture projecting machine.
5—A diagramatic picture of the working parts of a picture projecting machine.
7—A diagramatic picture of an early Edison camera.
8—A photograph of the Edison kinetoscope.
9—A diagramatic picture of the interior of the Edison kinetoscope.
10—A diagramatic picture of the Latham projecting machine.
11—A similar picture of the Jenkins-Armat projecting machine.
12—A diagramatic picture showing the Latham, Armat and Pross shutters.
13—A diagramatic picture of the Edison, Latham cameras, the Armat projecting machine, the Pross shutter and the modern projecting machine, shown comparatively, with the statement that when the Motion Picture Patents Company was organized "there were no other projecting machines on the market and all infringed the patents of Latham, Armat, and Pross, and used the Edison patented film."
14—A statement of patents litigation arranged chronologically, the supplemental license agreement of January 26, 1909, between the Motion Picture Patents Company and the American Mutoscope and Biograph Company; also the text of the license agreement of June 6, 1912, between the Motion Picture Patents Company and the Biograph Company.

The Motion Picture Patents Company denies that the government correctly names in its suit the ten manufacturers and importers of films, and avers that the Kleine Optical Company "was an importer of films"; also claims that the Motion Picture Patents Company "has no knowledge of the existence of such corporation as the George Melies Manufacturing Company and that George Melies individually is a licensee" of the Motion Picture Patents Company, but not made a party defendant to the suit. The Motion Picture Patents Company admits, as claimed by the government, that all these producers of positive films (American Mutoscope and Biograph Company, Edison Manufacturing Company, Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, Kalem Company, George Kleine, Lubin Manufacturing Company, George Melies, Pathe Freres, Selig Polyscope Company and the Vitagraph Company of America) "were engaged in shipping and distributing their films throughout the United States to rental exchanges," but the Motion Picture Patents Company avers "that such shipment and distribution was of films intended to be used in infringing projecting machines."

The Motion Picture Patents Company denies, as alleged, that the rental exchanges in turn lawfully distributed the films to the thousands of exhibitors, but avers that "such films were intended for use in infringing projecting machines."

The Motion Picture Patents Company also denies that every rental exchange did or could have many customers located in other States than the State in which the rental exchange was situated, because "such customers are limited by distance, whereby shipments of films or reels from a far off exchange could not supply the necessary demand in service of change of subject," and because "that demand between customers and exchange was necessarily limited and cut down, by the daily drop in the value of the film, transportation charges, and loss of revenue on film in transit."

The Motion Picture Patents Company also denied that in 1908 and before keen, lawful competition existed in the motion picture business, but avers on the contrary "that whatever pretended competition did at such time exist was a fraudulent competition between infringers and infringing users," and it is averred that before the organization of the Motion Picture Patents Company in September, 1908, and the date of its license agreements, the defendant manufacturers and importers carried on their business independently, each seemingly competing with all the others in manufacture and disposition of their products and there seemed to be actual and active competition throughout the United States among all these defendants, but that they, in carrying on their business, unlawfully infringed or contributed to infringe the Motion Picture Patents Company patents; that the business and pretended competition carried on by these infringers was unlawfully in violation of the rights conferred by these patents, and that while it may be true that before the licensing by the Edison Manufacturing Company early in 1908 the defendant manufacturers and importers sold their motion pictures or films outright, as did two of the defendants, a manufacturer and an importer, before the organization of the Motion Picture Patents Company and the date of its license agreements, in 1908 and before, to concerns similar to the rental agencies, and these concerns in turn to exhibitors, still all such business and pretended competition, including that of the Edison Manufacturing Company and its licensees, was transferred in plain and distinct violation and infringement of some or all the patents now owned by the Motion Picture Patents Company, and whatever competition there was among these infringers was fraudulent.

"It is immaterial," says the answer of the Motion Picture Patents Company, "whether there was in 1908 or prior any interstate and foreign commerce in films, moving picture cameras, projectors and other appliances relating to the motion picture art, or, as averred, that it was unrestrained; but it is hereby averred that by virtue of the true extent and dominion of the lawful patent monopoly under the Constitution of the United States and the acts of Congress pursuant thereto all manufacturers and users of articles within that dominion may be lawfully licensed and restricted for the particular and peculiar commerce within that sphere and dominion."

It is admitted that rental exchanges leased but did not sell films to exhibitors.

It is denied that the defendants determined to destroy competition, but on the contrary it is averred they have established and now maintain competition among them; and a competition fairly regulated for the purpose of producing by each manufacturer or importer improved quality of pictures, and the maximum return of income to each manufacturer or importer is only limited by the ability of each to supply the demand from exhibitors for the product of each, depending on the quality of each.

It is averred that this respondent fixed and adopted lawfully a minimum price for leasing by the defendants, its licensees, which has never been materially changed, and lawfully had the right to fix such a minimum price for the purpose of benefiting the public, in this by preventing its licensees from putting on the market cheap films or inferior quality or cheap and inferior motion pictures, but in no agreements or transactions between any of the defendants is there or can there be found any limitation or restriction destructive of just or proper competition either in quality or quantity of films or machines or appliances or apparatus, and on the contrary the motive for lawfully licensing said defendants was to end the long continued litigation between patentees of devices so closely interrelated and materially necessary each to the other to produce a perfect camera film, motion picture and projecting machine and so necessary that no one patentee could manufacture either an ideally or commercially perfect camera, film, motion picture, projecting machine without in some material degree infringing upon and hence conflicting with the lawful rights of other patentees, and no patentee could compete with any other since he needed a patented device of the other to help him to construct the very article or machine which he himself desired to use in competition with the other.

It is averred that "infringement" cannot by rule of law be twisted or transposed to spell "competition."

It may be months before the cases will be reached for trial, as the calendar of the Court in which they were brought is somewhat congested. Whatever the decision in the District Court may be, it is morally certain that there will be an appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals. In view of the very important questions involved it is altogether probable that the Supreme Court of the United States will be appealed to as the court of last resort.

JENKINS' LOOSE-PIN FILM RACK.

C. Francis Jenkins, widely known as an inventor of moving picture devices, is offering a new film rack of ingenious construction and considerable merit.

In handling film the drum, the rectangular frame and the pin-rack have been in use for some time. Notwithstanding the difficulty of putting the film on the pin-rack, that device is widely used because less tank space is required. Mr. Jenkins' device overcomes the objections to the pin-rack.

The pins normally lie down along the length of the cross-arms, with the exception of the inner pin of each arm, which stands up about half way. Upon one of these pins the looped end of the film is slipped. Then with the roll of film held in one hand, the rack is rapidly rotated by the other hand. This causes the film to lie against the semi-reclining pins, each of which thereupon instantly comes up into a vertical position. The short extension at the bottom of the pin sets up the next pin half-way, each in succession throughout the entire series, the film catching thereon in turn, until the whole of the film is wound on. The result is that the rack can be turned just as fast as may be desired. One hundred feet of film can be laid on these pins in ten to twelve seconds, and two hundred feet in somewhat less than twice as long.

In taking off the wet film, after development, the end of the film is attached to the drying reel and the motor started. By hand the film is guided onto the rotating drying reel, and the film comes off without being marred in the least.

The use of the new pin-racks permits fresh solution with every negative developed, which, obviously, insures the very best photographic quality in the resultant negative.

The racks are also particularly desirable in the tinting of film, for but a small quantity of each solution is required, and therefore a great many colors can be assembled in a limited space.

I. W. McMAHAN'S MOTHER DIES.

Mrs. Mary J. McMahan, mother of I. W. McMahan, of McMahan & Jackson, Cincinnati, died at her home in Aurora, Ind., at 12:30 P.M., Tuesday, December 3rd, 1912, of apoplexy, aged 82. She leaves five children—two daughters and three sons.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

EVEN at this late day, after all that has been accomplished in the uplift and progress of the moving picture, the Rev. Frank S. Rowland, D. D., of the Cass Avenue Methodist Church, Detroit, allies the moving picture theater with cheap dance halls and low theaters, and their immoral surroundings. During the delivery of a recent practical sermon on the topic, "Are Our Boys and Girls Safe?" Dr. Rowland indulged in the following statements:

"Huge dance halls are opened to which hundreds of young people are attracted and admitted for a dime or a nickel. In these pleasure houses lurks the procuress and the immoral leech, who are waiting their opportunity to lead astray the innocent youth. Scattered throughout our cities and villages are the moving picture show and the low theater, which are undermining the characters of our boys and girls and preparing them, if not to join the criminal classes, to make their lives by and by a menace to the highest and best citizenship. On almost any pleasant evening we can see multitudes of our youth walking up and down our principal streets with no places open save these brilliantly lighted and attractive places of amusement.

"Not long ago a boy of 14 was found to be spending $3.75 a week for moving picture shows. An eminent alienist of Chicago states that he has a number of patients among neurotic children whose emotional natures have been so overwrought by the crude appeal to which they have been so constantly subjected in these picture shows that they have become victims of hallucinations and mental disorders. Jane Addams tells of three boys, aged 9, 11 and 13, who had recently seen depicted the adventures of frontier life in a moving picture show, including the holding up of a stage coach and the lassoing of the driver, spending weeks in planning to lasso, murder and rob a neighborhood milkman, who started on his route at 4 o'clock in the morning.

"They made their headquarters in a barn, and saved enough money to buy a revolver, adopting as their slogan, "Dead Men Tell No Tales." One spring morning the conspirators, with their faces covered with black cloth, lay 'in ambush' for the milkman. Fortunately for him, as the lasso was thrown, the horse shied, and, although the shot was appropriately fired, the milkman's life was saved. Such a direct influence of the moving picture show is by no means rare, even among older boys."

I wish that the reverend gentlman had given the name of the "eminent Chicago alienist" referred to, so that I could have secured his personal opinion on the effect of moving pictures on normal children as well as on neurotic patients. We know that some pictures are exciting, and are willing to confess that "neurotic" children may be injured thereby. Is that the fault of the pictures or of the parents of such children, who permit them to attend? What one does strongly object to is the fact that the reverend gentleman makes a wholesale condemnation of moving pictures because they affect abnormal children injuriously; and that, either willfully or by oversight, he is silent as to their effect on healthy, normal children. The latter class, thank Heaven for the future of our common country, are in the vast majority.

With regard to the attitude of Jane Addams towards moving pictures, we don't need the aid of Dr. Rowland to enlighten us. We know that this noble woman has taken a stand for moving pictures, and that she has declared from her experience that when there are plenty of play grounds and moving picture presentations, there is, as a sequence, a small percentage of moral delinquency.

The reverend gentleman betrays an eagerness to arouse discrimination against moving pictures generally by citing the case of the neurotic boys, aged 9, 11 and 13 years. It really inclines one to laugh, and laugh honestly, at the seriousness with which Dr. Rowland describes their attempt at a hold-up. Think of any of those boys being able to throw a lasso and catch that milkman! We challenge Dr. Rowland to learn to throw a lasso successfully in three weeks or in three months, if he relies on his own efforts, and does not receive instruction from a professional. And that popgun, which the reverend gentleman magnifies into a death-dealing engine of destruction! He should have given his hearers its real caliber to increase the sensation caused by his remarks!

Now let us find out how other prominent Michiganders look on moving pictures, men who are actively interested in civic and social betterment.

At Ypsilanti, the State Normal School has installed a projecting machine, and educational films are now being shown. The school directors of Crosse Isle have installed a picture machine, and have been exhibiting educational films for the past three months. The Board of Education, Grand Rapids, has installed two machines, and educational films are being presented regularly. Mr. Mills, superintendent of recreation in Grand Rapids, is a great believer in the future possibilities of moving pictures. The Rev. Father Krakouski, one of the leading Polish Catholic clergymen of the west, has been showing films in his church, in Grand Rapids, for several months past.

John McDonald, superintendent of Detroit's famous House of Correction, the only institution of its kind which is self-supporting, installed a picture machine for the inmates about six months ago, and pictures are presented at regular intervals. Superintendent McDonald considers these exhbitions among the best aids at his disposal for the uplift and betterment of the inmates.

In the near future, the Board of Education of Detroit will install moving picture machines in the public schools, and only the lack of necessary funds prevented this being done some time ago. Many churches in Detroit and throughout Michigan are at present using pictures for entertainment and educational purposes. Several of the prominent churches on Woodward Avenue, the fashionable section of Detroit, have considered the installation of machines and have appointed committees to attend to the matter.

Edwin S. Booth, owner and general manager of the Detroit News, Grand Rapids Press, and newspapers in Muskegon and Saginaw, has furnished the auditorium of the press hall at Grand Rapids with complete equipment, and runs moving pictures every Sunday for the boys in his employ. Mr. Booth is considered by all who know him as a leader in civic and social betterment.

The City of Detroit can boast of having Roy A. Baker, a well known playwright, connected with the Detroit police department, as police censor. Every film shown in Detroit must pass the inspection of Mr. Baker, who has the reputation of being able, strict and fair.

Surely it will not be considered irreverent to use that famous passage of Scripture, which refers to Elisha when he was encompassed by enemies, and apply it in this case to the moving picture: "And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and lo! the mountain was filled with chariots and horses of fire round about Elisha."

The Passing of Harry Cashman.

Big, brave, physically rugged, talented Harry Cashman has passed away. Go where you will among his acquaintances and friends in Chicago, you will find but one common lament, that he has passed all too soon. Not yet in his prime, and with a promising future as a comedian and character actor in the production of moving pictures, aside from his genial and lovable qualities as man and friend, his sudden taking-off comes with a shock both sentimentally and artistically to those who knew him intimately, as well as to the great public who knew him only by his work before the camera, in Essanay productions.

For myself, I shall always remember him best in his chosen work of after days, by his dignified, reverent, finished work as the clergyman in "Sunshine." In that fine character, it seems to me, he revealed not only true art, but his own innate sympathy with human frailty and the heavy burden often imposed on the weak by the inscrutable dictates of fortune. His big heart and gentle manners were always on the side of the oppressed. As one looked on his peaceful face in the coffin, there was consolation, in the thought that "life's fitful fever over, he sleeps well."

It was with the deepest regret that all connected with the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, from President George K. Spoor, down to the humblest worker at the plant, learned of Mr. Cashman's death at the Alexian Brothers' Hospital, this city, on Saturday morning, December 12th. He had been troubled with a slight attack of pneumonia for several days previous to entering the hospital, and had treated it lightly. He finally decided to take a rest at the French Lick Springs, but the disease had gotten such firm hold on his constitution that it was deemed best to take him to the institution mentioned. He was an inmate less than three days when he expired.

Mr. Cashman's experiences on the stage, before joining the Essanay forces, were long and varied. His work had chiefly to do with light opera. For several seasons he was associated with the Tivoli Opera Company, of San Francisco, where he established a fine reputation in comedy roles. Following this he was a prominent member of companies managed by T. Daniel Frawley, James O'Neill and Edythe Chapman. For two years he starred in Charles Hopper's "Chimmy Fadden," and afterward worked in stock at Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. Cashman was a member of Essanay's Eastern Stock Company for about two years. During that time he appeared in many striking comedy and character parts, in which he will, doubtless, be remembered by a wide circle of admirers for years to come.

The funeral was held at the home of his sister, 4356 Kenmore Avenue, this city, on Monday, December 16th, and his remains were interred at Graceland Cemetery. A large gathering of friends and acquaintances was in attendance, among the number being many members of the Essanay and Selig forces. The beautiful floral emblems were conveyed to the cemetery in a large automobile, used solely for that purpose.

Kaiser Wilhelm a Moving Picture Fan.

A recent cable despatch from Berlin to the Chicago Tribune states that Berlin's finest and newest cinematograph playhouse, the Nollendorf Theater, will soon open its doors. It is the creation and property of two Americans, Messrs. Goldsell and Kinsella. The building, which is like a Greek temple, is architecturally one of the most striking structures in the Kaiser's capital, and does much to beautify the big Nollendorf plaza on which it stands.

The new theater contains a feature which is an absolute novelty in German motion picture houses—it doesn't require to be darkened while the films are being shown. Its domed roof is also an innovation, as it is built to be removed in summer and during other propitious weather, so that at night time the spectators have nothing above them but starlit heavens. The theater which it is hoped to make society's cinematographic Mecca, will hold 700 people.

The Kaiser is the latest recruit to the growing ranks of film show enthusiasts. He has a motion picture theater built in Potsdam palace, and dedicated it Wednesday night, December 11th, with a performance for the benefit of a distinguished company of political guests. A number of the films exhibited showed recent events wherein the Kaiser himself participated, including the royal hunt given in honor of Archduke Franz Ferdinand, of Austria, near Hanover.

The cinematograph industry is so grateful to the Kaiser for his imperial patronage that it has just issued a handsome volume called "The Kaiser on Film," as a Christmas book, which is also intended to commemorate his majesty's silver jubilee of 1913. The book is handsomely gotten up with reproductions of motion pictures, showing the Kaiser amid all his varied activities.

The text discloses the fact that the Kaiser first became interested in motion pictures during one of his recent summer cruises aboard the Hohenzollern to North Cape. He caught the court photographer, who always travels with him, making motion snapshots one day, and when they were reproduced on a screen aboard the yacht, the same night, the Kaiser at once became a confessed "fan," and ever since has posed cheerfully under all sorts of circumstances for men working moving photo cameras.

Better Ventilation for Chicago Theaters Obligatory.

The health department of Chicago has detailed inspectors to investigate ventilation systems in all the theaters of the city. It is known that several small playhouses have been refused licenses temporarily, and it is declared probable that others will be ordered to install new systems for assuring the patrons clean air.

A recent bulletin from the department explains the attitude of Major Young:

"The question of theater ventilation," it states, "becomes doubly acute with the onset of cold weather, because of the larger patronage theaters receive at this season and by reason of the tendency to exclude the cool outdoor air so that patrons may be comfortable.

"The department is determined there shall be better ventilation of the city's playhouses, both large and small. At the present time a number of licenses are being withheld pending the approval of systems of mechanical ventilation. Several new theaters thus affected, and others about to be constructed are awaiting the results of the investigations being made."

Chicago Film Brevities.

F. P. Bloomfield, traveling representative of the Mirror Screen Company, called at THE WORLD office on Tuesday, December 17th. Mr. Bloomfield will spend two or three weeks in the city in the interests of his company.

Miss Ruth Stonehouse, leading lady of Essanay's Eastern Stock Company, is quite popular in Memphis, Tenn., as a photoplay actress. Last week the manager of the Majestic Theater, in that city, offered a prize to any patron giving the name of the lady whose photo appeared on the cover of the week's program. Everybody guessed right. There wasn't a single mistake. The names of the guessers were then put in a box and one slip of paper was drawn, deciding who the lucky person was. The picture was one of Miss Stonehouse, of course.

F. O. Nielsen has sent out 3,000 handsome announcement cards, stating that his new theater, the Stevens, on Evanston Avenue, near Irving Park Boulevard, will be opened Wednesday evening, December 18th. The Stevens seats 300 people. Ten cents admission will be charged for all seats. Mr. Nielsen's big house, the Parkway, on North Clark, near Diversey, is playing to capacity every evening. The Parkway seats 850 people and the admission is ten cents for any seat.

The Thanhouser California Stock Company passed through Chicago, on the way from New York to the coast, on Monday afternoon, December 16th.

Miss Eleanor Blanchard, of Essanay's Eastern Stock Company, has departed for her home in New York, where she will spend the holidays.

The General Poster Company, owned by M. A. Choyinski and Nathan Wolf, will be opened to do business in the Wellington Hotel Building, 241 South Wabash Avenue, on January 1st. This company will handle posters for all licensed films, and is under the auspices of Local No. 2, M. P. E. L., of America.

THE UNIVERSAL IN THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

The Universal is sending a company of sixteen people to the Hawaiian Islands. They will be gone for at least three months and perhaps longer. The company will be in charge of Charles E. Inslee, who was recently Director Otis Turner's leading man. Mr. Inslee will direct all the pictures taken and a better man could hardly be picked, for Mr. Inslee has not only directed motion picture plays before, but has been for many years in the business and has seen all sides of it. He played leads with the Biograph and several other prominent companies.

The company's headquarters will be Honolulu. The pictures will cover an entirely new field, and what an interesting one! Its history abounds in quaint folk lore and interesting legends. The series of pictures will be more appreciated in this country owing to the fact that the Hawaiian or Sandwich Islands comprise a territory of the United States of America.

There is a wealth of material from the industrial standpoint, running from the guano industry to shark fishing. The whole country is tremendously picturesque. Its flora and fauna comprise specimens and species not to be obtained elsewhere, and the fact that it is a volcanic country means that its rugged and lava covered mountains are cut out by picturesque canons and precipitous ravines. In fact, the whole of the islands are built up by an eruptive process from a base some 15,000 feet below sea level and the great volcanic peak, Mauna Kea, the largest in the world, stands 13,823 feet above the sea level, a little higher than Pike's Peak. It measures 75 miles in width at its base. Lava still flows from some of the pit craters and there are several liquid lakes of lava in various parts of the islands.

One can readily understand what a compelling and interesting series of moving pictures can be taken with such settings provided by nature. The pictures will be leased as a series.

DOBBS' PICTURES PULLING AT WEBER'S.

Beverly B. Dobbs' "Atop of the World in Motion," is attracting large and well pleased crowds at Weber's Theater. Tomorrow afternoon the pictures start in on their fourth week. Mr. Dobbs' films have registered a most emphatic hit in New York, and, judging from the attendance the past three weeks, they are scheduled for a long stay on Broadway. It is Mr. Dobbs' intentions to withdraw the films from the market January 15. State right buyers should address Joseph Conoly, Suite 702, 1482 Broadway, New York.

MANY NEW M. P. THEATERS IN NEW YORK STATE.

The indications gathered from new machine sales by J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," point to the opening of many new theaters for motion pictures in Syracuse, Oswego, and neighboring towns in that vicinity. Mr. Hallberg has just shipped two Power's No. 6A and three Standard Hallberg A. C. Economizers to James Kernan, Syracuse, N. Y. Two Simplex machines, with two Hallberg Standard A. C. Economizers to Chas. P. Gilmore, Oswego, N. Y. One 1913 Motiograph to Castle Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., and one Power's No. 6A with Hallberg Standard A. C. Economizer to Stanley Southworth, Canton, N. Y.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

INDIANA STATE CONVENTION.

THE Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League held its annual meeting in Indianapolis on December 10 and 11. There was a big attendance and the future of the organization promises a prosperous career. Every effort has been made to build up the organization since it was established little more than a year ago. Meetings have been held every few weeks in different parts of the State, with the result that a majority of the motion picture men of the State are now affiliated with the association. An even more vigorous campaign for members is to be conducted during the ensuing year.

The officers elected were: Dr. J. M. Rhodes, Indianapolis, president; Sprague Green, Fort Wayne, first vice-president; Philip Skora, Evansville, second vice-president; John Trulock, Indianapolis, third vice-president; H. L. St. Claire, Gary, fourth vice-president; Clifford Cole, Elkhart, fifth vice-president; E. J. Addy, Indianapolis, secretary, and A. C. Zaring, Indianapolis, treasurer. F. J. Rembusch, of Shelbyville and Indianapolis, was elected Indiana vice-president of the national association. He was the first secretary of the State association. Dr. Rhodes, the new president of the State League, is treasurer of the Indianapolis local organization and one of the pioneer motion picture theater men of the city.

A number of matters of importance were taken up during the meeting. There was considerable discussion of the matter of asking the State legislature, which convenes in bi-ennial session next month, to pass a law defining the rights of and regulating motion picture theaters. At the present time there is no law covering the subject and various localities have passed ordinances, many of which are believed to be unjust. One of these is the Indianapolis ordinance regulating the attendance of children under fourteen years old at motion picture theaters.

A resolution was also adopted, opposing the use of tobacco coupons for admission to moving picture theaters. A tobacco concern has proposed that ten coupons from a certain brand of cigarette be accepted in lieu of the usual admission fee. The league put itself on record as being opposed to any such scheme.

It was also concluded that a certain kind of wild west pictures are crude and demoralizing and that members of the league shall not exhibit them. It was also decided that no member of the league shall exhibit the pictures of the wedding of Jack Johnson and a white girl.

The association decided on an assessment of $5 a member for the expense of the legislative committee during the coming session of the legislature. This is to be used in paying the legitimate expenses of the members of the committee.

During the meeting a boom was started for Mr. Rembusch for next president of the national league. He will receive the solid support of the members of the Indiana league. Of about five hundred motion picture theaters in the State, approximately three hundred are identified with the State league, a showing it is believed no other Indiana business organization can make.

A banquet at the Denison Hotel was one of the features of the convention. This was held at noon and was an informal affair, about one hundred and fifty members attending. The attendance at the convention was the largest in the history of the organization.

Another meeting of the Indiana league is to be held in Indianapolis on February 2.

A. C. Zaring, Treasurer.

Dr. J. M. Rhoades, President.

Ed. J. Addy, Secretary.

INDIANA STATE LEAGUE OFFICERS.

CONVENTION OF KANSAS STATE EXHIBITORS.

The Kansas State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America held their first convention at Kansas City, Kan., on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, December 9, 10, and 11, 1912. The convention was called to order at 10 o'clock A. M. at the Electric Theater on Monday. President M. A. Neff addressed the exhibitors and the following officers were elected:

National vice-president, E. Wayne Martin, Hutchinson; president, N. H. Spitzer, Wichita; vice-president, Carl Mensing, Leavenworth; secretary, Geo. McCrum, Kansas City, Kan.; treasurer, Jack Brainard, Mulberry; sargeant-at-arms, Karl Bornschein, Ellsworth.

After completing the organization the exhibitors adjourned for luncheon at the Grand Hotel and also adjourned the meeting until 10 o'clock A. M. Tuesday at the Maze Theater, Kansas City, Mo. President Neff again addressed the meeting and after general discussion of the welfare of the league adjourned until 2:30 P. M., when at that time the Missouri and Kansas exhibitors held a joint meeting at the West 10th Street Theater. This meeting was addressed by President Neff, President G. H. Wiley, of the Missouri State Branch, Carl Mensing, of Leavenworth, and many other exhibitors. The attendance at the joint meeting was 150 exhibitors from both states and the fact that they remained in session from 2:30 until 5:00 o'clock shows how interested they were.

Through the courtesy of manager Bronson, of the Empress Theater, Kansas City, Mo., the exhibitors of both states attended a special performance on Monday evening. On Tuesday evening an elaborate banquet took place at the Sexton Hotel, Kansas City, Mo., and 150 was the attendance. President G. H. Wiley, of Missouri, acted as toastmaster. No stone was left unturned by G. H. Wiley, president of the Missouri State Branch, to make the joint convention of Missouri and Kansas a big success and Mr. Wiley was given a rising vote of thanks for the successful way the convention was handled.

The Kansas State Branch will hold a special meeting at Wichita, Kan., on January 13 and 14, 1913. At this meeting they expect a very large attendance, as Wichita is located in the central part of Kansas and will be of easy access.

Following are the names of the members of the Kansas State League: E. Wayne Martin, Hutchinson; Carl Mensing, Leavenworth; Geo. McCrum, Kansas City; E. J. Grubel, Kansas City; Geo. Grubel, Kansas City; Chris. Wagner, Newton; W. B. Moore, Galina; Jack Brainard, Mulberry; Floyd Schultz, Clay Center; William Meyn, Kansas City; Fred Savage, Great Bend; Karl Bornschein, Ellsworth; N. H. Spitzer, Wichita; J. R. Burford, Wellington; W. H. Willey, Mulberry; Rogers Bros., Wamego; J. H. Blawitz, Kansas City; B. C. Auton, Clyde; L. R. Shannon, Mound City; C. C. McCollister, Wichita; Guy E. White, Beloit; W. W. Maze, Kansas City; H. C. Allphin, Lawrence; T. H. Magruder, Caney; J. C. Elliott, Topeka; C. E. Glamnann, Wellington; E. V. Wagner, Newton; F. L. Wright, Wichita; Mrs. Maud Goudy, Topeka; L. C. Whitebrain, Chapman; E. H. McMauns, Salina; C. C. A. Gringolf, Salina; William Berry, Jr., Wichita; John Plhy, Fort Scott; C. R. Blubaugh, Fort Scott.

SPECIAL MEETING OF THE MISSOURI STATE BRANCH.

The Missouri State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America held a special meeting at Kansas City, Mo., on Tuesday, Dec. 10, 1912. Many matters of importance were discussed and disposed of. F. L. Welch, of Kansas City, was elected secretary for an unfinished term and J. S. Tillman, of St. Louis, was elected treasurer.

The Missouri State Branch were guests of the Kansas State Branch at a joint meeting held Tuesday afternoon and enjoyed the banquet given by the Kansas State Branch in the evening. The second annual convention of Missouri State Branch will be held at Springfield, Mo., on June 7 and 8.

THAT OHIO CONVENTION.

There will be big doings in Ohio on Tuesday, January 21st, and Wednesday, January 22nd, 1913. The Ohio State Branch No. 1, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, will hold their annual convention at Columbus, Ohio. New officers will be elected, committees appointed, etc.

At the same time the Ohio State Convention meets the National Vice-Presidents from thirty-three states will meet in Columbus, The Ohio State Convention will be very interesting. As the State Legislature will be in session and the new governor, Hon. James M. Cox, will then be at the helm, and there are several bills which will affect the members of the State League of Ohio which will be introduced at the coming session of the Legislature, naturally there is a great deal of interest being taken in the coming convention. The attorney general is also very active and at that time will be working in conjunction with Senator Foraker's office and Hon. J. J. Lent's office in developments of legal points which will be left for the courts to decide.

The National Vice-Presidents will have a number of important matters to discuss. M. A. Neff, president of the Ohio State League, who has just returned from an extended and successful trip through the West, was in Columbus in consultation with Attorney General Hogan and also arranging for the State convention.

The meetings will be held at the Southern Hotel. A banquet will conclude the meeting.

MEETING OF NEW JERSEY STATE LEAGUE.

There will be a meeting of the Exhibitors' League of New Jersey at Newark on Monday, January 6th. Members will be notified of the meeting place and the exact time of day in a later issue. This meeting has been called by President Greenwood A. Robinson for the purpose of commencing a systematized effort to secure a legal Sunday opening in New Jersey. This is a matter which concerns every exhibitor in the state, and the only way to accomplish anything big in the way of results is for every exhibitor who can possibly be there, to consider it his duty to attend this meeting.

It is the opinion of President Robinson that the exhibitor should not remain content with negative victories, or victories which amount solely to repulsing the advances of the enemy. He declares that there should be more positive victories among the exhibitors. Merely being on the defensive accomplishes nothing, but leaves the motion picture men exactly where they were, in case they are able to hold their own. What is needed is advances on the part of exhibitors themselves. They should not stand still, but should be aggressive and invade the enemy's camp, and, if possible, rout them. If the exhibitors only knew it, they are stronger than any faction that is at present arrayed against them. But their strength is impotent because of lack of concentration. Agitators against motion pictures are in the minority, but their efforts are well concentrated on one particular object, which they usually gain.

Josh Billings used to say, "The heat of a candle, directly applied, is more uncomfortable than the diffused heat of a blast furnace," and Josh was eminently right. The agitators have had a candle under the exhibitor's chair for a long time, and the exhibitor has certainly squirmed some. The moral is: "Don't squirm." Do something. Let the exhibitors go out and accomplish some positive results instead of being forever satisfied with negative victories.

SUCCESSFUL BALL AT COLUMBUS.

Members of the Exhibitors' League of Columbus, Ohio, recently held a very successful ball at Memorial Hall. The attendance was estimated at 2,500, most of whom came to make a personal acquaintance of a number of moving picture favorites who were in attendance. Among these were Mr. Francis X. Bushman, of the Essanay Company, in whom still further interest centered from the fact that he was at one time a member of the Colonial Theater Stock Company, of Columbus; Arthur Johnson, Miss Lottie Briscoe and Miss Florence Hackett, of the Lubin studio, and George Perilot, of the American Company.

The visiting photoplayers were, of course, the center of attraction throughout the evening and held one continuous and grand reception. Aside from this everybody had a big time and the festivities continued until the small hours. It is estimated that the receipts from the ball exceeded $1,000, and it was generally conceded that the occasion was one of the most enjoyable that had occurred in Columbus in years.

REGULATING LENGTH OF SHOW.

At a recent meeting of the exhibitors of Sandusky, Ohio, the following members were present: John D. Kessler, of the Star Theater; H. E. Higgins, of the Royal; Charles Reark, of the Theatorium; Harry E. Mills, of the Gem. Realizing that they all must work together to uplift the standard of the picture business, they have decided to run two reels for five cents, and all three-reel features or more will be ten cents.

TO ORGANIZE MISSISSIPPI EXHIBITORS.

A convention of the Mississippi Exhibitors will be held in Gulfport during or about the first week in February. The purpose of this convention will be to organize the Mississippi Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and to transact such other business as may properly come before it. President Neff will be present to help organize the league. The exact date of the meeting will be announced later by Mr. Fred Abbley, of Gulfport, Miss., national vice-president for Mississippi.

AN INTERESTING VITAGRAPH BOOKLET.

"How and Where Moving Pictures Are Made by the Vitagraph Company of America," is the title of a booklet just issued. There are twenty-four pages of 9 by 12 inches. S. M. Spedon, manager of the publicity department, is the editor. The booklet contains not only a history of the company, but goes into the details of the making of pictures. There are sketches of the negative department, joining department, printing department, and the studio or theatrical department. In this latter are described the taking of outdoor scenes. Following are articles devoted to the departments of scenery, property, costumes, development, washing and tinting, still pictures, accounting, machinery, carpentering and upholstery, ornaments (statuary, etc.), and ammunition. Sketches are also given of the Vitagraph western studio at Santa Monica, Cal., and the Paris factory. The publicity and scenario departments receive attention, as do also the camera men's department. Descriptions are given of the qualifications for and methods of employing players and of the company's board of censors. The booklet is profusely illustrated, furnishes much interesting information and is a credit to the enterprising company publishing it.

A detective story just filmed by the Majestic, in one reel, under the title "A Clue in the Dust," contains 124 scenes. The action is clean cut and the story excellently told. James Craig as a Sherlock Holmes detective does some very good work.

How I Made "The Star of Bethlehem"

Lawrence Marston, Thanhouser Director, Discusses Points in Dispute—Believes His Version Correct.

I AM asked to give my views on the Biblical motion picture, since I directed the much-discussed "Star of Bethlehem," released by Thanhouser. To begin, let me say that the success of the Biblical motion picture, like the picture of any other nature, depends on the players in it. Then comes Mr. Director. He might be a Biblical student and all that, but after he has extended his gray matter in preparing for the picture, his players must be competent enough to carry those preparations out. Especially trying on the actor is the portrayal of a character that is sacred and hallowed in the minds of all who will witness the film on its exhibition the world over a short time afterward.

Biblical and religious subjects when made into moving pictures must of necessity be treated with reverence. No matter what the producer may think, he must bear in mind that there are millions and millions of people who are sensitive on the subject of religion, and to whom the Bible is in the positive sense of the term, Gospel truth.

In making the production of "The Star of Bethlehem" for the Thanhouser Film Corporation, I had the advice of several theologians, to whom I am indebted for much information and wise counsel. For instance, portraying the prophet Micah, the question arose, "What did Micah look like?" After much consultation, we resolved to adopt the picture of Moses on the mountain as the best characterization in so far as make-up was concerned. Therefore, since I can't take the credit for this picture of Micah to myself, what I am going to say about it may not be construed as egotism. It is the first picture presented to the spectator in "The Star of Bethlehem," and to my thinking it is more beautiful than any conception of the prophet I have ever seen photographed or painted. The same in my opinion holds good of the shepherds and the sheep. They were posed from a famous painting of that incident. The marriage of Mary and Joseph, ending with Joseph putting the right hand of Mary on the door-sill of his house and saying to her: "Thou are mistress therein," is a reproduction of a description of Jewish customs, from an encyclopedia on that subject. The arrival of Mary and Joseph at the inn is a reproduction of a famous painting. All the manger scenes are exact reproductions of famous paintings. The view of Mary at prayer is a reproduction of Raphael's "Madonna."

Moving pictures to me have such wonderful possibilities that when the Thanhouser Film Corporation engaged me to produce "The Star of Bethlehem" I was more than overjoyed, and made up my mind that I would handle this most religious subject in a religious spirit. As a director for the legitimate stage, I have made such productions as "Ben Hur," "Thais," "The Prince of India," and others of like character; but never have I been so impressed with the performance of any play as with these moving pictures of the lives of the characters in "The Star of Bethlehem." There are many admirable things to talk about in "The Star of Bethlehem."

The majesty of Micah, the prophet, on the mountain; his despair when he sees his people within the walls of Jerusalem, defeated by the Assyrians; his appeal to his God and the answer to his prayer in the form of the Angel Gabriel appearing before him and informing him of the coming of the Redeemer, are all so life-like that the heart strings are wrung by his grief, and the mind made to rejoice at his pleasure on hearing the good news. The carnage on the battlefield is so unlike stage representations in its wondrous realism, that, looking on, you really take sides with the combatants. The despair of the Jewish women in ministering to their dead and wounded is another touching incident. From this bustle and carnage, and this commotion, as if by magic you are transported to the peace of the three wise men, reading the prophecy of Micah of the coming of the Redeemer seven hundred years after it was uttered. Their wonder and amazement at what they are reading and their final conviction when they see the star heralding the place where the Redeemer is to be born is so convincing that it is hard to believe you are looking at projected pictures on the screen.

So it goes on all through the play. The film is as nearly perfect as fallible humans can make it. The court of Herod, the pharisees, scribes, the Romans of the court, the cruelties of Herod, all parade themselves before you, not as pictures but as life. Of course the lives of Mary and Joseph are the center of interest. These two beings are treated with such reverence that they really appear to be the characters they are representing. But in many instances the picture departs from the general conception of the characters it depicts. For instance, the Angel Gabriel appears to Mary, to Joseph and to Micah clad in armor. This to my thinking is one of the finest touches of the whole picture. The Jewish people of the period knew nothing of the human spirit of Christianity. They were brought up under the orthodox Hebrew law and customs. Their God was the almighty God, the unforgiving God. The Biblical angel, appearing at the gates of the Garden of Eden, brandished a fiery sword. The Biblical angel appearing to Mary filled her with fear, so that she fled to Judea to her cousin Elizabeth to confide the news to her. The Biblican angel who appeared to Zachariah filled him with fear. The three angels who appeared to Abraham and told him that Sarah would bear a son—at which news Sarah laughed—really filled her with fear, for she denied when questioned by the angels that she had laughed—and so it goes through Jewish Biblical history. Now it stands to reason that either Mary or Joseph, imagining they saw a messenger from the almighty God, would see him as the Messenger of Might who we have accurately depicted.

In assembling our "Star of Bethlehem" characters, the problem of the age of Herod confronted us. Historical fact had it that he was an old man; and had it, too, that he was dead four years before the birth of the Redeemer. Again, in the matter of the wise men the text of Matthew stated that Herod "spoke to the wise men privily"—privately. It is hardly likely that a monarch who feared strangers as Herod did, would have received three of them "privily." And so it is that he who produces a picture on which he must go back into the ages for his facts, must weigh all of them with common sense. The task of the producer of a Biblical story is not an easy one—but it is interesting and gripping by reason of its very difficulties. The extra thought and care one must give to so important an undertaking fills one with a high sense of the magnitude of such a work.

NEW SLIDES.

The slide herewith reproduced is an exact likeness of the new announcement slides for all the licensed film releases, which are being manufactured and sold exclusively by the American Song Slide and Poster Company:

These new slides are interesting the many exhibitors who have ordered them, and Mr. Von Ronkle, owner of the above-menioned company, is pleased over the success which his original film announcement has made.

BOOMING A FEATURE.

Charley Abrams, the hustling manager of the Great Northern Special Feature Film Company, is as busy as the proverbial nailer these days in blazing the trail for his latest feature production, entitled "The Great Ocean Catastrophe, or Peril of Fire." Charley says the picture is a whopper and he has exerted his artistic accomplishments in designing some nifty pictorial matter.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE NEW MAGDALEN" (Imp).

In these two reels Herbert Brenon continues the praiseworthy work he is doing in Imp pictures. In this melodrama he is fortunate in his selection of those who take the principal feminine roles—Vivian Prescott and Jane Fearnley. There is abundant opportunity for strong acting for both of these young women—especially for the latter in the closing scenes. William Shay as Julian Gray, a clergyman, looks the part; also, he acts the part. There is no overdoing of it. He shows the minister as a real human being; his eyes are on the earth and not, as is too frequently the case with the interpreter of the role of the cleric, continually rolling skyward with an expressionless stare. William Dunn plays Horace Holmcroft, war correspondent.

There are several battle scenes—some of them better than others. The one showing the battery of artillery in action, for instance, is excellent. Those showing cavalrymen riding in single file and discharging their pistols in the air are not convincing—especially as their target is not in sight.

The story is easily followed. Mercy Merrick, released from prison, goes to the Rev. Mr. Gray at the mission for assistance. He sends her to the French consul. The latter aids the girl just released from jail by sending her to France as an army nurse. Horace Holmcroft goes to the continent as a war correspondent. His mother in her loneliness writes to Grace Roseberry, an artist struggling in France, to come and live with her. Grace accepts the invitation. On her way she gets caught in the battle lines and takes refuge in a hospital in which Mercy is acting as a nurse. In a burst of confidence Mercy tells Grace of her prison record. Grace is struck by a shell and apparently killed; in fact, one surgeon says she is dead. Mercy takes from the bag of Grace her passport and the letter from Mrs. Holmcroft inviting her to visit her and sets out for the home of the latter. Young Holmcroft, who has met her at the hospital, keeps her company.

Scene from "The New Magdalen" (Imp).

Mrs. Holmcroft receives Mercy with open arms. The young woman wins the affection of Horace, he proposes and is accepted. Grace, at first thought to be dead, recovers through an operation and resumes her journey. When she arrives at Mrs. Holmcroft's she is spurned as an impostor. Grace goes to the Rev. Mr. Gray, who calls on Mrs. Holmcroft. He recognizes Mercy. The girl, however, insists that she is the one she pretends to be. The clergyman is not insistent. Grace again appeals to Mr. Gray. Mercy, suffering the tortures imposed by a guilty conscience, also visits Mr. Gray. Later, in a strong scene, when a policeman is taking from the Holmcroft home the victim of Mercy's pretensions, the impostor breaks down and confesses. Mercy returns to the mission, where the clergyman advises with her and consoles her.

"THE DOCTOR'S BLIND CHILD" (Pathe).

The struggle to answer the call of duty has ever been an engrossing conflict. It forms the basis of a Pathe film which is an elaborate production and a drama of unusual worth. It will be released January 4th.

Dr. William Tilford, a successful surgeon, has for his paramount desire the happiness of his little girl, who is blind. The demand upon his time is so great that he can give her little of his company. To offset this laxity he makes her many presents, the latest a valuable necklace. Upon the scene of this presentation there enters a woman of impoverished appearance with an ill infant in her arms. Her husband, Tony, she explains, because of his drinking, has forced her to seek the physician's aid without hope of paying him. Dr. Tilford provides a remedy for the sickly child and bids the woman pay him if ever she has the money to spare. She leaves his office deeply grateful. Dr. Tilford makes his customary visit to the hospital. During his absence his daughter accidentally overturns a lamp, setting the house afire. She manages to escape and wanders aimlessly down the street. Tony, a little the worse for liquor, meets her. The necklace attracts his attention and he takes it; the child screams; he silences her outcries and carries her to his home to hold her for a ransom.

Scene from "The Doctor's Blind Child" (Pathe).

Dr. Tilford is summoned from the hospital with the information that his home is ablaze. He is frantic upon learning that his daughter is missing and he leads the firemen in the wild search for her.

When Tony reaches home with the captive his wife recognizes the girl. She insists that Tony return the child to her father, and when he refuses, she renders him helpless with a blow, making a weapon of the first thing she finds handy. This done, she proceeds from the house with her protecting arm about the sightless child. Tony makes his way from the house to the street, where he is picked up and hurried to the hospital. Dr. Tilford is notified of the arrival of an emergency patient. Now is the call of duty contrasted with the call of love. Duty wins and he hurries to the hospital. In the course of his operation he finds hidden in the man's shirt his child's necklace. Again the call of duty awaits an answer and again it wins. With hatred gleaming in his eyes the physician watches the patient slowly regaining consciousness. A policeman enters with Tony's wife and the doctor's blind child. With his daughter again in his arms, Dr. Tilford is willing to let the matter drop, and the charge of theft and kidnapping hanging over Tony's head forces him to better provide for his family in the future.

Surely an original idea and sure to satisfy the most discriminating audience; you cannot go wrong if you book it on January 4th.

"The Woman Behind the Man" (Solax)

Review by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS aptly-named picture measured by ordinary standards in ordinary times would scarcely deserve more than passing notice. No pre-eminent merit is claimed for it and it is not described as a "feature." Nevertheless it is well worth a special review and if I were an exhibitor I would run and advertise this reel as a convincing argument against the denunciations of the motion picture as a camera for imitated crimes. The recent hostile wave was largely due to the unwarranted prominence given to portrayals of lurid and melodramatic wickedness.

"The Woman Behind the Man" is without a plot. It merely consists of a series of pictures, showing the contrast between two young wives—one addicted to the dangerous practice of living beyond her means, and the other fond of the domestic hearth and anxious to save and build a promising future for her offspring. It is a sermon against extravagance and discontent, but it is not at all prosy or dull. Indeed, the producer has not neglected the element of humor, and has cleverly shown that playfulness in the bosom of the famiiy which rarely fails to accompany domestic happiness.

The contrast between the home of Mr. Spendthrift and Mr. Frugal is finely and skillfully drawn. On the one hand we see a restless, dissatisfied woman, keen and insatiable in the pursuit of pleasure and openly disloyal to her obligations as a helpmate and companion of the man, whom she had sworn to honor and obey. Her whole soul is dominated by a feverish, unwholesome desire for gayety and enjoyment. The effect of such a wife on the husband is shown with commendable directness. The end of all this defiance of the laws of God and man is pictured with vivid force. The descent down the steps of time from health and youth to old age and misery is brought home to the spectator with telling power.

The young wife with the homely views of her station in life is very cleverly acted by Blanche Cornwall. As the uneasy and pleasure-seeking wife leaves ruin in her wake, the young Mrs. Frugal is an inspiration to her husband. He is encouraged to do his best by the cheerful example and the loving companionship of his wife. The result is natural. His close attention to business brings increase of salary, and as the years go on the little home prospers and becomes larger, but loses none of its old happiness. When the children have arrived there is comfort without luxury. The last scene breathes the very atmosphere of a happy American home, such as we like to think exists by the thousands in every part of the country.

The story of the home will always be interesting. It is not to be believed that the millions who come from their homes to the motion picture theater are not interested in this sort of picture. On the contrary I firmly believe that such pictures go straight to the hearts of the average motion picture audience and are much preferred over sheriffs, gamblers, stories of lynchings, etc. While by no means a masterpiece of cinematography, this picture, by reason of its subject, is heartily to be commended as an example to a half-dozen or so of manufacturers who are increasing their output of melodramatic thrillers and monotonous chases in the Wild West.

It is estimated that more than ten million people patronize the motion picture houses daily in the United States. Just imagine twenty million eyes fixed upon the screens, with the owner of each pair of eyes empowered to prosecute the exhibitor if he "saw a picture calculated to impair the morals of a child!"

"THE REDEMPTION OF WHITE HAWK" (Bison).

THERE is a dramatic scene near the end of the second reel in this Montgomery picture. Dolores, a young woman from the fort, has been captured by a party of Indians, and is restrained in a tent. Her companion, captured with her, is outside tied to a stake. Young White Hawk, a chief, but of white blood, has entered the tent to look over the prisoner. His eye is caught by a crucifix hanging at the girl's neck. It is exactly the same as the one he wears. The two discover just what the audience has seen before—that it is brother and sister. The young Indianized white man orders the officer cut down.

The picture is a typical Bison. There are large fields, fine photography and careful handling of masses. The story opens with an attack by Indians on a "prairie schooner." The father and mother are killed, and a small boy is carried away by the savages. After the marauders have disappeared a little girl crawls out of the wagon and is found by a body of soldiers on the body of her mother. The boy is taken to the Indian camp and adopted by the old chief. The girl, Dolores, is taken to the fort and given into the care of the commander's wife. The boy and the girl each wear a crucifix.

Years later the boy, grown to manhood, leads a party of Indians in an attack on the settlement. But one man escapes. He reaches the fort and gives the alarm. The Indians later are captured. Flower Face, an Indian girl, watches the approaching soldiers, and manages to give a signal to White Hawk. The Indian dashes from the group and jumps to the back of a waiting horse and rides away with the girl.

Lieutenant Lawrence and Dolores leave the fort for a canter. They are waylaid by three Indians and taken into camp. As before told, Dolores meets her brother. Just as Lawrence is cut free the troops appear in sight, sent out to find the officer and the girl. White Hawk rushes out in front and raises his arms. The troops ride into camp. The situation is explained to the commander and White Hawk returns to the fort with the soldiers, after all have smoked the pipe of peace. Here there is a reunion. The adopted Indian refuses, however, to remain in the society of his own kind and returns to Flower Face, who is awaiting him. Lieutenent Lawrence wins Dolores.

"PARSIFAL" (Ambrosio).

The Ambrosio Co., of Turin, has excelled itself in a grand production of "Parsifal," which has been immortalized by the music of Richard Wagner and is known throughout the world as an operatic masterpiece.

The opening of the film shows us the passing of the procession of the Knights of Monsalvata, who go to venerate the St. Graal, the cup in which is kept the holy blood of Christ. They arrive at the temple, where the Bishop appoints Amfortas as guardian of the St. Graal, saying to him: "This cup will make you invincible if you will keep pure."

The magicians Klingsoor and Kondrie suddenly appear and together conspire to make Amfortas sin. The next scene shows the trick of the two magicians and how successful they were in causing Amfortas to sin, which makes him unworthy of the office as guardian of the St. Graal.

Amfortas is punished by God by a mysterious illness and his suffering causes him to confess to the Bishop his fault. They both kneel, praying God to pardon him and appoint a worthy successor. They are rewarded by seeing a vision of Parsifal.

At that moment Parsifal is awakened by an angel and feels that he has been appointed to a great mission, and making way to his home he tells to his old mother of his vision. The next scenes show us Parsifal learning the laws of Knighthood and the use of arms. Then he obtains his father's sword and arms handed to him by his mother.

We again see the two magicians plotting to find the chosen Knight and they, using the magic looking-glass, see a reflection of him in it and then conspire to ruin him as they had Amfortas. After disguising themselves as a knight and his lady, they ride out and meet Parsifal and accompany him to King Arthur's court, where Parsifal meets the notorious Knights of the Round Table. He refuses to join in their orgies.

Scene from "Parsifal" (Ambrosio).

The Bishop of St. Graal, who is in attendance at the court, is mocked by the knights and safely rescued by Parsifal, whom the Bishop sees for the first time and recognizes him as the knight elected by his vision. Together they leave the court and the Bishop relates to Parsifal the mystery of the Holy Graal.

Parsifal is then left alone and the magician Klingsor tries to kill him, but he is disarmed by Parsifal, who makes his way to the Temple. Again the magicians try to cause his ruin and taking the short path, they intercept him and direct him wrongly. They then ambush him and entice him to their castle, where they make fruitless attempts to cause him to sin, but he escapes again and makes his way to the Temple.

It is the solemn day of prayers and Amfortas, who is stricken by God, tries to re-enact the miracle, but his prayers are not answered. Parsifal's timely arrival to Monsalvato is welcomed by the Bishop and by the knights, who thought him lost. He takes his place as guardian of the Holy Graal and performs the miracle, conferring the Heavenly Blessing.

A COMING SOLAX OF UNUSUAL INTEREST.

The Solax Company are preparing a fine two-reel feature, to be called "The Tiger," in which wild animals—a tiger, elephant and lion play more or less prominent parts. There was quite a good deal of excitement in the Solax studio, when the pictures with the tiger were rehearsed. The young girl, who plays a prominent part in the story, showed great courage for one of her sex and years in entering the cage of the beast and making friendly overtures to the king of the jungle. The overtures were well received by the tiger and it was not long before the magnificent striped cat allowed the little actress to do pretty well what she pleased. The production is directed by Mr. Warren, who is taking extraordinary pains with the picture.

"In the Grip of the Vampire" (Gaumont)

A PICTURE with a scene in which novel use is made of the motion picture camera. The heroine of the story has been left an idiot by the effects of a drug administered to her by her guardian, the "vampire," who will inherit if she dies. This man had left her for dead in a lonely spot on the seashore; but she was rescued by her lover, whom the villain managed to wound by a shot fired from the distance. No one knows who the culprit is. The girl's lover suspects the guardian; but there is no way of proving it, for the girl is still insane and can't speak. At this point, the help of a specialist is sought and the up-to-date scientist orders that the scene of the girl's rescue be enacted before a cinematograph and the reel run off in the mad girl's presence. She recovers her reason—a finely acted and deeply stirring scene.

The producer of this three-reel feature really deserves much praise, more than he will be likely to get from the average spectator, who won't understand it clearly nor find it very dramatic, except in parts. We have never seen a picture so good as this, so burdened by inadequate and befogging sub-titles. Take this, which is from one "leader."

Scene from "In the Grip of the Vampire" (Gaumont).

"The vibrations of cinematographic images transmitted by means of an optic nerve from the retina of the eye to the cells of the brain cause a state of hypnotism which lends itself admirably to suggestion." It is decided to try the experiment on "the heroine." It is pseudo-scientific and very stilted, and what is worse, it obscures the action which would have been clear without it. If this were the only shortcoming in the picture's leaders and in the general assembling, the offering as a photoplay wouldn't have suffered much. It is much more unfortunate that, at the very climax, where the action becomes most truly dramatic, we are left, for want of a simple clear leader, entirely in the dark. The girl has recovered her faculties. The last link in needed evidence against the guardian has been found. The guardian is at a masquerade and it has been decided to have the girl attend in mask and dance with him and then to uncover. The lover and the police officer are also to be present. We do not, however, know what is going on until the girl unmasks, then we see it all; but before that we didn't even know that the girl was to have anything to do with the incident, didn't know she was in the room.

The picture just as it is, might easily and with no great expense be made very powerful. Proper treatment, in the way of sub-titles, seems to be the only thing needed. The story is one that naturally lends itself to dramatic presentation and the acting and the scene-making have plainly been directed by an artist. The heroine is pretty and excites our sympathy from the first. She is a skillful player, and the other players also act their roles naturally and effectively. The photography is in most of the scenes fine and the backgrounds often lovely. It seems too bad that good work by the producer should be so vitiated after the prints had been successfully made, and by nothing else that lack of proper care in assembling the scenes with good leaders.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, paid a visit to The World office during the week. He is enthusiastic over the new quarters of his company in California. The American, Mr. Hutchinson says, will in the future vary its program by all-around pictures—comedies and society dramas, etc.

"The Return of Lady Linda" (Eclair)

By George Blaisdell.

HERE is an American production, in two parts, that may well be featured. It will attract attention by reason of its photography. This is unusual—sharp all the way. Then again, the settings are fine; especially is this true of the exteriors. The outdoor scenes are taken in and about spacious grounds inclosing a mansion that may well be described as lordly. The story? There is abundant heart interest, especially in the second part. It is in this reel that a child enters; and this child has a pet—a fawn. Around this combination the climax turns. Miss Barbara Tennant carries the role of Lady Linda. The part fits her as smoothly as a glove. Fred Truesdale plays the beggar Baron Enrico, the real lover of the Lady Linda. His interpretation is sympathetic—he arouses and sustains the interest of the beholder. Little Clara Horton is Pietro, the young son of Lady Linda. J. W. Johnston is the successful lover, Claudio, Duke of Rimini. Alonzo, Duke of Genoa, is played by Will E. Sheerer, and Bianca, wife to Alonzo, by Miss Julia Stuart. George Larkin has the role of Antonio, servant to Alonzo, and James Davis of Caspar, servant to Enrico. Oscar Lund produced the picture, and he may well take pride in his work.

Scene from "The Return of Lady Linda" (Eclair).

Scene from "The Return of Lady Linda" (Eclair).

The story is of a pauperized baron who falls in love with Lady Linda, already pledged to Claudio, Duke of Rimini. Her fiance, in an attempt to show up the poverty of Enrico, invites the down-and-out neighbor to a function. Enrico pledges his last bit of jewelry and goes to the affair in style. Lady Linda is much attracted by Enrico; in fact, she pays to him so much attention that Claudio challenges the fortunate guest. There is a duel on the spot, but it comes to a sudden termination through unfair tactics on the part of Claudio's friends. Lady Linda is married in accordance with previous plans. Enrico from his grounds sorrowfully watches the ceremony.

Ten years later the Duchess of Rimini is a widow. She has a son, Pietro. The two are close to each other. Pietro has many pets, but tires of these when he discovers the fawn on the estate of Enrico. Each day the little fellow steals away and goes to his new friend. When he is unable to open the great gate he gets down in the dust in his fine clothes and crawls under. Enrico is happy. He pays much attention to the little fellow from the adjoining estate. There is real affection between the man and the child. Pietro is stricken with fever and confined to his bed. Enrico beyond the wall watches in vain for the sight of the little yellow head. Pietro begs his mother to bring to him the fawn. The Lady Linda hesitates. Mother love conquers, and she sends to Enrico a note that she will pay him a visit that day.

Enrico is in distress. There is nothing in the larder. He is determined that there shall be a spread; and the only beast on his place that will furnish it is the fawn so loved by Pietro. The fawn is slaughtered. The table is set with the best the baron has. The Lady Linda attended by her women appears at the home of Enrico. She tells him that Pietro is ill and asks for his friend the fawn. Enrico plainly shows his dismay. It is a situation to stir the heart. The baron confesses that the little animal has been sacrificed in order that due honor might be done the unusual guest. The baron is asked to go to Pietro. There is a pathetic scene at the side of the bed of the dying child.

Enrico later calls on the Lady Linda. The two old friends meet on the grounds in front of the castle. Enrico kneels. In the background are grouped all the friends of the mistress of the house. It is an animated scene, an interesting one. The final picture is of the marriage of Enrico and the Lady Linda.

"THE EMERGENCY WAITER" (Great Northern).

This comedy deals with the blunders and tribulations of Jack the cobbler, who has essayed to perform stunts not in keeping with his trade. A wealthy banker and his wife are to give a fashionable reception in their home and at the last moment it is discovered that one of the regular professional waiters has failed to report for duty. The guests have assembled and the hostess finds herself face to face with a serious dilemma. She sends a maid to the shop of Jim the tailor, who at times consents to display his agility as an emergency waiter. Jim has a previous engagement, but recommends his friend, Jack the cobbler. The latter, after much persuasion, consents to act, but only after he had been properly outfitted in suit of evening cut which has been furnished by the hostess. Jack is a tipsy mortal at best, but on this occasion he exceeds his customary limit and arrives at the house much the worse for liquor. His first achievement is to drop an armful of dishes in the dining room. This episode is followed by his spilling of a plate of soup into the lap of one of the guests. His crowning coup occurs when he picks cubes of sugar from the cups of the diners. At this juncture Jack conceives the fancy that he is being annoyed by flies; one of the maids, in a spirit of fun, gives him several sheets of fly paper with which he proceeds to smear his gloves. He is finally ejected from the house and his wanderings lead him to a boat wharf. Espying an old tub, he decides to escape the imaginary flies by taking a little trip on the water. His pesky enemies follow him, however, and in his efforts to swat them the tub upsets and Jack is given an unwelcome bath. When his faithful wife with a party of rescuers reach the scene of disaster, Jack is floating and doing his utmost to stave off his buzzing enemies.

On the same reel is presented "The Balkan War," which must prove interesting.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA INTERPRETS PICTURES.

At Carnegie Hall, Friday evening, December 13, a good-sized audience witnessed the production of F. W. Hochstetter's "Life of John Bunyan" in five parts. What made the evening memorable and perhaps unprecedented in the history of motion pictures was the interpretation of the pictures by the Russian Symphony Orchestra of fifty pieces. Modest Altschuler, the conductor of the orchestra, had specially composed, selected and adapted music for the occasion. There was generous applause throughout the evening, especially following the last scenes of the production, when the music in conjunction with the pictures was particularly effective.

CORRESPONDENCE

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

SAFEGUARDING of moving picture houses in the middle west with a view to reassuring the public of practical immunity from fire danger is always a timely topic, but never more pertinent than at present. The Springfield, Ill. authorities have taken up the matter and sent Fire Chief Bolte and Building Inspector Offlighter to St. Louis to investigate precautions there. Springfield houses are very well equipped in the matter of exits and there has never been any serious trouble in that respect.

The action of the Springfield officials is not so much to prevent fires because the theaters conform to city regulations. They are aiming at the inexperienced operator who is most likely to cause a panic and the officials probably will pass an ordinance making it necessary for operators to secure licenses. The action was precipitated by the Lincoln, a newly opened negro picture theater, in placing a young inexperienced man in the operating room. The place was closed for one night until a competent operator was secured.

The Bijou theater at Waukegan, Illinois, evidently has not found the stock company proposition profitable as announcement has been made that the old policy of moving pictures will be resumed.

Announcement has been made of the marriage of H. H. Fish, proprietor of the Crystal theater at Emmetsburg, Iowa, and Miss Rose Matthews of that city.

The Cosmopolitan Amusement Company of Gary, Indiana, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000, to operate theaters, etc. The incorporators are, M. T. Wohl, L. Friedman, and I. J. Siegfried.

O. F. Frederickson has sold the Kaiserhof theater at Rockford, Ill., to E. K. Golden who in turn disposed of it to S. R. Boyer. Mr. Boyer is a Rockford resident and is an uncle of G. Cole of Chicago, who operates three moving picture houses in that city. Cole is also said to be figuring on obtaining a house in Freeport, Ill.

It is said that Rockford is to have another new picture show, but the plans have not been announced beyond the view that negotiations have been opened for two of the stores in Belting's block on Fourteenth avenue.

Herman Clubine has traded the opera house at Mapletown, Iowa to Charles S. Trickell of Independence, Kansas.

The films made by the St. Louis Motion Picture Company of St. Louis, in Alton, Ill., will be entitled "Know Alton." The company encountered some bad weather in securing the films and was necessarily delayed, but as Alton is picturesquely located on the Mississippi River Bluffs, the company was rewarded with some excellent pictures.

The firm of Handcock & Rice, which operates a moving picture show in Zion City, Ill., has been dissolved, Mr. Rice continuing the business.

J. Walter Schwartz, the baritone singer who has been at the Varsity theater in Champaign, Ill., for some time, has rejoined the Golden Gate Trio, which played last year over the Orpheum circuit.

William I. Flagg, secretary, and Leslie Bradbury, treasurer of the N. Kent Company, Inc., of New York, Chicago and Toronto closed a lease at Quincy, Ill., for the ground floor of the new Labor Temple in that city to be used as a picture house. A new front will be put in and 230 seats installed. It is hoped to have the place open by the holidays.

Manager Tudor has decided to change the name of the Family theater at Clinton, Iowa, to the Missouri theater.

William E. Whiteside of Moline, Ill., filed an attachment suit December 4th, against Thomas B. Keyes, manager of the White House, a moving picture theater in Moline and E. B. Scott and H. Lightcap, partners in the business, alleging that $200 is due him for attorney's fees. H. S. Ransom of the H. S. Ransom Printing Company also filed an attachment suit for the recovery of $38 from the same men.

R. S. Woodburn has purchased from S. I. Josephson at Moline, Ill., the site on Fifteenth street, now occupied by the Grand theater and will replace it for an office building.

Griggsville, Ill., which is credited with a population of 1,262, now has two moving picture shows. The one operated by Williamson, Hitch & Hunter gave a free show recently.

The Star moving picture theater has been opened at Moweakua, Ill.

Thomas Scott of Jacksonville, Ill., who has been in the moving picture business for several years, has purchased a site at 223 East Morgan street in that city, upon which he will construct an airdrome next spring. The new place which will be known as Scott's Hippodrome will be given largely to moving pictures but early plans include vaudeville.

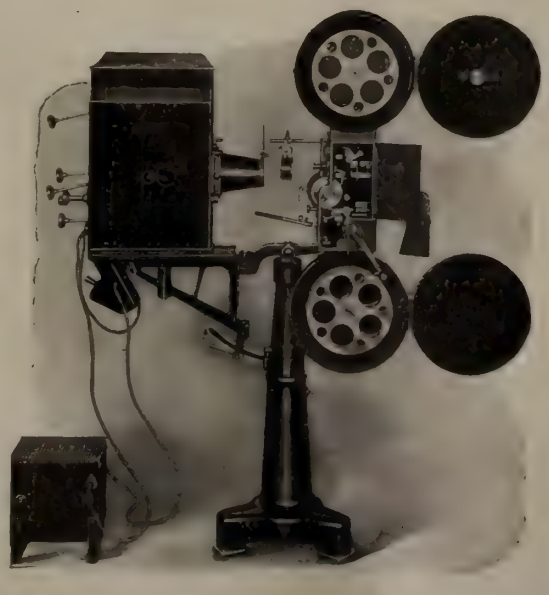
Miss Ethel Keene and Miss H. W. Harper, who recently purchased the Empire moving picture show at Morris, Ill., had not gone very far with their first Sunday's performance when they were arrested upon a warrant sworn out by Rev. G. W. James and A. G. Harrison, representing the churches of the city. The ladies appeared in court and secured a continuance of the case and were released upon their own recognizances and operated the rest of the day. An ordinance was passed Oct. 27, 1907, prohibiting the opening of theaters or any other place of amusement on Sunday. Section 3 of that ordinance permitted religious services to be held in theaters and pictures to be used in illustrating them. On Oct. 26, 1910, the council passed another ordinance with the intent of repealing the one of 1907 which gave moving picture shows the right to operate on Sundays, provided nothing but religious subjects were used. The following month another ordinance was passed repealing the one in October and prohibiting the exhibition of moving pictures of any nature on Sunday.

Humanitarians of Illinois are in sympathy with the plan of Warden E. J. Murphy of the Illinois state penitentiary at Joliet to include a moving picture machine and a contract with a film renting agency, with the dungeon, straight jacket and other prison equipment. The first performance was given Dec. 4th, when the entire group of convicts were given a three-reel show consisting of colored scenics and comedies. Instead of being marched to their work the prisoners filed to the chapel but did not know the occasion for the assembly. Many of them, especially the "lifers", had never seen a moving picture and betrayed much interest. Warden Murphy may use the pictures as a reward to convicts who have a record for good behavior. Beyond condemning criminal stories there will be no attempt to restrict the films.

Chief of Police Schramm of Davenport, Iowa read to his blue-coats, lined up at roll-call, a letter from Mayor Mueller instructing them to keep a close eye on the class of films shown in the different houses in that city. One theater, according to the communication, had been showing films which had led to disapproval which had reached the Mayor.

Few towns as small as Illinois, Ill. have been confronted with the Sunday picture show problem, but Manager J. C. Tucker of the opera house, has paved the way for the inevitable controversy. He made arrangements to commence, Sunday, December 15th, a series of sacred films and other good clean productions. Editor H. J. Knotts of the State-Center Record is at his back with the opinion that it will keep the young men in town on Sunday afternoons, and that with this class of attractions they probably will be a great deal better off in the playhouse than on the streets.

Simplex



THE PEER OF ALL PROJECTING MACHINES

A prominent dealer in motion picture machines and supplies said recently that there isn't as much inducement for a dealer to handle Simplex projectors as some other machines, for he sold practically no repairs even for the machines which have been in service a year and a half; whereas he could count on selling $30.00 to $40.00 worth of parts per year for some of the other machines.

There is food for thought in that statement, Mr. Exhibitor and Mr. Operator.

Think beyond the first cost and into the future. What is the ultimate cost and sum total of satisfaction going to be?

Get wise and take a look at the Simplex before buying some other machine. We invite comparison.

The Taylorville Amusement Company of Taylorville, Ill., has increased its capital stock from $2,000 to $20,000.

H. A. Burton has given up the lease on Folk's Opera house at Pontiac, Ill. He is succeeded by Albert Witt and Ernest Hoobler of that city.

The Patrons' Association of the Farragut school at St. Louis, Mo., is successfully using moving pictures with its monthly meetings.

Examination of a single day's advertising by six photoplay houses in Springfield, Ill., show twelve feature pictures booked within a few days. These pictures were two, three and four reels. Most of them were shown at five cents but there is one manager who gets ten cents for a good feature picture and profits by it, securing a class of patronage that has given his house a standing in the community.

The Illinois State Journal at Springfield, which had long been half-heartedly opposed to moving pictures, is yielding to the demand of the public for information concerning photoplays and devotes an entire page in its Sunday edition to news of the films. No original matter is used, the notices for the local advertisers being supplemented by feature stories, issued by the Newspaper Enterprise Association of Chicago, Washington and San Francisco. This syndicate has a good service as far as it goes. It is furnishing to its fifty-nine papers in the United States, a series of illustrations from the Kalem, "From the Manger to the Cross," to be run daily. These illustrations are designed to be cut out and saved by the children and will prove valuable publicity for the religious picture.

Because three-reel Atlas production, "Secret Service Steve," contains a Springfield locomotive, engineer and fireman, the Casino theater gave the picture a return play.

City Building Commissioner Edgar Offlighter of Springfield, Ill., denies that the proposed ordinance in that city requiring licensed operators, is an attempt to aid the unions but that it is solely for the protection of the public. Licenses will be granted to all competent operators over twenty-one years of age.

The Popular Theater Company of Chicago, Ill., has increased its capital stock from $2,500 to $5,000.

Manager W. W. Watts of the Vaudette theater at Springfield, Ill., who was compelled to disappoint his patrons, November 29th because of the non-arrival of the three-reel Kalem "Kerry Gow," gave the production December 11th, to a large house.

The growth of moving pictures for educational, religious, and charitable work in the Middle West continues. The board of education at Elgin, Ill., has been making an experiment and 500 pupils of the sixth, seventh and eighth grades of five schools, recently viewed educational pictures through the co-operation of H. P. Rorig of the Orpheum theater. The pictures were: Scott's "Lady of the Lake" which is being studied in one of the grades, "Climbing Mt. Rainier," "The Pineapple Industry," and part of the films showing Sarah Bernhardt as "Queen Elizabeth." The five principals who paid the necessary expenses were pleased with the result. "The pupils received the instruction while they were being entertained and the visual impressions of what they saw were, I believe, stamped deeply on their minds," said Miss Lilian Larsen, principal of the Garfield school. In the same city, Rev. Walter Macpherson gave tickets to the pupils of the Sunday school for a performance at a local theater here. Moving pictures of the life of Moses were shown. This is the first of the series of the study of social and religious institutions of the Orient to be shown the church children. The pastor declares that eventually a machine will be installed in the auditorium here. Adults as well as children will be given instruction on religious subjects. A third place in Elgin where the films were used effectively was in the holiday celebration at the Elgin State Hospital for the Insane. They play a large part in the festivities. Mr. A. B. Bowen, executive secretary of the Illinois State Charities Commission, believes that the right kind of pictures are a big help in maintaining a community atmosphere in the institution and making it less like a house of detention. Dr. W. B. Kern, superintendent o fpthe Lincoln Hospital for the Insane at Hastings, has installed a moving picture machine in his amusement hall. The Illinois State Normal school at Macomb is also contemplating the use of moving pictures. At Ottawa, Ill., arrangements are being made to have educational pictures shown on Saturday afternoon for the juvenile department of the public library. It is said that each of the four picture houses in the city will give a benefit performance to aid the funds for the purchase of a machine and rental of films.

The Webster Park Company of Princeton, Ill., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $15,000, to conduct amusement parks. The incorporators are, James Nelson, James M. Ennes and Winfred K. Trimble.

It is but a single step from the plan proposed by President A. P. Grout of the Illinois Farmers' Institute of the use of mere steropticons in institute work to the adoption of moving pictures. In fact the executive committee of the institute is now considering the use of films to spread the gospel of scientific farming. This would be done by means of an interest-holding story of the man who won success or found happiness by rebuilding his wornout land or changing his crop to one suited for his locality. The week has brought a number of plans and demonstrations in which the moving pictures play a very important part in the agricultural movement. The school of agriculture at the University of Minnesota, at St. Paul, will celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary, March 24 to 29. The daily program will include a series of moving panorama, representing the different stages in the development of agricultural education. Live stock and agriculture exhibits throughout the state will be shown and pictures of plants in the process of growing will be taken. The government is using the film showing the ravages of the cattle tick which annually causes a loss of over $100,000,000 to the cattle growers of the country and it will be exhibited at the Fifth National Corn Exposition at Columbia, S. C., next month. Lieutenant-governor-elect W. L. Harding of Iowa, spoke before the meeting of the State Farmers' Institute, at Des Moines and urged the use of moving pictures for making a better state. The subject came up in a discussion on effective means of securing better roads. This plan also includes films of the Iowa State Fair which would be sent throughout the state for advertising purposes. The pictures of farming with gas tractors on a 10,000 acre ranch in South Dakota which were made for the Emerson Brantingham Company of Rockford, Ill., have been sent on a tour following their production at the land show in Chicago. They were first taken to Rockford, where they were exhibited at the Orpheum theater and proved of much interest to the thousands of employes of the big machinery factory.

The Board of Trade of Alton, Ill., secured full measure of publicity from its industrial films. When the reel was shown at the Princess theater in that city each performance was accompanied by a lecture from Secretary George H. Mosser of the Board of Trade. A "booster song" which was selected by the Board of Trade last year, has been incorporated in the film and will go with it on its tour of the state. Manager Reilly has a new Power's 6A Cameragraph for exhibiting the films. The Progress Motion Picture Company recently took a series of pictures in Galesburg, Ill., for Manager Dougherty of the Colonial theater. A series of industrial and municipal views were taken at Streator for the Dawn theater. This includes a night picture of a large bottle factory in Adion.

A compromise was reached in the case of Morris, Ill., against Mrs. H. W. Harper and Miss Ethel Keene, managers of the Empire theater, who were arrested for conducting a show on Sunday. The defendants paid the cost of the suit. Following this the council passed an ordinance, providing that no theater, show or other place of amusement should be opened for a performance or entertainment of any description on Sunday.

Ridicule resulted in the repeal of the clause in an ordinance at Quincy, Ill., which provided that aldermen or other officials of the city with badges had the right to enter moving picture shows or places of amusement for the purpose of inspection. The press, not only of Quincy but of other cities of Illinois, hinted that the measure was passed merely to give the officials the chance to see the shows free. It is said the law regarding exits will work hardship for some of the theaters as few are in a position to make side exits. The city council at Dubuque, Iowa, ordered the Grand theater to extend its center aisle to the rear of the second row of seats and to construct a landing and fire escape opening from the upper balcony. An investigation was ordered on the report that the Dreamland theater was building a frame addition.

J. M. Page, editor of the Democrat at Jerseyville, Ill., who is also Mayor of that city, has been agitating the fire danger issue in theaters in his city.

Clarence Miller, manager of the Lyric theater at Danville, Ill., and Miss Lou Sloan of that city were married at Chicago.

W. J. West of Theilen & West, proprietors of the Majestic theater at Kewanee, Ill., will open up a theater in Clinton, Iowa, with a seating capacity of 1400, it is reported. Mr. West will manage the house.

B. M. Rice, manager of the Lyceum theater at Zion City, Ill., has increased his show from a three-reel to a four-reel performance.

The Municipal Theater Company of Marion, Ind., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000. The directors are, Dolly Spurr, George W. Spurr and Allen L Spurr.

The Bijou theater at Kewanee, Ill., has announced that for a while at least, performances will be given only on Saturdays and Sundays.

C. A. Johnson and R. E. Gamble of Kirkwood, Ill., have been granted a license to operate a moving picture show in Gamble's hall. A license fee of $25 a year has been fixed.

C. E. Kepner, owner of the Bijou theater at Mattoon, Ill., has branched out by taking over from Elmore Katz the lease on the Grand theater. He has put into effect a policy of moving pictures and will install a new machine. The Bijou will continue as a moving picture house.

J. L. Peterson who manages the skating rink in Sycamore, Ill., and who last year conducted the Airdome, has leased the Ryan building on the West side of California street for ten years and will remodel it into a modern vaudeville and moving picture theater. The seating capacity will be 800.

Valentine Schildwachter is said to be having plans drawn for a new moving picture theater at the intersection of Garden and Adams streets in Peoria, Ill.

The Lyric theater at Maquoketa, Iowa, which was recently purchased by Brown & Beckwith, has installed a new screen.

The Kaiserhof theater at Rockford, Ill., is now known as the Iris.

The Rose hall at Delta, Iowa, has been rented by Mr. Hyde, of Richmond, who has opened a moving picture show.

The J. B. Amusement Company has rented the Knights of Columbus hall at Naperville, Ill., and will give moving picture and vaudeville show each Wednesday night.

Elbert & Detchel of Des Moines, Iowa, operating four theaters in that city, will erec a new $150,000 house at the corner of Eighth and Locust streets.

The United Feature Film Company has filed articles of incorporation at St. Louis, with a capital stock of $50,000. To manufacture moving picture films; also to rent and lease same. The incorporators are, O. T. Crawford, J. M. Dubbs and N. L. Sunley.

Felt & Tyne, managers of the Bijou at Kewanee, Ill., has reopened the Family theater at Princeton, Ill., as a moving picture and vaudeville house.

A Davidson, lessee of the Grand theater at Joliet, Ill., is said to have disappeared from that city, December 9, leaving affairs of the theater in a very unsatisfactory condition.

J. B. Riblett, who conducts the Lewistown page in the Canton, Ill. "Leader," designs a five-cent picture house for that city, which shows that a proprietor might find it more satisfactory to use gas than electricity.

The Anderson Watkins Film Company of Chicago has been incorporated. The incorporators are, Louis B. Anderson, William Watkins, and Frank L. Hamilton, F. H. MADISON.

NEW ENGLAND.

AL. Oxner reports that the loss to the Music Hall, Maynard, Mass., which was burned November 26, was quite extensive. Mr. Oxner rented the hall for Tuesday nights, and Mr. Gilroy had a lease on the theater for Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays, when he gave a picture program. Mr. Gilroy lost his entire outfit, amounting to about $500. The theater will probably be remodeled.

Messrs. Nathan and Sampel Goldstein, operating as the Goldstein Brothers Amusement Company, report that their new Broadway Theater, at the corner of Broadway and Bridge Streets, Springfield, Mass., is now well under way. The theater should be ready for its opening performance on February 1, 1913. The house is certain to be one of the most modern and best equipped theaters in New England. It will seat about 3,000 people, and has two balconies. Nothing has been spared in the erection of the house, and moving stairs will very likely be a part of the Broadway. Goldstein Brothers own a large string of very successful theaters devoted to vaudeville and photoplays.

On Wednesday, January 1, 1913 a concert and dance of the Orpheum theater employees will be held for the benefit of Mr. Sam Messing, of Marcus Louis's Orpheum, Boston. Paine Memorial Hall is the place, and tickets are fifty cents. Concert from 8 to 9, and dancing until one A. M. Mr. Messing is a great favorite, and a record attendance is sure, to judge from the advance sale of tickets.

There has been considerable discussion going on of late regarding the lack of profit in theaters operated in Portland, Me. Mr. James E. Moore, Manager of the B. F. Keith theater, Portland, states that, in his opinion, there isn't a theater in the City of Portland that shows a respectable profit to its owners. In spite of this fact, there are several other theaters contemplated for Portland, according to Mr. Moore. Mr. Hiram Abrams of Portland, of the Greene & Abrams Amusement Company, remarked that "owing to the many theaters now open in Portland, none of them can be considered money making propositions." Mr. Abrams is part owner in the Big Nickel and New Portland theaters, and is also interested in a score of other theaters in New England, playing to vaudeville and pictures. Whether such a direful state of affairs now really exists in Portland, is a matter of some doubt in the minds of many qualified to speak on the matter. It may be that the lack of profit in Portland theaters has been enlarged upon, to keep those "other theaters contemplated for this city" from materializing.

Denault Brothers report that their scenic theater, Rochester, N. H., has been doing a most satisfactory business ever since its opening in September. A straight picture show, plus a good grade of singing, has caught on with Rochester folks. The scenic is of modern construction, being of brick and cement and taken as a whole, presents a mighty fine appearance.

It is rumored that the Automatic Vaudeville Company of New York has a 40 per cent stock interest in the South End theater, controlled by Marcus Loew. Some changes have been made in the South End, and Mr. Sam LaVengie is now engaged as manager of that theater, leaving the Comique theater, Boston, where he had been at the helm for the Automatic people. Mr. McCaffery moves up to the position as manager of the Comique, having formerly been assistant manager. Mr. LaVengie has been with the Automatic Vaudeville Company for about twelve years and knows his business very thoroughly. He has a large contract ahead of him however, to make a winner of the South End, which has been a most consistent loser from the start. Mr. N. N. Brooks, a member of the Automatic Vaudeville Company has general supervision of the South End, Premier, Comique and Palace theaters, all of Boston

This writer unintentionally created a wrong impression in last week's columns, by writing, "manager Appleby of the Boston office of the Mutual Corporation." Mr. Appleby is what should have been written, as George gave up the title "manager" to take up his present position with the Mutual folks. Manager Eslow has charge of the Mutual's Boston office, and judging by the amount of business he is doing, will continue to be known as Manager Eslow for an indefinite period.

There is a new theater scheduled for Washington street, near Dudley, Boston. This is in the vicinity of the Eagle theater. It is rumored that Mr. William Bradstreet, operating a long string of New England photoplay and vaudeville theaters, has secured this new location.

A recent incorporation is the Columbia Amusement Company of Boston and Newport, R. I. This is a $20,000 concern; and the promoters are: Arthur W. Hubbard, Thomas D. Soriere, and Laura B. Hubbard. A general amusement business is to be carried on and theaters will be built, according to present plans.

Fields Corner, Roxbury, Mass., will soon have a fine, new theater, to be devoted to vaudeville and pictures. A house to seat 800, and one that will be strictly fireproof is scheduled by Mr. Wilbur Adams, the president of the Dorchester Theater Company. The location is a good one, and a good house should prosper.

The Star Amusement Company has incorporated at Augusta, Me. The promoters are as follows: Hugh M. Warren, Edwin T. Mayberry, both of Portland, and Linwood F. Crockett of Westbrook.

Mr. Walter Davis has switched his circuit of four theaters over to the Mutual program, getting the service from the Boston office.

Manager Charles Heath of the Puritan theater, Boston is now using Mutual service.

Manager Eslow of the Mutual's Boston office tells us he is attacked with a bad case of "enlargement of the heart." Which accounts for the fact that the above mentioned gentleman is giving away to his customers a free Christmas slide.

Mr. S. Z. Poli announces that he has purchased 587-591 Main street, Hartford, Conn. This piece of property is extremely valuable. Mr. Poli at present has a theater in the rear of this property, and had leased a store, which was converted into a lobby.

The new Windsor theater, Windsor, Ontario, was opened to the public December 2. This theater is one of the finest in Canada, exploiting vaudeville and picture programs. The theater seats about 2,500 people, and will run three shows daily, with a change of program on Mondays and Thursdays. Mr. J. M. Ward, the chief stockholder in the corporation owning the Windsor theater, reports himself as very well pleased with the outlook. Mr. Ward has installed Mr. McElwane as resident manager; a man who understands the game.

A new theater is rumored for Boston. A representative of the concern desiring to build the theater called at the office of Mayor Fitzgerald and offered the City of Boston $200,000 for the site of the old Franklin School, at the corner of Tremont street and Dix place. The Mayor, the Schoolhouse Commission, the School Committee and a representative of a Boston banking house were present, besides the people making the bid for the property. This land has about 10,000 feet of space. The city of Boston is now thinking over the offer and it is believed that the bid will finally be accepted, as the price is a good one.

Mr. William Fox paid New England a visit last week; the first one in a very long while. Mr. Fox is at present offering his particular brand of vaudeville and pictures to the people of New Haven, Conn., Waterbury, Conn., and Springfield, Mass. Mr. Fox was in Boston during his New England trip and "they say" he soon will start to build a theater in that city. As things look at present, it will not be very long before Mr. Fox has theaters in all the principal New England cities.

The Bowdoin square theater, Boston has again reverted to vaudeville and photoplays, after a month or two of stock burlesque. A ten cent admission is now in vogue and business is understood to be satisfactory.

The owners of the New Boylen theater, Taunton, Mass., now state that this house will surely be ready for its opening performance on January 16th. The Boylen is a large house, and no expense has been spared to make it one of the finest.

A fire that had its inception in the Fairlee Opera House, Fairlee, Vermont, had a most direful effect on that town, as the library and village church were destroyed, in addition to the theater. The theater will probably be rebuilt.

The Railroad Commission held a hearing in Boston this week, in order to give those a chance to express their views who favored later train service to the suburbs. Those favoring later trains proved that 500,000 people were unable to attend the evening performances at Boston theaters, on account of the poor train service. James A. J. Brackett was attorney for the local theater managers.

The Portland Lodge of Elks held their memorial service at Keith's theater, Portland, Me., this week.

Mr. Hiram Abrams of the Greene and Abrams Amusement Company called some of the resident managers of theaters controlled by that corporation to Portland, Me., this week, and a conference was held on matters pertaining to the policies of the different theaters.

While Mr. William Fox was in New Haven, Conn., this week, looking over his grand opera house, he took occasion to tender a banquet to Mr. Benjamin Jackson, his resident manager.

The three-reel feature "Kerry Gow," was believed by the Casino theater, Taunton, Mass., to be worth ten cents admission, instead of the usual five. And it proved to be worth the raise, as attendance was unusually good during the exhibition of this feature.

Colonel Bill Stanton, formerly manager of the Central square theater, Lynn, Mass., but now in charge of the Auditorium theater at Fitchburg, came over to Lynn last week to pay a short visit to his old friends and also to vote for William Connery for Mayor of that city.

Mr. Walter Davis, manager of the Star theater, Pawtucket, R. I., says he is glad he switched over to the service of the Boston office of the Mutual Corporation.

The Nicholas Power Company "put it across" when they got the order to install a 6A at the State Hospital for the Insane, at Concord, N. H. It seems that good pictures, properly projected are good for the "nuts."

The Union Hall, Somerville, Mass., is a very busy spot these days, now that Mr. Pearson has opened his photoplay theater. The Union Hall has been carefully renovated and generally improved.

Santo Capasso of New Haven, Conn., has brought suit against Pasquale Cofransesco. It seems that the latter named gentleman sold to Mr. Capasso his photoplay house. One of the stipulations was to the effect that Mr. Cofransesco should not again engage in the moving picture business in New Haven. The latter disregarded this fact—hence the suit.

The National Lancers, Troop A, First Squadron, M. V. M., held one of their regular smoke talks this week at the Armory on Bulfinch street, Boston. About 300 members were present and were greatly pleased with an exhibition of moving pictures that depicted the maneuvers of the Red and Blue Armies in the offensive and defensive operations on Boston.

Mr. George T. Wilder has acquired the interest in the Star theater, Dover, N. H., formerly owned by M. E. Clement of Lewiston, Me.

N. J. Mahanna of Springfield, Mass., reports he has leased Central Hall, Housatonic, Mass., and will run a picture program as soon as the Hall is put into proper shape.

The St. John's Catholic Church on Fourth street, between Cambridge and Otis streets, Cambridge, Mass., has been leased by F. A. McMeninen, who will remodel the church, and run it as a vaudeville and picture house.

Messrs. Powers and Woodhead report that their new Globe theater, Clinton, Mass., is exceding their expectations.

The Beneficent Congregational Church of Providence, R. I., has installed a moving picture machine. This is the eldest church in Providence, but the Rev. A. E. Krom is of advanced and broad ideas. Dr. Krom tells us that it is his positive belief that motography is "one of the greatest agencies for good." For the present the pictures will be shown on Saturday nights, but before long, they are to be included in the Sunday services. The pictures are to be used to attract the interest of members of Dr. Krom's church who have been lax in attendance. The pictures are also to be used to illustrate the lessons given the Sunday School classes. Dr. Krom spoke at great length, a great deal of which was simply a reiteration of what the Moving Picture World has always claimed the pictures were so well able to do along educational, instructive and religious lines. All honor to Dr. Krom, who has the courage of his convictions

HENRY.

OREGON.

ARTICLES of incorporation have been filed with the Secretary of State for a concern to be known as the Yamatograph Motion Picture Company, with a paid-up capital stock of $25,000. The incorporators are A. E. Cooper, William F. Beckett and Merwin Rankin.

December 3d marked the opening of the Circle Amusement Company's new Portland theater, to be known as the Circle Theater. The theater is located at Fourth and Washington Streets and was opened to the public, who expressed it as "the queen of Portland's theaters." No expense has been spared, no detail that hand or brain could accomplish has been overlooked to make this the premier photoplay house. The theater in itself is equipped with every modern convenience for safety and comfort. Abundant exits, wide aisles and, in particular, a ventilating system that insures an abundance of pure, sterilized air are features that deserve special mention. The theater seats comfortably 800. Licensed film of the highest censorship will be run at this house.

At the meeting of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, Mr. Melvin G. Winstock, general manager of the People's Amusement Company, addressed the federation in a body, telling of the work done by the local board of censors who serve voluntarily. Mr. Winstock commended their work and exhibited for their information several films that tend to show cause why the censorship board does not allow films of an unproved nature to be exhibited, and also spoke on the value of the educational advantages that can be derived from pictures that had been censored. Over a thousand women from all over the state were present, and a vote of thanks was given the People's Amusement Company for assisting to make the meeting a success.

All the People's Amusement Company theaters are preparing for their Christmas program. Santa Claus appears at the People's Theater every Saturday afternoon and takes the orders of the children, to deliver their wants for Christmas morning. From two to three thousand children are present each Saturday afternoon.

Costly improvements at the Star Theater have been made, making this house one of the finest on the coast. Twenty-five thousand dollars has been expended to refurnish the theater. One of the most costly prosceniums ever put into a theater has been made especially to order for the Star.

A follow-up system has been put into operation by the People's Amusement Company, whereby 100,000 circulars are to be printed and distributed at the rate of 20,000 per week for five weeks into the homes of the people of Portland to educate them in the value of films. The subjects are: 1, "Motion Pictures in General"; 2, "The Motion Picture Industry"; 3, "Stage Direction"; 4, "Distribution"; 5, "The Modern Theater." Mr. Winstock states that he knows it will benefit all the theaters, but that it is quite certain that the bulk of the business will go to the theaters of the People's Amusement Company. There are 76 theaters in the city at the present time, and the majority are owned and operated by the People's Company.

The Film Supply Company of Oregon has opened a branch in Seattle, Wash., and has placed Mr. John Meldrem in charge.

A charity matinee will be given before Christmas at the People's Theater for the poor children of the city. Preparation for this is now being made by the company and Mr. Winstock, who will be in charge.

Teachers of the public schools of Portland who certify to the pupil who has made the highest average during the month in each schoolroom will be given a box seat at the Saturday performance of the People's Amusement Company's theaters. This will necessitate the arrangement of having several schools attend in a body.

December 5th was Harriman Day, when over a thousand employes of the Southern Pacific and the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation Company marched in a body to the People's Theater to witness the exhibition of the pictures taken at the Portland Land Show. The land show film was taken by the American Lifeograph of Portland. This was not a complimentary exhibition. All employes paid for their entrance.

The Film Supply Company has leased large quarters in the People's Theater Building, where it will furnish up handsome quarters to make it the largest exchange in the country.

EDWARD N. WEINBAUM.

The Circle Theater is exhibiting to its patrons pictures of the highest value. It has a seven-piece orchestra that plays from the time of its opening in the morning until the hour for closing.

Railroad Day at the People's Theater proved to be a big success, when 1,000 employes of the Harriman lines paid their way into the theater to see themselves in the line of march to the land show which recently took place in Portland. President J. D. Farrell of the Harriman lines in Oregon, and other officials were the guests of honor.

"Religious nights" are being planned at the People's Theater for the showing of the great Thanhouser photoplay, "The Star of Bethlehem."

All the large department and industrial concerns in this city are planning with the management of the People's Amusement Company to have special evenings for their employees at the People's Theater at least once a month.

W. B. Armstrong, superintendent of construction of the People's Amusement Company, is planning to take a vacation for about a month, beginning with the first of the year.

ED. N. WEINBAUM.

Among the Exhibitors.

Detroit, Mich.—The new Windsor theater on Pitt street, east will open soon.

The Wives of Jamestown

KALEM 2 Reels

Bryan O'Sullivan, an Irish lad of humble birth, rescues Lady Geraldine from drowning as her boat capsizes, thereby meriting her lasting gratitude. Forgetful of his station, Bryan falls madly in love with Lady Geraldine, who momentarily listens to his pleadings. Her acceptance of attentions from O'Rourke angers Bryan and he upbraids her for falseness. The nobleman draws his sword but Bryan wrenches it from his hand and breaks it to pieces. Knowing that he cannot now remain, Bryan bids farewell to Lady Geraldine and sails for America. Bryan O'Sullivan, Irishman, becomes John Pierce, Colonist of Jamestown, Virginia. Years later Lady Geraldine suffers many vicissitudes; her castle is besieged by the Cromwellians and she with many others is sent to Jamestown to be sold to the colonists as wives. John Pierce is startled to see Lady Geraldine, but she fails to recognize him because of a heavy beard. Seeing that he is an honest man, she offers to become his wife. He takes her to his cottage and stepping into another room shaves off his beard, and begins to play the flute, which he so loved in days gone by. Lady Geraldine, who is about to end her life, hears the music and stepping to the door recognizes John Pierce, her husband, as Bryan O'Sullivan, her lover, and love claims its own.

It Is Never Too Late to Mend

EDISON 2 Reels

The Fielding Brothers, farmers, are served with notice of foreclosure of mortgage on their farm. George, the elder brother, is engaged to Susan Morton, who is also beloved by John Meadows, the wealthiest man in town. Meadows realizes the futility of his efforts to win Susan by fair means, and plans George's undoing and his own aggrandizement. George goes to Australia to seek his fortune and Meadows, sure of success, selects the house for his bride and ousts the present tenant, Isaac Levy, thus gaining the enmity of the Old Jew. Levy has been protected from Meadows' game by George Fielding, and he now determines to protect George from the plotters. He rents an office next to Meadows' and through a hole which he bores in the wall keeps informed of their plans. Meadows' schemes are frustrated, and George returns with six thousand pounds to clear the home and claim his bride.

Romeo and Juliet

Pathe 2 Reels

SHAKESPEARE

A Wonderfully Colored Film of the Immortal Playwright's Great Romantic Play

Romeo of the House of Capulets and Juliet, of the House of Montagues, scorn the family feud of years, and love each other with all the fervor of Veronian youths. The ardent wooer sings his love beneath his lady's window while the stars wink their approval of the lovers' happiness. Juliet's father urges her marriage to Tybalt, a man of his choosing, but Romeo determines she shall not so wed for they visit the venerable Friar Lawrence and are secretly united in marriage. Romeo is challenged by his rival Tybalt, and in the encounter wounds his antagonist, for which he is exiled. Romeo's departure leaves Juliet open to the demands of her father, who insists upon her immediate marriage to Tybalt. In terror she flees to the old Friar, who gives her a powerful sleeping potion, and on the day she is to marry Tybalt her friends are horrified to see her fall into a deathlike swoon. She is interred in the vault of her ancestors, and Romeo, hearing of her death, returns home, enters the vault and after gazing upon the face of his beloved plunges a dagger into his heart. Juliet awakens to see him expiring, and in her agony seizes the same dagger, inflicts a death-wound, and expires beside her lover.

Power of Silence

Lubin 1 Reels

Thomas Lowry, a wealthy Western ranch-owner, realizing he is dying, leaves his adopted daughter, Jane, to the care of his head shepherd, who because of his personality is called "Silent." The young people decide to marry when Sinclair, a nephew of Lowry, comes west, and learning of the fortune Jane inherits, decides to marry her. She listens to his descriptions of the wonderful East and promises to become his wife. Silent warns Sinclair that he will pay for any mistreatment of Jane with his life. Sinclair brings Jane east, and after squandering her fortune deserts her and she dies of a broken heart. Sinclair returns west to sell the balance of Jane's property and meets "Silent," who reminds him of the warning; in the desperate struggle that follows they plunge over the balcony of an old ruin to death below, thus ending the career of good and evil.

General

Features

The Reincarnation of Karma

December 27, 1912. Vitagraph. Two Reels.

During the early Christian era, Karma, a very spiritual and virtuous High Priest of the Temple of India, resists with all his religious fervor, Quinetrea, a beautiful and fascinating enchantress. Quinetrea eventually conquers and Karma falls a victim to her wiles. She triumphantly taunts him, and outraged at her cruel deception, Karma curses her, and Quinetrea is transformed into a huge snake. Fifteen hundred years later, Karma appears, reincarnated in the personality of Leslie Adams and loves the beautiful heiress, Lillian White. Together they visit the ancient Temple of Karma and are shown the reptile, which every hundred years resumes human form. While Leslie gazes fascinated, the snake uncoils and Quinetrea stands before him in all her bewitching charm. She holds him with her hypnotic power and forces him to accept an amulet for his betrothed, upon receiving which Lillian falls dead. Karma beholds a vision of his former self as High Priest, again curses Quinetrea, and drops dead across the prostrate body of his betrothed.

THE SHAUGHRAUN

A Genuine Irish Drama Produced Amid Genuine Irish Surroundings

December 23, 1912. Kalem. Three Reels.

By the death of their father, Robert and Claire Folliott are given into the care of Corry Kinchela, an unscrupulous land agent, who schemes with Harvey Duff, a dishonest police officer, to secure possession of the children's lands. Robert is convicted on Duff's testimony and sentenced to the penal settlement in Australia. His sister, Claire, and sweetheart, Arte, are dependent upon Conn, the Shaughraun, who supplies them with food by his poaching.

Several years later Robert returns to Ireland, but is captured as a fugitive and thrown into prison. The crafty Conn assists him to escape and feigns death when fired upon by a sentinel. It is commonly believed that Conn has been killed, and a wake is held, during which the Shaughraun learns of a plan to spirit the girls out of the country. Kinchela and his accomplices are brought to justice and the girls reunited to their sweethearts.

The LAST PERFORMANCE

December 20, 1912. Pathe. Two Reels.

Rose Mailand, the celebrated equestrienne of the famous Barnon Circus, awakens the love of Count Hans von Harten, and they are ideally happy until the Count's father angrily forbids the marriage, which compels the Count to adopt the circus for a livelihood. His spectacular thriller, "The Platform of Death," wins him the title of the "Greatest Horseman in the World," and because of the public admiration his wife becomes jealous and plans revenge.

She drugs his horse, and as he mounts the Platform of Death the horse becomes frightened at the first explosion of fireworks and plunges forward, bringing with him the Count to death in the ring below.

THE RED MAN'S HONOR

December 16, 1912. Eclipse Kleine. Two Reels.

June Dew, a pretty Indian maiden, is betrothed to Red Hawk, the bravest warrior of the tribe. Seated Bear, another brave, also loves the dark beauty and his savage heart is inflamed with jealousy at the success of his rival. One day he surprises her alone and forcibly carries her off to his canoe. Red Hawk appears just in time to see the act, and springing into the stream soon overtakes his rival. A desperate struggle follows in which Red Hawk's arm, strengthened by the "Great Spirit," mortally wounds his treacherous enemy. Red Hawk and the maiden return to the village and the wounded Indian painfully makes his way to shore, where he tells a greatly distorted story of Red Hawk's crime. The accused warrior is ordered before the great chief "White Eagle," and the death sentence imposed: "He that kills a brother must die. Twelve moons hence his spirit shall join that of the dead warrior." Red Hawk's heart is filled with bitterness and he leaves his tribe to join the army of the pale faces. His bravery in surmounting indescribable difficulties to destroy a mountain bridge, thus checking the advance of the enemy, gains him the high regard of the army, but his happiness is short lived as he remembers the sentence and returns to his tribe to pay the debt of a red man's honor. With his beloved June Dew he is taken to the funeral pyre and their souls go forth to join the Happy Hunting Ground of the "Great Spirit."

THE CROOKED PATH

A Story of the Underworld

December 13, 1912. Lubin. Two Reels.

A valuable watch and money stolen from a banker by Dan Lyons results in the arrest and conviction of the crook. His sweetheart, Nell Harris, is approached by a young clergyman, William Kimball, who questions her regarding her trouble. Nell admits her wrong deeds and tells him of her desire to follow the straight and narrow path. Kimball takes her to his blind mother and soon grows to love her. They become engaged. Dan Lyons in his prison cell succeeds in communicating with his pals by means of a note tied to a rat's tail and receives a supply of saws with which he effects his escape. He arrives in the town in which Nell lives, asks her to return to the old life, but she refuses, and in revenge Lyons plans to rob the home of William Kimball. He and his pal are discovered and handed over to the police, and the minister accuses Nell of assisting in the robbery. She confesses her former associations with the crook and is forgiven by her fiancé.

THE HAREM CAPTIVES

December 9, 1912. Pathe. Two Reels.

The story is concerned with the adventure of Fatima and Ourida, two Arabian sisters, although widely different in dispositions. Fatima is beautiful and petulant, while Ourida combines with a lovely face a charming, peaceful nature. Arthur Budlong, a westerner, is in love with Ourida and has won her heart, which kindles the spark of jealousy in Fatima's breast. Fatima bribes a tribe of nomads to kidnap her and her sister. With his Hindoo servant, Arthur follows the trail until it reaches the City of Tunis, where it is lost. The sisters arrive in the city, are sold to a wealthy merchant and accordingly enter his harem. Budlong finally learns of the abode of his beloved and her sister and despatches his servant with a note to them, giving his plans to effect their release. Ourida is overjoyed and Fatima feigns to be, but instead, turns informer, and when they come to the gate to await Budlong's arrival they are met by servants and brought back to the harem. Arthur and his servant reach the gate and after a desperate struggle with the guard they rescue the girls. Finding that Fate is against her, Fatima gives vent to her jealous anger. They hurriedly leave her, to act as principals in a wedding ceremony.

THE DAWNING

December 6, 1912. Vitagraph. Two Reels.

Helen Mason prefers the love of Victor Gardier, a young artist, to the attentions of Henry Pendleton. The latter asks her hand in marriage, but she refuses. The young artist visits Helen, but instead of proposing, he acquaints her with the fact that his uncle offers him an opportunity to complete his art studies in Paris. She begs him not to leave her, but he turns a deaf ear to her pleadings, and after his departure, in retaliation, she weds Pendleton.

They visit Paris and Helen conceals the joy to her of a visit to the artist's studio, and her vanity is flattered by a request to have her portrait painted. She appears for the first sitting, when Victor alone with her, vehemently expresses his love, she repulses him and flees to her husband. The artist and husband meet on the field of honor and Victor is seriously wounded.

At NAPOLEON'S COMMAND

December 2, 1912. Cines-Kleine. Two Reels.

This is a story laid in the time of Napoleon's great triumphs. A Lieutenant, on leave of absence, bids farewell to his sweetheart and rejoins his army. Two years elapse and the Lieutenant has not returned to his sweetheart. She becomes impoverished and marries a Sergeant, who sends her to his mother's home in Paris. Years afterwards the Sergeant has been promoted to Field-Marshal, and he, together with his wife, is now in the court of Napoleon. During the court ceremonies the wife of the former Sergeant meets her false sweetheart, who has also been promoted from Lieutenant to Marshal. Her husband and old sweetheart meet on the field of honor. Napoleon hears of the intended duel and orders the officers to their commands. During a battle that follows soon after both the Marshals are wounded. The wife, in searching the battlefield for her husband, finds near him her old sweetheart.

THE GREAT STEEPLECHASE

November 29, 1912. Pathe. Two Reels.

A thrilling race that is sure to send the blood tingling through the veins of every human is the principal feature of this extraordinary offering. As the race nears completion startling falls become frequent. Coming into the stretch the first and second choices are but half a length apart. The favorite makes the last barrier with ease, but the next horse tops the hurdle turns a complete somersault, crushing its rider beneath it, and leaving the jockey-lover to win the race—and the girl.

THE STOLEN SYMPHONY

November 25, 1912. Lubin. Two Reels.

A beautiful story of a poor young musician who has composed an exquisite symphony.

A famous musician obtains the score of the symphony and adds new laurels to his already great triumphs. Upon denouncing the great artist as a thief, the young composer is sent to an asylum; later he obtains his release and appears in a concert where the famous artist is playing the now world's great symphony, demonstrates it is the genius of his brain and is proclaimed to the world.

BILLY'S BURGLAR

November 22, 1912. Vitagraph. Two Reels.

A daring capture of a notorious burglar by a brave boy. This is a thrilling adventure in a fast speeding automobile and a funny predicament of a negligent policeman.

The Stars of the Vitagraph Company are cast very happily in this splendid production.

KERRY GOW

November 18, 1912. Kalem. Three Reels.

This is a play that the Kalem Company has gone to Ireland for and brought back with the true atmosphere and every real characteristic of the Irish soil and Irish heart. The plot of the play is a regulation one, wherein the villain's efforts are frustrated at every turn, and the story ends with him on his way to jail and the lovers preparing for the wedding. The Irish landscape is produced and the remarkable attention to details makes the picture a really great one.

State Rights Buyers!

Union Features announce the opening of a number of branch offices which will include these cities with Southern and Western cities to follow soon:

Albany, N. Y., Baltimore, Md., Montreal, Can., Indianapolis, Ind., Chicago, Ill., St. Louis, Mo., and Kansas City, Mo.

The following branch offices are now open:

"UNION FEATURES"
covering
Indiana and Kentucky
Hauser Building, St. Louis, Mo.

"UNION FEATURES"
covering
Southern Illinois and Missouri
119 North Illinois St., Indianapolis, Ind.

The purpose of these branches is for the betterment of ouying conditions. Practice has taught us that screen inspection is the only fair method for the buyer. It has also taught us that express shipments, subject to said inspection, is a most impractical method of business conduct.

We want the buyer to see just what he is purchasing—it is right—it is just plain business and in the end it means a closer contact—a greater confidence and success for us all.

BUYERS, CONSIDER THIS: Union Features started eight months ago with nothing more than THE RIGHT IDEA—but that idea was the biggest and greatest bit of business sense ever injected in a film-dealing business concern. "THE RIGHT IDEA" has made Union Features (in eight months' time, mind you!) the largest—the strongest and the most successful feature company in all America—not barring any "combination of companies" releasing under trade agreements as a single concern.

What other feature company—or what combination can offer a program of features to even compare with the following released and those in preparation for early release?

PRODUCED AT WHAT WOULD BE A PROHIBITIVE COST WERE IT NOT FOR OUR WORLD-WIDE CHANNEL OF DISTRIBUTION

Mr. State Rights Buyer and Mr. Exhibitor, Too:

You are all business men. Common sense, reason and cold facts interest you. Profit is your chief concern—not the dangerous speculative sort, but the sure, certain, steady grind—the piling of one dollar upon another. That is good business—the only sound business.

Your judgment of features is founded upon that ground. You know that mere bulk of footage does not constitute a feature. You know that the self-styled regular-program features must—for business reasons—be limited to a certain cost of production, and it is this "cost restriction" that almost automatically shuts off their possibility of becoming real and striking features.

You know—for it is as apparent as the day—that every worthy-of-the-name "feature" is the product of an immense outlay of money. If it is not a production of magnitude, then it is an enactment by the greatest and highest salaried of the world's artists. Cost is always there!

A real feature cannot be handled through regular program channels, for the simple reason that it would not pay. . . . . That is why there are State Rights Buyers—that is why the Exhibitor must make special bookings for his Feature Days.

Gentlemen, it is not a question of loyalty—it is the plain business bearing of facts, when we state that the International Manufacturers can profitably spend double the cost on their productions as against the American Producer. Their average sale possibilities are two to one against those who are practically restricted to our own home market.

So, by all laws of reason, how can anyone deny their superiority? We cannot—in fact, no one can. . . . . That is why this Company has been an international buyer of sole American rights. . . . . And in eight months' time we have obtained and will have released more genuine Features than any other feature company, or even "companies combination," in America.

If you are not buying Union Features, then WHY? Surely you do not know, or there is something you do not understand—WHICH? Take a "tip" from a wonderfully successful firm.

SELIG.

OUR LADY OF THE PEARLS (Dec. 30).—Anita, the belle of an inland hacienda, visits Pearl Harbor and is impressed with the desirability of gratifying her passion for pearls. A suitor for her hand learns of this and steals the votive offerings of the pearl fisheries at the cathedral shrine. Eventually the eyes of the ambitious, but thoughtless, young woman are opened to the impious seriousness of such an offence. She returns the jewels; and the young man is brought to reckoning for his recklessness.

A ROUGH RIDE WITH NITROGLYCERINE (Dec. 31).—A reckless and revengeful group of men are determined to ruin an oil-well and endeavor to capture a wagon load of nitroglycerine to help their plans. The wild ride of the driver to save his freight forms a most exciting episode. The conspirators follow the freight-wagon and in turn are pursued by the sheriff's posse.

A LOYAL DESERTER (Jan. 1).—Paul Worthington, a Federal private, receives a letter from their family physician apprising him of the dangerous illness of his mother. He takes the letter to the commanding officer with a request for a "leave of absence," but, Col. Colfax refuses emphatically. Paul determines to visit his mother at any cost, however, realizing the gravity of his offence at the time of war. He leaves the camp, does his filial duty, and while at home General Buchner and his aids from the Confederate side use the lower part of the house for a consultation as it is in the war zone. Paul manages to overhear an important plan to trap General Grant. He memorizes, gets through the lines, warns the great Commander in time, and is pardoned for his loyal desertion.

GREATER WEALTH (Jan. 2).—John Sharon, a steel magnate is immensely successful from the worldly point of view, while Ed Young, his humble employee, views himself as a failure because his income shrinks as his family responsibilities increase. Sharon's only son is a drunken disappointment, his wife becomes alienated from him, and his daughter falls critically ill. Young, while visiting Sharon, learns to his dismay that his own beloved daughter is very sick. Some professional agitators induce him to attend an anarchistic meeting, and he is prevailed upon to "remove" Sharon as an enemy of mankind. The night the millionaire's daughter dies, his own recovers; and he confronts Sharon just as he returns shaken from the death-bed scene. With wonderful coolness and sympathy Sharon convinces the would-be assasin that he has a right to happiness he has never enjoyed. The picture of his palatial home and empty heart, stays the assasin's knife and leads to a better deservance of the opportunities of life.

THE CURIOUS FAMILY (Jan. 3).—The Curious family are very much excited over the visit of a rural swain to his sweetheart, the belle of the family. They peek through windows, listen at key-holes, and finally make a visual invasion of the parlor through the furnace register.

STEAK AND ONIONS (Jan. 3).—A clever story with wholesome fun and the healthy odor of onions of two bachelor girls who attempt light housekeeping in their rooms violating the instructions of a grouchy landlady. They run the gauntlet of inspection; but getting rid of the remnants of their odoriferous repast becomes most embarrassing. Every time they hide or cast aside this "incubus" in a paper bag, some solicitous person restores it their unwilling hands.

VITAGRAPH.

PLANTING THE SPRING GARDEN (Dec. 30).—Moving to a cottage in one of the suburbs, Mr. and Mrs. Citiman decide to follow the example of their neighbors and have a garden, making their back yard blossom as the rose. Mrs. Citiman makes out a list of seeds and her husband, loaded down with all sorts of garden utensils and embryo flowers, on his return from the city, is greeted with much fervor by his better half, she scarcely gives her hubby time to eat his supper before setting him to work digging and planting the seeds. He works until late at night and she has him up on the job early in the morning.

After the seeds are all in the ground, the neighbor's hens immediately get busy, scratch them out and eat them all up, making a wreck of the flower beds. At night on his return home from business, Citiman is again set to work by his wife replanting the seeds and putting everything in shape. The next morning the hens are up at daybreak and repeat their havoc of the day before. Saturday being a half holiday, Citiman is invited by some friends to go fishing. Just as he is leaving the house, his wife catches him and sets him to work in the garden, while she bosses him around, making him work like a slave. She goes to the store, he sits down to rest and falls asleep, dreaming that he is surrounded by a magnificent Persian garden, which he saunters about smoking a cigar and directing his wife in the cultivation, trimming and arrangement of the different plants. Just as he is in the midst of this delightful dream, Mrs. Citiman returns and plays the garden hose on him. This arouses him to rebellion. He seizes the hose and turns it on her, giving her a good drenching. Some of the neighbors, looking over their fence, are laughing at the fun, when they are treated to a wetting by the enraged Citiman. To more fully assert himself, he gathers together the garden implements and all the other appurtenances pertaining thereto, sets them afire and gleefully dancing about, watching them burn with much satisfaction, to the dismay of his wife.

A WOMAN (Dec. 31).—Self-opinionated and conceited, Robert Hamilton makes a deep impression on Ida Middleton. When he knows he has produced this effect, he treats her with his usual indifference and flirts with others to test her. She becomes piqued at his treatment and marries Frank Martin for spite. On the day of their marriage when they are wedded, he takes her in his arms to kiss her and she repulses him and tells him that she does not love him. For the moment he is shocked, but accepts the situation and thereafter treats her with cold politeness. They live in this way for some months, during which time Ida grows to love him and to appreciate the difference between him and a man of Hamilton's stripe.

One evening, at a reception, she meets Robert Hamilton. When she is alone for a moment in the conservatory, he enters intoxicated and forces his attentions upon her, folding her in his arms and kissing her. She struggles to free herself from his embrace and at this moment her husband enters the room. Completely upset by this incident, she asks her husband to take her home. He escorts her to the taxi and after she has entered, he closes the door and bids her good night.

Frank returns home and, reclining on a couch in the library, meditates. Ida enters and sits beside him, explaining to him that she has learned to value his love and longs to enjoy it and give him hers. He smiles his forgiveness and she, throwing her arms around his neck and he entwining his about her, they give vent to their repressed love for each other in a lingering, soulful kiss of ecstatic bliss.

LOVE HATH WROUGHT A MIRACLE (Jan. 1).—Paralyzed from injuries received in a polo match, athletic and handsome, George Fairchild is jilted by his fiancée. This heartless treatment because of his misfortune, makes him a woman-hater.

Next door to his home is a children's school, kept by two sisters. Miss Rose, the younger, devotes much of her time to a little crippled pupil. Her devotion to the child touches the heart of George. He becomes acquainted with her and she often spends a pleasant hour with him. One night, gazing out of his library window, he discovers the school on fire. He tries to arouse his valet and finds him in a drunken stupor. His first thought is of Rose. Forgetting his own heretofore helpless condition, before he realizes it, he is on his way to her rescue. He rushes into the building and taking the crippled child from Rose's arms, brings it to safety. He is about to return into the building for Rose, but is prevented by the firemen, who save her. Love hath wrought a miracle. George Fairchild, well and strong again, asks Rose to become mistress of the Fairchild Estate.

CASEY AT THE BAT (Jan. 1).—The Mudville B. B. Club has one sure winner, Casey, the idol of the fans and the admiration of the ladies. Kitty, a housemaid, and Mary, a cook, can see nothing but Casey. Grady, a mere policeman, is his rival for Kitty's love.

Mudville and Hicksville Clubs are to play their final game for the championship. Casey's first hit is a home run. Mudville cheers him to the echo. In the last half of the ninth inning, Mudville is at the bat, two men on bases and two out. "Casey at the bat," shouts the crowd. He takes his place with all the confidence of a hero. With a cheering salute to the Mudville rooters, "Watch me boys"! he strikes out. The game is over, the score is, Hicksville 9, and Mudville, 7. Casey is a fallen idol.

He makes a lone sneak to Kitty's home. She has already heard of his overthrow. He peeks through a window as the rain descends in torrents and beholds Grady, his rival, being feted and petted by Kitty and the cook.

THE ADVENTURE OF THE COUNTERFEIT BILLS (Jan. 2).—The banks have discovered that there are counterfeit bills in circulation. Lambert Chase, the famous detective, is brought into service and he learns that the only bank whose notes or bills have not been counterfeited, is the Reliance Bank.

Upon further investigation, he finds that their largest cash depositor is one Rochester, who is proprietor of a large department store. Detective Chase starts with this clue and instructs Walton, Chief of the Secret Service, to secure a position in the store as a manager of one of the departments. With strong recommendations, Walton has no trouble in becoming an employee of the store. He soon finds out that Rochester is making larger daily deposits in the Reliance Bank than he is taking in at his store. Chase visits Rochester's place as a building inspector. Showing his badge, he is allowed to inspect the building. In the cellar he discovers a part of it partitioned off by brick walls, with no evident means of admission. He concludes that the entrance must be from the top, through Rochester's private office. He bores an augur hole through the floor of the office, through which he runs a combustible fuse. He ignites it and hurries upstairs to the private office and calmly talks to Mr. Rochester on the defects of his building. While they are talking, smoke is seen coming from the floor. Walton, also present, feigns surprise, says the place is on fire. Rochester, greatly excited, throws aside a rug from the floor, opens a trap door and is about to descend, when Chase draws his revolver and tells him to halt. Walton arrests Rochester on the charge of counterfeiting. Lambert Chase goes down through the trap door and there discovers the counterfeiting plant. When searched, several of the counterfeit bills are found in the pockets of the accused man and his guilt is undeniably fastened upon him.

MR. BOLTER'S NIECE (Jan. 3).—Mr. Benjamin Bolter has for his neighbor, Lavinia Racey, a spinster of uncertain age. They are good friends, and in their hearts admire each other, but have both come to an age when they are afraid of themselves. Mr. Bolter's young niece, Pet, comes to spend a few ways with him and makes things lively for her uncle, who is unused to children. He introduces her to Lavinia, who takes quite a notion to the child. Talking to Lavinia through the garden fence between Bolter and Lavinia, Pet becomes fascinated with Lavinia's false curls and ends by pulling one off. When Bolter scolds, she howls and he has to capitulate. The next morning when Bolter complains of the lack of a button on his trousers, she, seeing Lavinia sewing in her garden, catches up the trousers and rushes off and into the garden and requests her to sew the button for her poor uncle, who has no one to look after him. Finally, she makes herself ill with eating green apples and in his distress he sends for Lavinia to help. Her kindness and tenderness to the child break down the barrier of his reserve and he proposes to her to make his lonely life a heyday of sunshine and happiness. Lavinia agrees by falling into Bolter's arms. Pet, whom they suppose to be asleep, sits up and says, "Oh, I saw you! Goody! goody! goody!"

A BIT OF BLUE RIBBON (Jan. 4).—Senor is only a horse, a thoroughbred, and winner of many blue ribbons. On account of old age, Jim Hartwell, the ranch owner, orders Steve, an employee, to take the old horse into the foothills and shoot him. Kitty, Hartwell's daughter, loves old Senor and claims him for her personal property. Steve loves Kitty and refuses to shoot the horse. In anger, Hartwell discharges him. The ranch owner, mounting his horse, leads Senor to the foothills. He takes the bit of blue ribbon which Kitty had tied in Senor's foretop, and throws it aside. Just as he raises his revolver to shoot, he sees a Mexican creeping towards his horse in the act of stealing it. He turns his attention towards the thief, who shoots Hartwell. Steve appears, and fires at the Mexican, who in turn, shoots Steve and escapes. Steve, not seriously wounded, turns his attention to Mr. Hartwell. The Mexican makes his way afoot across the hills and comes across a party of range riders. He notifies them that Hartwell is dead and that he saw Steve shoot him.

Steve is found bending over Hartwell. Mr. Hartwell is taken back to his ranch and Steve is delivered to the sheriff. Hartwell regains consciousness, but has lost all recollection of what has happened. Kitty tries in vain to make him recall the incidents of the shooting. He suddenly catches sight of Senor and immediately regains his memory and declares the innocence of Steve and the guilt of the Mexican.

Kitty has learned that the sheriff and the ranchmen are about to hang Steve for the crime. She rushes from the house, mounts old Senor and is soon riding wildly to Steve's rescue. On her way, she is intercepted by the Mexican and thrown from her horse. He jumps on Senor's back and tries to make his escape in the opposite direction. She hastens on foot to stay Jim's execution and reaches there just in time to save him. Steve is released and the men hastily go in pursuit of the Mexican, whom they capture and condemn to death. Confronted with the evidence of his guilt, the bit of blue ribbon, which he had picked up when he shot Hartwell and dropped when he stopped Kitty on her way to Steve's rescue, he confesses and is sentenced to death.

ESSANAY.

REQUITED LOVE (Dec. 31).—Lord Darlington is engaged to Ruth who is a splendid dancer. She is requested to dance at a social function and complies willingly. During the dance Lord Darlington rushes up to her and stops her from continuing. Ruth leaves the ball room with her parents and returns home. Lord Darlington reaches Ruth's home at the same time the family arrive, tells Ruth that he will break his engagement with her if she continues to dance for the amusement of everybody. Ruth, a true American woman, tells him that "were she to lose all the titles in the world, still she would dance." She forsakes society for a professional career, and is given an engagement almost immediately. During one of the performances she sprains her ankle, a doctor rushes to the stage and has her taken to her home where he treats her. His continual calling and treating her finally leads to their falling in love. She finally marries him.

SEEING IS BELIEVING (Jan. 1).—Mortimer Gregg, a blind millionair, is seated at the table partaking of his morning repast. His servants make his affliction profitable by helping themselves to the best in the house. At the office his clerks take undue advantage and talk and gossip among themselves all day. A few days later, Gregg's physician calls at the office, where he is ushered in by a conscientious stenographer, who is the only one of the office force who sympathises with her employer. Later an examination is made and the doctor gives assurance that Gregg's sight will be restored. After the operation, which proves successful, he requests the doctor to keep secret the fact of his restored sight. The following morning at the breakfast table, Gregg sees the butler help himself to the wine. He discharges him. In his room he finds his valet going through his overcoat and wearing one of his new suits. He, also, is discharged. Gregg is then driven to his office, where the bookkeeper hands him a paper to sign. Reading it over he realizes it is a check made out to the bookkeeper for $10,000. He signs it and notifies the police. He then enters the outer office and sees his negligent clerks taking advantage of his supposed blindness. The officers arrive and arrest the bookkeeper. The faithful stenographer is then called into his private office and rewarded with a proposal of marriage.

THE MINER'S REQUEST (Jan. 2).—Leonie Davis, her sweetheart, Tom, and her father are seated at the breakfast table in a small cabin in the far West. Davis departs for work at the mine, while Tom strolls down the bank of the river in search of gold. Davis is met at the mine by a young fellow who presents him with a note from a friend of his in the East asking him to give the bearer a job. Davis takes the young fellow to his home where he is introduced to Leonie. That same afternoon an accident happened at the mine and Davis is seriously injured. The Easterner makes a record breaking ride for the doctor. During his absence Leonie's father writes a dying request that she marry Tom one month after his death. The girl tells Tom she does not love him and that she could never marry him. The doctor arrives too late, for Davis is dead. One month later Leonie marries the man she does not love. The same day the young Easterner tells her of the great world outside and asks her to run away with him. She consents. Leonie packs her belongings and leaves the house. Walking through the lane near the river she spies him robbing the gold sluice. She returns to the house, secures a revolver and demands the stolen gold. She then forces him to leave the country. Realizing now that she had nearly lost a good husband for a thief, she returns to her home and awaits, with open arms, Tom's return.

WHEN SOUL MEETS SOUL (Jan. 3).—A sarcophagus is sent to Professor Delaplace by his old friend Andrews, traveling to Egypt. Andrews, in a letter to the Professor, explains that the mummy is in a perfect state of preservation, this being the reason he has set it. Delaplace, with the aid of his assistant, removes the solid stone cover. Feeling among the wrapping, entwining the body, Professor Delaplace finds an ancient parchment, which tells of the fair Princess Charazel vowing to live through the ages to find her lost lover. Enchanted by the visions the ancient sarcophagus brings to his mind. Delaplace sinks back in his chair and gradually falls asleep. The sarcophagus slowly dissolves and the Princess Charazel is seen awakening. The scene then again dissolves and we find ourselves in the beautiful land of Egypt, the home of the lotus flower, and the flowing Nile. Professor Delaplace, transformed into Arames, the handsome lover of the fair Princess Charazel, is seated beside her couch. He tells of his infinite love, and they pledge eternal vows. The call of war takes Arames from her. On his return from battle a feast is given in his honor. Escorting the Princess to the great banquet hall the honored Arames seats himself beside her. Becoming infatuated with a young slave girl, Arames showers her with caresses and incites the jealousy of the Princess, who swears by the God of Death, Osiris, to die. Realizing his mistake Arames dashes after the fleeing Princess only to find that she has killed herself before the graven image. Delaplace, awakening, goes slowly to the sarcophagus and, kneeling beside it, prays for the soul of the woman he loved back in the dim ages.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE MAID (Jan. 4).—Jim Clay, a rough Western ranchman, kisses his daughter goodbye, and departs for the town saloon. Entering, he sees four of his comrades finishing a game of cards. Broncho Billy, one of them, wins all the money. Clay exits and seats himself on a barrel in front of the place. Broncho, with his winnings, departs from the saloon, meets Clay and together they proceed to the ranchman's home. Broncho is introduced to Clay's charming daughter, who at the time of their arrival is preparing the noon-day meal. The ranchman and Broncho engage in a game of cards. Broncho detects Davis taking some cards from his boot. A fight ensues in which the ranchman is shot in the head and Broncho in the leg. The daughter hearing the tumult, rushes into the room to aid her father.

SUPERVISION OF MR. ANDERSON, ASSISTED BY A CAREFULLY TRAINED COMPANY

Broncho has escaped. Crawling on his hands and knees he finally reaches the stable where he manages to climb into an oat bin. The girl thinking only of her wounded father, secures a revolver, and tracks Broncho by the drops of blood. Finding him in an exhausted condition, she drags him into a store-cellar and washes and bandages his wound. Later, when Broncho has almost recovered from his wound, she gives him a revolver and tells him to go. Clay swears vengeance. Seeing Broncho leave the cellar he rushes after him. His daughter, fearful for her father's safety, because of Broncho's quick draw, intercepts and prevents him from being shot. She then tells her father that she loves Broncho. Seeing that it would be madness to bear grievance against Broncho, Cay shakes hands with him and the feud is ended.

THE POWER OF SILENCE (Dec. 30).—Synopsis of this two-reel special subject was published in the advertisement of the General Film Company on pages 1206 and 1207 of the issue dated December 21.

A MOTHER'S STRATEGY (Dec. 30).—Guy Reeves, to recuperate from illness, goes to a farm, where he meets Lois, the daughter and discovers that she has a wonderful voice. The young people fall in love. Guy persuades the parents of Lois to allow her to go to the city and have her voice tested. The parents finally agree and Lois takes up her abode in the city. Guy returns to his home and tells his mother of his love. She is angry and refuses to accept Lois. Guy becomes angry and leaves the house. He takes up his abode in the cheap boarding-house that shelters Lois. The pampered son finds the grind and hard work almost intolerable. In a discouraged mood he receives a letter from his mother worded so as to make him more discontented.

Guy decides to leave Lois and go back to his own life. He writes her a few lines asking her to forgive him and leaves. Lois, returning from a singing lesson, finds his note. She is distracted. She rushes to his room and finds the letter which Guy had received from his mother. She dons her wraps and goes to the Reeve's home. She pleads with Mrs. Reeves to allow Guy to return to her. She pours out the agony of her soul to the older woman who simply has a servant show her out. Lois turns to her and tells her some day she will have her revenge.

Three years pass. Guy has married Millicent Hartley, is successful and respected. One evening Mrs. Reeves, Millicent and Guy go to the opera. Guy is fascinated and startled by the new prima-donna and recognizes her as Lois. He finds he is still in love with Lois. Months pass and it i scommon talk that Guy is infatuated with the singer. He neglects his business, is gruff to his wife and rude to his mother. Mrs. Reeves then decides to appeal to Lois. She goes and is laughed at by Lois, who tells her this is her revenge and that she intends to keep Guy her victim. Then suddenly Mrs. Reeves brings in Millicent's little baby and taking it from the arms of the nurse places it in Lois's arms. She places the baby back in the grandmother's arms and tells her gently that she will send Guy back to his family. Mrs. Reeves attempts to thank her, but Lois silences her and bids her go. Then Lois writes a few lines to Guy, telling him that he must never see her again and throws herself sobbing into a chair.

THE BRAVERY OF DORA (Dec. 31).—Dora Miller and her father together with Juan, a young halfbreed, live peacefully at their ranch along the Rio Grande. Juan is in love with Dora and she is not averse to him. One morning while the little family is seated at breakfast, shots are heard outside. A party of U. S. soldiers has been attacked by Mexican troops and retreating as they fight, finally taking refuge in the Miller homestead. The doors and windows are barricaded and a sharp fight ensues. Juan, the halfbreed, refuses at first to fire against the people whose blood runs in his veins, but at last infuriated by the sight of a wound received by Dora, he grabs the rifle and begins firing furiously. He is thus engaged as the Mexican troops break into the house and is captured by them and locked in an upstairs room.

The commanding officer of the Mexican forces promises to shoot Juan the next morning. That night, however, Dora manages to get into the room where Juan is confined and smuggles to him a rope with which he escapes. The next morning, the Mexican officer sends for Juan to carry out his threat of shooting him and much to the surprise of the guard when the room is opened, out steps Dora. Furious at the escape of his victim, the Mexican promptly arrests Dora's father and tells her that should her half-breed lover not return by afternoon, the father will take his place in front of a firing squad.

In the meantime, Juan is hastening at breakneck speed on a horse taken from the Mexicans, to secure aid. Arriving at the camp of an American patrol, he gets the sergeant in charge to accompany him and with the entire troop of cavalry rushes back to the Miller homestead, arriving just in time to prevent the execution of the old man by the Mexicans.

JOHN ARTHUR'S TRUST (Jan. 2).—John Arthur, lawyer, has in his care the immense fortune left by Chas. Bristol for his daughter Lottie. So great was old Bristol's confidence in the young lawyer, that he made it a condition of his will that John could use his own discretion in finally turning the money over to his daughter. The income she is to receive, but the principal is to remain under the watchful eye of John Arthur until Lottie is married to a man who in John's estimation would be capable of managing the fortune.

John has seen the girl on several occasions relative to business and her beauty appealed to him although thoughts of love never enter his mind. But when a foreigner Count Borni comes and courts Lottie, John becomes conscience of feelings he don't understand. Just as a matter of business, however, he writes to a London firm inquiring about the Count's reputation. He learns that the Count is a profligate and a bankrupt. John finds that Lottie has already lost her heart to the Count and all his warnings are in vain. The Count, of course, expects Lottie's millions will be turned over to him upon their marriage, but John refuses to relinquish his control of the money.

Lottie's governess is crafty. She proposes to the Count that she will get the money from John providing he (the count), will pay her $10,000 after his marriage to Lottie. The Count accepts the proposition and signs an agrement. The governess poisons Lottie's mind against John and Lottie accuses him of wishing to control her fortune for his own personal reasons. Angered, John relinquishes the fortune to Lottie. The Count's plans are somewhat disordered by a sudden notion on Lottie's part to be married abroad. John learns of a passage to Europe suddenly booked by Lottie and the Count. He realizes that he loves the girl. He does not hope to win her, but determines to prevent the Count's taking advantage of her innocence. The news comes an hour before sailing time. Too late to arrange for first class passage, but driven by grim purpose, he buys a steerage ticket. He meets the Count, Lottie and Governess while they are on tour of the ship. Arriving at their destination he follows the Count to a gamoling house in the hopes of finding an opportunity to expose him. The Count loses money supplied by the governess but boasts to his friends about his conquest of an heiress. He holds Lottie's picture up to the gaze of the gamblers. He does not see John until John snatches the picture from him and knocks him down. A duel is fought in which John is wounded. The next day Lottie overhears an argument between the Count and the governess which opens her eyes. She finds John in a hospital. On his recovery Lottie makes him her guardian for life.

JUST OUT OF COLLEGE (Jan. 3).—The story starts showing a busy office of the city's law firm, Strand and Clayton. A number of typewriters are at work when the head of the firm walks through and into his private office. Seating himself he opens the morning paper and the following paragraph catches his eye: "Wm. Strand, Jr., who completed his law course at Yale last year has been admitted to the bar." A few moments later the other member of the firm, Mr. Clayton enters and thrusts a paper into Mr. Strand's hand pointing out the following paragraph: "Among the young men admitted to the bar yesterday was James Clayton, Jr., son of a well known lawyer of this city." While both proud fathers are discussing the two young men enter. After the congratulations are over they seat themselves before the older men and suggest to them they be taken into the firm as junior members. Both fathers at once reject the idea declaring that they should shift for themselves a while and prove their ability to make good.

After the boys argue the matter they finally go out. As they close the door an idea strikes young Clayton—why not they, too, open an office Strand & Clayton on the same floor.

The next morning we find the boys installed in their new place of business. Client after client visit them—one continuous stream, while further down the hall the offices of Strand & Clayton Sr., are forsaken. At non hour as they leave together for lunch they pass up the hall and the sign on the new office catches their eye—"Strand & Clayton—Lawyers." They enter. Inside everything is busy—the girl at the typewriter is working away on documents and the office boy offers them chairs to wait until "the boss can see them." When the client is ushered out they are admitted into the office and find the boys convulsed with laughter at the success of their scheme. At once the older men proceed to demand an explanation insisting that the sign on the door be changed, but the boys are obstinate and declare that business is too flourishing to warrant any change. After some persuasion, however, the fathers succeed in deciding them to enter the old firm as partners. The last scene shows the painter changing the old sign to Strand, Clayton, & Sons. As the two boys have sisters they soon become brothers-in-law.

THE LOVE TOKEN (Jan. 4).—Ed Turner is a California gold miner. Mary Simpson, daughter of a miner, is in love with Ed and gives him a locket containing her picture. One day while Ed is working in his mine, two bandits spy him and plan to rob him of the gold. Mexican Pete wants to murder him but Baker has a better plan. He drugs some whiskey they have and give him a drink. Having a weakness for whiskey Turner takes several drinks. He suddenly becomes ill and drops insensible. The robbers then take his gold and the locket which was given to him by Mary, and depart for their hiding place in the mountains. On their way, however, they happen to see old man Simpson making his way to his cabin and follow him. Looking through a window in the cabin, they see him lock his gold in a chest. They enter, bind and gag the old man and escape with the gold. When his daughter returns she found him in a helpless condition. She also discovered the locket she had given to Ed only a few days before. It had been dropped by the robbers. Suspicions immediately fall on Ed and the sheriff is notified and goes out with a posse to capture him. They finally find him asleep after having wandered about the mountain for hours in a crazed condition. He recognizes no one, until they bring him back to his mine. There his reason returns and he remembers all. Telling the sheriff of his experience with the bandits they realize that he has been drugged and robbed by the same men that stole Simpson's gold. He heads the posse in a search for the bandits and finally they come across their hiding place. A stream of smoke issues from a cave which they surround and by firing a revolver into the air, the bandits come out to ascertain the cause, one is killed, the other surrenders. The gold is recovered and Mary, knowing Ed to be innocent, returns the love token.

A GUILTY CONSCIENCE (Jan 3).—Cris Tyler passing along the street sees his wife in the company of another man. He follows them to a moving picture theater and sees them enter. Mad with jealousy he tells the ticket seller that he will shoot his wife and the man when they come out. The young lady in the ticket office becomes so frightened she tells the manager of the strange actions of the man. The manager in turn rushes on the stage and informs his patrons that a man is waiting outside to shoot his wife and the man with her and advises the couple to leave by the rear door. Immediately a couple rise to leave, then another, still another until half of the theater is empty.

ECLIPSE.

THE "ANGEL" CHILD (Dec. 25).—Little Miss Margery is a mischievous child and is never so happy as when playing pranks upon her elders. She makes a victim of her grandfather, the postman, the grocery boy, and even fastens a toy horse to the policeman's coattails, to the amusement of the passers-by. Arriving home at teatime, and not being permitted to join her mother's company on the veranda, Margery pours a tub of water on them from above. The curate evidently imagines a return of the flood and strikes out madly in an endeavor to swim to safety. What then happens to Margery can better be imagined than described.

BEAUTY SPOTS IN SOUTH WALES (Dec. 25).—Commencing with views of Tenby and its picturesque harbor, we are shown the quaint towns of Manorbier and Cenarth, Pembro Castle, now a noble ruin, and finally are taken upon an interesting visit to Mumble's Head and the Sands.

INDISPUTABLE ORIGINATORS OF COWBOY FILMS.
WE CONTINUE TO OFFER EACH WEEK MR. G. M. ANDERSON, (POPULARLY KNOWN AS "BRONCHO BILLY") IN THRILLING STORIES OF EARLY DAYS IN WESTERN AMERICA STAGED UNDER THE PERSONAL SUPERVISION OF MR. ANDERSON, ASSISTED BY A CAREFULLY TRAINED COMPANY

WOOD INDUSTRY IN FRENCH JURA (Dec. 25).—An extremely interesting film illustrating the different phases of this important industry. We are shown the cutting down of the fir trees; a mechanical saw at work; marvelous skill in woodcutting and some remarkable products in the line of fancy furniture.

A FOUR-FOOTED CUPID (Jan. 1).—Spot's master, Jack Fowler, and pretty Alice Bliss are sweethearts. They are very fond of each other and also of Spot. But, alas, one day, they have a falling out! Alice flings her engagement ring at Jack and walks away, determined never to forgive him.

The two lovers spend a very lonely afternoon, and at length each decides to write the other an apology, making an appointment for the next day, but then, suddenly remembering their former wrath, they change their minds.

Fortunately, Spot has an inspiration. He sees the letter sticking out of his master's pocket, and, taking it in his mouth, runs to mail it. He then goes to see Alice, who has left her letter on the table, and, absorbed in her sorrow, does not notice Spot as he enters the room, jumps upon the table, and, taking the letter, carries it off to the post box also.

The next day Jack and Alice receive the apologies and eagerly make their way to the appointed rendezvous. With a little further assistance from Spot, they kiss and make up, vowing on Spot's head never to quarrel again.

LAUGHING BILLY (Jan. 1).—Billy meets a pal who tells him a funny story. Billy cannot stop laughing at the joke and insists upon sharing it with everyone, including business men, washerwomen, bowling babies and even a diver at his work. Although unappreciated, the fellow keeps repeating the tale until, returning home, he meets his wife, who, resenting his foolish mirth, belabors him over the head with a broom, but Billy still laughs on.

CINES.

NEARLY LION TAMERS (Dec. 21).—Mr. Stout and Mr. Thynne are at their wits' end to obtain a square meal. They watch with envy a street performer put a lion through his tricks before a large and enthusiastic crowd, which responds generously. This looks like easy money, so they decide to try the same scheme.

They hunt around for wild beasts, but the best they can find is a donkey, which they make to resemble the "king of the jungle" by artificial means. With a lion's mask and tail the donkey appears quite ferocious, and the spectators gather in large numbers.

The performance proves a huge success until suddenly the donkey hears the roar of the real lion, and, kicking up his heels, bolts in terror, leaving his mask and other disguises behind, to the mortification of his masters and the anger of the crowd, who execute terrible vengeance upon the two impostors.

THE TRIVOLI HILLS AND THE FALLS OF ANIO (CENTRAL ITALY) (Dec. 21).—A charming travelogue subject, spreading before us the picturesque ruins along the banks of the river Anio, such as the Lucano bridge, the ancient Tomb of the Plauti, the Acque Albule and many other places of interest.

HIS "SPRING" OVERCOAT (Dec. 24).—Jenkins sees an advertisement of an extraordinary overcoat that is guaranteed to protect the wearer not only from the cold, but from all injury. This strikes him as just what he requires, and he therefore hastens to make the purchase.

Upon entering the store, he tries on the garment, which suddenly, without warning, wreaks destruction among the clerks, as the overcoat proves to be aggressive, as well as a protection. Jenkins then goes out upon the street, where he upsets a bicycle, a motor car and finally a couple of fine ladies out for a walk.

These many disasters lead him into grave difficulties with the authorities, however, and we are sorry to relate that the "spring" overcoat is now "in hock."

A LADIES' MAN (Dec. 24).—When arrayed in his best, Mr. Bloomer is almost irresistible to the fair sex and soon gains the reputation of a regular ladykiller. But his indomitable nerve and utter disregard of consequences often get him into serious difficulties, as only the film can describe.

PICTURESQUE SORRENTO (ITALY) (Dec. 24).—A series of interesting scenes in and about the town of Sorrento, showing native dress and customs and some remarkable products of the various industries. The film draws to a close with several captivating views of the Bay of Naples.

BALKAN WAR SCENES (Dec. 28).—Authentic war pictures taken upon the field of battle showing the allied armies of the Balkan States in active warfare against the Turkish forces. Vividly depicting the desperate struggle of a people long suffering from massacre and atrocities at the hands of their Turkish masters, and eager to die in attempting to drive the Mohammedan from their country. In addition to many other stirring episodes of the great conflict, we are shown the arrival of King Nicholas of Montenegro with his army at the front, the bombardment of Scutari and scenes of the battle of Varanya.

AMY'S CHOICE (Dec. 31).—Amy Martin has two suitors, Edward and George. Both are very attentive and each strives his utmost to outdo his rival in the contest for her favor.

One day Edward calls at Amy's house, and, finding her alone, decides to make the best of his opportunity. After playing tennis together and wandering through the beautiful grounds, Edward, feeling sure that he is the favored lover, takes Amy in his arms. She becomes very indignant at this and when George arrives upon the scene, gladly goes off with him.

Later, when out with a jolly crowd of young people, she decides to put her suitors to the test. Purposely dropping her handkerchief over a steep cliff, she pretends to be terribly distressed over the loss. Edward hesitates, but George bravely makes the perilous descent and soon afterward, amid the cheers of the onlookers, restores her property, thus proving his courage.

She now begins to realize that she prefers George, and the next day when Edward comes to call, she places a bundle of books under his arm, saying it is time for him to return to college.

AMONG THE ABRUZZI MOUNTAINS (CENTRAL ITALY) (Dec. 31).—Showing the ancient city of Sulmona, views of the surrounding country and several beautiful winter landscapes in the reclaimed basin of Lake Fucino.

PATHE.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 52, 1912 (Dec. 23).—Washington, D. C. The Congress of Governors in session at Richmond, Va., go to Washington to call on President Taft.

Tripoli, Tripoli. The Declaration of Peace is read to the populace.

Philadelphia, Pa. The launching of the Hudson River Day Line steamer, "Washington Irving," is attended by fifty red-headed girls from the Washington Irving High School of New York.

The Balkan War.—Tabanovce, Turkey. The Commissary Departments of the Servian Army are having their own troubles in provisioning the army, on account of the terrible condition of the roads.

Vranje, Servia. The hospital corps of the Servian army is well equipped with auto ambulances.

Vasjo, Turkey. Five thousand Albanian prisoners of war pass through this town under military escort, bound for one of the fortresses on the Servian frontier.

Skja, Turkey. The king of Montenegro lands on the captured territory and takes charge of a convoy of wounded from the field before Skutari.

Constantinople, Turkey. The international fleet of warships, representing the United States and many of the European powers, lies at anchor in the port ready to protect the foreigners in the city in the event of a Moslem uprising.

ROMEO AND JULIET (Jan. 3).—A synopsis of this special two-reel subject was published in the advertisement of the General Film Company on pages 1206 and 1207 of our last week's issue.

THE COWBOY AND THE BABY (Jan. 1).—Big Paul Devlin, riding home, first class, after accompanying a carload of cattle to the stockyards, is requested by a young mother to hold an infant while she goes for a bottle of milk to the railroad restaurant at which the train has stopped. Paul is obliging and is soon on very friendly terms with the baby. However, the train resumes its journey before the baby's mother can get back on board. Paul doesn't know what to do with the baby and the mother doesn't know what to do without it. That night Paul has all sorts of trouble in the sleeper where the baby refuses to sleep. With the baby in his arms, he gets off at his station and goes to the ranch, where he comes in for an unmerciful guying. Fortunately for Paul the baby's mother, in tears, reaches her destination which happens to be the ranch on which Paul is working.

THE FRAME-UP (Jan. 2).—Long Snake, a half-breed Indian who aspires to the hand of a ranch owner's daughter, frames up evidence of theft upon Joe Redding, the favored suitor. In a card game he lifts a wallet from the ranchowner's pocket and places it in Joe's boot. The boss discovers his loss and the party submits to a search. The wallet, of course, is discovered on Redding and a lynching is in order. However, the half-breed's squaw has witnessed the frame-up and rewards Joe's numerous kindnesses to her by saving his life with her evidence.

THE DOCTOR'S BLIND CHILD (Jan. 4).—There are two families concerned in this film: Dr. Tilford, Mrs. Tilford, and their little daughter, who is blind; Tony Rizzo, a worthless scow captain, his patient wife and their delicate infant. Dr. Tilford cures the infant's complaint without charge and the mother is deeply grateful. While Dr. Tilford is away at the hospital his blind daughter accidentally sets the house afire. She makes her escape unaided and wanders crying down the street while the household and the firemen are searching for her. Rizzo sees her and notes the diamond locket she is wearing. He setzes it and then decides to hold the girl prisoner on his scow, hoping to get a ransom. Mrs. Rizzo recognizes the girl and takes her back to the Doctor's residence but not without first having to forcibly overcome Tony's objections. Tony's injury brings him to Dr. Tilford at the hospital. The doctor discovers the necklace. His desire for vengeance and his sworn duty struggle for preference. The call of duty wins, however, and he learns that, in reward, his daughter has been returned to him.

C. G. P. C.

THE CAPRICES OF THE KING (Dec. 31).—History leaves us no more vivid example of the faithlessness of man than the love affair of Louise de la Valliere and Louis XIV, King of France. Louise loved the King, and he loved her for a time. The episode is enacted in this film by a cast of star players in the country in which the tragedy actually occurred, and in a manner which makes it the last word in realistic photography.

BETWEEN TWO GIRLS (Jan. 3).—Whiffles, the funny man with the funny name, loves Barbara and Dulcie, but he knows not whom he loves the better. Perhaps he would have been able to make a choice had not the two girls called upon him at the same time. Whiffles is at his best in a story of this character and his interpretation of the awkward lover is particularly amusing.

SAND HOPPERS (Jan. 3).—An important addition to our growing Oceanographic series. Microscopic views of an almost unknown inhabitant of the seashores.

KALEM.

THE PEACE OFFERING (Dec. 30).—Arthur, who has been out the night before, is late to breakfast, much to the annoyance of his wife. When he finally makes his appearance in the dining room he finds that he has no appetite, and after a stormy scene he leaves for the office.

Arthur's grouch hangs on until he encounters his friend, John. Both are ardent baseball fans, and a discussion of the game revives the husband's spirits to such an extent that he decides to send his wife a box of flowers as a peace offering. John recalls the fact that he wishes to send a remembrance to his affinity, and both men visit the florist. Each prepares a note. Arthur's reads: "Dear Little Wife:—Please forgive me and accept this little token of my love. Your loving husband, Arthur." John's note reads: "Sweetheart:—Accept these flowers with my love. Will call this evening if I can get away from my wife. Your honeybunch."

John and Arthur start for the ball park, where they join other rabid enthusiasts in reviling the umpire and "rooting" for the home team. The unfortunate boy, in delivering the flowers, mixes the notes, through peculiar circumstances, with disastrous results. The two fans, however, are ultimately able to establish their sincerity.

WHY TIGHTWAD TIPS (Dec. 30).—Tightwad decides that tipping is a nuisance and he proceeds to inaugurate an anti-tipping crusade by setting a noble example. The former recipients of tips spread the news, and Tightwad has the time of his life. Starved at cafes, ignored in barber shops and made generally miserable, he is obliged to go back to the old order of things.

THE MISSION OF A BULLET (Jan. 1).—Bill and Tom live on a ranch, and each, unknown to the other, is in love with Alice. She refuses the proposals of both men, and they decide to visit the gold fields.

After several weeks of unsuccessful prospecting they become discouraged. Bill takes out a photograph of Alice, and Tom examines a faded flower which he has preserved. Each sees the keepsake of the other, and for the first time they discover that they are rivals. A quarrel ensues, and the men separate. Tom's food supply becomes exhausted and when he attempts to steal from Bill he is detected, and a running fight over the rocks takes place. A bullet from Bill's revolver discloses a vein of gold. Tom holds up a flag of truce, makes known the discovery, and the men renew their companionship to develop the new claim.

When they have acquired a goodly fortune the men secretly write to Alice, telling her of their good luck and renewing their proposals. Receiving no response, they abandon their cabin and set forth for the village, each steadfastly keeping his secret. As they enter the town a wedding procession passes, and Tom and Bill discover the bride to be Alice. Their eternal friendship is sealed.

A TREACHEROUS SHOT (Jan. 3). — Delphine's father, Major Erskine, wishes her to marry John Chester, the owner of a neighboring plantation, but the girl has been fascinated by a visiting Spanish gentleman, Roman D'Arville, and will not listen to her father. The major threatens to send Delphine to a convent, and she therefore determines to elope with Roman. In order to get out of the house she disguises herself as a negress and induces her old mammy to accompany her.

Meanwhile two slaves from the plantation where Roman is stopping have escaped, and the owner, with a company of men and dogs, starts in pursuit. The searchers capture Delphine and the old negress just as Roman appears. The latter, believing Delphine to be a mulatto girl, insults her, thus permitting the young woman to see his true character.

Chester appears on the scene in time to protect Delphine, and the two men decide to fight a duel. Delphine hastens home and sends her father to prevent the duel. When Roman sees the approaching major he fires while Chester's back is turned and wounds the young southerner in the arm.

Roman, finding that his presence is no longer desired, leaves the country, and the major's hope is realized when Delphine, appreciating the sterling character of Chester, gives him her promise.

THE FLAG OF FREEDOM (Jan. 4). — Faith Trumbull is in love with a Continental officer, Captain Strong, but her father, a Tory, will not countenance the match. He wishes to make an alliance between his daughter and Blent, a British officer. Strong, coming to the house, sees through the window that Trumbull and Blent are consulting papers, which he fears contain some plot against the Continental army. When he attempts to secure the papers he is captured, but escapes, with the aid of Faith. Pursued by the British, Strong reaches the home of Betsy Ross, a friend of Faith's. Betsy, who is engaged with the making of the first American flag, conceals Strong in a chest.

Trumbull and Blent bury the papers, but Faith watches them and secures the documents. She is startled to find plans of the Continental camp and particulars for the capture of General Washington. Faith hastens to Washington's headquarters and gives the general timely warning. Shen then proceeds to Betsy's house.

Meanwhile Betsy has gallantly driven away Strong's pursuers with musket, and when Faith arrives Betsy secures a minister. The minister is ready to perform the ceremony when he calls attention to the fact that another witness is necessary. At that moment General Washington arrives to learn of the progress of Betsy's work, and he gladly consents to act as a witness, together with Betsy.

THE CRIME OF CARELESNESS (Dec. 30).—Mr. Waters, the owner of a large woolen mill, is careless about having the fire exits kept clear. The factory inspector listens to Mr. Waters' promise to right matters and does not report the case. Tom Watts, an employee in the mill, breaks the rule which prohibits smoking. Thus the three are to blame.

Tom Watts and Hilda Fox, another employee of the mill, are lovers. With the wedding only one day off—Tom carelessly throws the lighted match, with which he had lit his cigarette, into a pile of rubbish in the basement of the mill.

The fire started gains headway so rapidly that Tom is barely able to make his escape up the new blazing stairway. Meanwhile the smoke has penetrated to all parts of the mill; the hundreds of employees are panic stricken and rush wildly for the fire exits, only to find them locked or cluttered with heavy boxes and bales which make them impractical for use. Tom comes upon a crowd of them at one of these doors, and hastily grabbing a fire axe, cuts a way for them through a wooden partition. Upon escaping to the street he finds that Hilda is still in the mill which is now blazing from every window.

In a series of thrilling episodes Tom finds the unconscious Hilda and carries her to the street, where he acknowledges his blame in setting the mill afire. The employees nearly mob him and he is driven out of the town. His name is heralded among other mill owners and he is unable to secure work. This, added to the fact that Hilda was badly crippled in the fire, drives him to contemplating suicide from which he is prevented by the timely arrival of Hilda with a letter from Waters in which he acknowledges his own blame as well as Tom's and invites Tom to return to the new factory, both having learned a needed lesson.

FOR HER (Dec. 31).—John Hart, a counterfeiter, is arrested in a restaurant while dining with his fifteen year old daughter Mary. He succeeds in concealing the fact from her by excusing himself for a moment and leaves a note and money for her wants, to be delivered to her by Jimmy, the old waiter who had served them a long time.

Some years later when Hart is released from the Federal Prison, his first thought is of Mary whom he seeks in the last place he saw her, the restaurant where Jimmy works. Fate favors him as Mary is there with her husband one Jack Hanley who has defied his father's will by marrying Mary who had become the elder Hanley's stenographer. Hart does not disclose his identity knowing the disgrace it would cast on his daughter.

Things had gone poorly with Mary and Jack and they were reduced to sore straits—but Jimmy was their friend and often made their simple orders more sumptuous by strategy.

Old Hart at once returned to his counterfeiting—and therefore Stoll, the secret service man was sent out to find him as before. Meanwhile old Hanley had relented having been so harsh and had a private detective looking for his son and daughter-in-law.

Hart in disguise frequented the restaurant where Jack and Mary took their meals and tried to find a way of relieving their financial distress but without success.

Stoll, knowing Hart's love for his daughter and remembering their former place of dining, sought the old counterfeiter there. The detective failed to penetrate Hart's disguise but Jimmy, the old waiter, had not, and gave Hart warning to go. The latter, in trying to bluff the detective stopped to light a cigar and in doing so used the peculiar mannerism of the engraver unconsciously rubbing the steel shavings from between his fingers. The moment he had gone Stoll remembered the mannerism and followed but Hart escaped through a ruse.

Old Hanley, having located Jack and Mary, gives them a splendid dinner and incidentally a fifty dollar tip to old Jimmy of whose kindness Jack and Mary had told him.

The closing scenes mark the end of Hart's misspent life and are full of tragic pathos.

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK AND THE BIG TREES OF CALIFORNIA (Jan. 1).—The four horse coach wheels you out on Inspiration Point and there lies Yosemite before you. Look down the valley at the height of the massiveness of El Capitan, the largest rock in the world. Yonder is Bridal Veil Falls with rainbows wavering in the wind-kissed mist that break and scatter with each guest of air. The Half Dome looms up in the distance. Let us descend into the valley and glance at Mirror Lake, North Dome, Vernal and Nevada Falls and up the trail to Glacier Point where from its dizzy height one looks down upon a lawn of mountain tops, snow covered and gaunt. How bleak and bare. Let us again descend into the valley where the sunshine lies and rest ourselves at the little village of Yosemite and watch the clouds nestle down for the night on Cloud's Rest, away off yonder and then you have seen Yosemite and the Big Trees of Mariposa, California.

HOW THEY GOT THE VOTE (Jan. 1).—A society leader, a suffragette, tries to win England's most prominent political figure to advocate her cause: but at sight of her badge, inscribed with "Votes for Women" he incontinently beats a retreat and the other political personages present seem inclined to follow his example.

Going home the lady finds a young man much in love with her daughter and as he is a mere man and not much in favor of the suffrage she sends him about his business. Contemplating suicide he runs in with a magician of the East who takes him to his place and gives him two little statuettes, one called "Progress" which sets things in motion, another called "Sleep" which produces inaction. He also indicates to the young man how these may be used to his advantage. The latter goes out and coming first to London Bridge holds up the second of the statuettes, instantly putting the traffic at that important point soundly asleep. Everything comes to a standstill. He repeats this process in Picadilly Circus where the crowded thoroughfare becomes paralyzed and perfectly still. Then at the bank, thus tying up three important centres in London. Of course the whole city is in an uproar, the matter is reported to the great political leader and then the young man offers to start things going in the city on one condition. The great man must adopt the suffrage idea and wear its banner. Persuaded by the other prominent figures he reluctantly consents and the young man eying him from the roof of the House of Parliament, holds up the "Progress" statuette and immediately the city comes to life again. Of course he gets the girl and of course the suffragette gets the vote.

THE RUNNING AWAY OF DORIS (Jan. 3).—Doris is a little chorus girl who marries a young clergyman in a suburban town and when she comes to his house she finds that it is run as it has been before the wedding, by his two sisters who order the meals and direct the household affairs in general. She tries to take a hand in the matter but is skillfully overruled and an appeal to her husband produces only a laughing admonition not to worry.

After the arrival of the baby matters still continued to be beyond her control, even the clothing and welfare of the child being settled without her consent. Running from the house after one of these encounters with one of the sisters she meets her old chorus girl friends, goes to the theater with them behind the scenes and forgets all about the time and returns to the house late and after the baby had been put to sleep. Of course the sisters refuse to allow her to see the child and she strongly appeals to her husband. He is still unaware of the true state of affairs and when she finds that he will not help her, she takes the baby secretly from the cradle and steals from the house to rejoin her friends of the stage. Then the clergyman does wake up, sends his sisters to another place of abode and brings back his little wife to be mistress of her own house.

THE REDMAN'S BURDEN (Jan. 4).—Big Bear and Silver Fawn have been made man and wife by the good priest of the mission and their dwelling place became a dilapidated old house that modern civilization had neglected to tear down. The land had been used by their forefathers from time unknown so these two lived, loved and slept their days away, contented to dip no further into the mysteries of civilization than to abide in a wooden house.

One day some men came in a big touring car and said "get out of here. We do not want you around." They handed Big Bear a typewritten letter—"The law says this property is mine." "The Law—Who is he? I no know him. My forefathers say this land mine." But the law—so Big Bear and Little Silver Fawn mount their horses and turn their backs on civilization and the old shack is burned down. Civilization had taken their home and farm away from them but they still had the wild game to kill as in days of old. But the same man, John Randall, came along with the authority of the law back of him and said—"You cannot hunt here and took his gun away from him.

And hate was in the heart of Big Bear, while Silver Fawn trembled at his black looks, but the fire that burns and destroys sometimes deals out retribution as well for the blazing sparks from the burning house set the pine needles aflame and soon the forest is ablaze. And so it happens that John Randall catches his foot in a bear trap chained to a huge tree and set by his own men. Thus he is held a chained prisoner while the flames from the forest creep closer and closer to him. His cries for help reach the ears of Silver Fawn who comes to him and sees her enemy begging for help but her strength is too weak to open the trap so back she goes through flame and smoke, breathing in the death laden air and suffocating smoke till she reaches the side of Big Bear whose heart is softened by her pleading.

He saves his prisoner and brings him safely home but poor little Silver Fawn has gone into a happier hunting ground beyond the laws of a cruel civilization. The redman keeps silent over her dead body by the slowly dying camp fire.

THE PALACE OF FLAME

Full Line of Superb Printing

With the eminent Italian Tragedian Zacconi and the original "Fall of Troy" cast

READ WHAT THEY SAY:

CALDER JOHNSTONE—Morning Telegraph:
Masterly Italian production—sure to sell widely—massive scenes—most remarkable reproduction of a fire that motion pictures have yet realized.

LOUIS REEVES HARRISON—M. P. World:
The most remarkable view of conflagration ever shown on the screen—a masterpiece of accurate timing and ingenuity—the ending of the play is one of great power and unqualified moral beauty—magnificent and well-chosen scenic effects—the acting is remarkable.

GORDON TRENT—Telegraph:
Some picture—greatest fire scene I ever saw—acting wonderful—photography superb—story ideal—Zacconi held me spellbound—I can see the public wildly clamoring to view this film—they ought to—here's to you, Itala, my hat's off.

THE BIOSCOPE—London, Eng.:
Itala's latest film the best of all—complete destruction of a palatial mansion by fire carried out on a scale never equalled before—production lavishly mounted—a sensational success.

K. & L. WEEKLY—London, Eng.:
Without parallel for vivid realism—a triumph—undeniably a great film drama.

MELIES.

HER GREAT CHANCE (Jan. 9).—A prospector dies suddenly before the town tavern and leaves his small daughter, Ann, to be brought up by strangers. Eleven years later finds her a western beauty, the "darling of the camp." She can play poker with the best of them and luck will usually smile in her direction. One day while on her accustomed ride, she meets Smith, the gambler, who falls in love with her, and she, never having known a better man, reciprocates. Smith teaches her how to help him to cheat at cards, and their winnings are enormous until the game is discovered and they are obliged to fly. Smith is wounded, but Ann is aided in her escape by a kindly stranger whom she had aided in illness. He gives her a letter to friends in New York, who receive her as one of their own and educate her to refinement.

After three years she is an accomplished and attractive young lady. Maurice, son of her kindly benefactors, at this time ends his long estrangement with the family and returns. It takes but one month for him to win Ann's love, and with the old folks' approval, the wedding is planned. The night before the ceremony Ann hears a noise downstairs, and investigating, finds a burglar, who is none other than her old lover, Smith. Recognition is instantaneous. He threatens to expose her past unless she "comes across." Maurice comes to the rescue and ejects Smith, but the latter gives him some of Ann's love letters. It is hard for Maurice to believe Smith's story, but Ann confirms it and gives him the privilege of canceling the wedding. Never! Maurice loves her for herself regardless of her past, and nobly tears up the letters unread.

BIOGRAPH.

BILL BOGGS'S WINDFALL (Dec. 30).—Bill is employed in the carbarn of the trolley railroad, and his good nature makes him a favorite of the gang of fellow-workmen. Hence, when word is received that Bill has fallen heir to a large fortune, the boys are almost as happy as he is at the news. In his new station, does Bill forget the gang? Not much. He manages that they enjoy as much of his dream as he does himself.

A DAY'S OUTING (Dec. 30).—A party of friends go to the seashore to enjoy a day's outing. The men folks, to get rid of the women, induce them to go and take a plunge in the ocean before luncheon. This is done that the men may enjoy a quiet little game of cards. The game, however, doesn't prove very quiet, as it terminates in a duel, which the women avert by strategy in the nick of time.

THREE FRIENDS (Jan. 2).—Each night, after the day's work at the factory, the three bachelor friends met and declared anew their attachment over a social glass. They bound themselves to remain thus as long as life might last,—never to marry. But one was a traitor, while the other two were called away. A widened breach, a quarrel, fanned the resentment, but true friendship at last claimed its own.

"Imitation Is Sincerest Flattery"

ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF MORMONISM

Exclusively endorsed by the Mormon Church, and now in final stages of completion at a cost exceeding fifty thousand dollars. Will be released in FIVE REELS January next Attempts will no doubt be made to imitate this great feature film and spuriously exhibit it by unauthorized producers with a view to make some easy money. Such attempts will flatter our enterprise, but in the interests of justice, and the dignity of the moving picture business generally, we desire to warn all concerned that we are the only authorized producers of this subject, under contract with the Mormon Church, having access to Church archives, and backed by the assistance of Church officials. Any attempt to infringe will be vigorously prosecuted.

CLEANLINESS IS NEXT TO GODLINESS, BUT (Dec. 20).—Arabella the general servant is expecting a visit from her people. They arrive, but her mistress will not let her go out until the housework is done. Her relatives decide to give her a hand with her work. They use more water than discretion, and thus cause much amusing trouble.

ONLY THE CHIROPODIST (Dec. 20).—An amusing farce in which a jealous husband mistakes the Chiropodist for an unwelcome lover. When he recognizes his mistake, he is so anxious to make amends that when the lover does arrive, he mistakes him for the chiropodist.

PAT AND THE MILLINER (Dec. 27).—Pat is a young-man-about-town, and passes his days in idleness. Suddenly he is seized by an energetic spasm, and decides to go to work. The reason of this sudden burst of energy is to be found in a little milliner's shop. The charming young lady within has captivated Patrick's heart, and he decides to apply for the situation as page boy which is vacant at the shop.

A NEW USE FOR A BIKE (Dec. 27).—Sporty, the cyclist, has plenty of money, and is an extremely popular young chappie. He wins the great international cycle race from Tokio to Paris, and this noble feat of strength causes a great love for him to blossom within the heart of Sophie Pancake, a suffragette, whose charms are doubtful and whose beauty is not even skin deep. This lady follows her beloved hero wherever he goes, and he does not find her attentions to his liking.

Immediately after the race, Sporty looks out for some comfortable digs, where he may rest with all the bachelor's ease. When he obtains his flat, and seeks to get his furniture moved in, he is horror-stricken to find that the carmen have gone on strike, and that it is out of the question to settle down in his new home. Tearing his luxuriant hair and calling upon the heathen deities, Sporty hastens to his friends, who are all crack cyclists, and they agree to assist him.

Taking their bikes, they each take charge of a piece of furniture. One harnesses his bike to a grandfather's clock, and another to a chest-of-drawers, another to a table, and thus a lively procession is seen careering wildly down the street and vainly endeavoring to persuade the furniture to go quietly into its new home. The suffragette has hidden in the grandfather's clock, in the hope that she will be able to reach the new home of her adored Sporty. It is not to be wondered at when we state that the grandfather's clock never reaches its destination. An unavoidable collision with a lamppost reduces it to match-wood, whilst most of the other furniture meets a similar fate.

GAUMONT.

GAUMONT WEEKLY NO. 41 (Dec. 18). — A SAUVOMOBILE RACE.—Novel and exciting contest held in Chicago.

A PEACH FOR A PRISONER (Dec. 24).—The Marchioness de Rochfort has determined upon having her nephew and heir apparent, the Marquis Roger de Beauford, marry her god-child Dera. She acquaints him with this fact by letter and he answers, that "it is awfully good of you, Old Top, so sweet that it's sticky, but I do not fancy the idea of exiling myself from the gay court and all its pleasures." While at his country seat, Roger, in the midst of hospitalities, is mystified by a mysterious masked stranger who hands him a note: "Someone is dying of love for you. If you wish to meet her, follow the bearer of this note." Interested Roger follows and finds himself in the house of his aunt. The Marchioness tells him that she will have her way regarding his marriage to Dera and that he shall be confined on a diet of bread and water until he shall have agreed. The Marquis is not ready to thrust his shoulders into double harness, but admits that the enforced diet is worse than living on ten cents a day and one's relatives. He finds that the water is very fresh, too fresh indeed. From the window, he sees a blithesome miss, with the charm and bloom of the rural maid. He is interested. The maid sympathizes with him in his penal removal from the good things of the table, and she plunders the peach orchard, some of whose fruit she brings to the prisoner. Her passion climbs to such a point that she takes a ladder and puts it up to the window, affording means of escape. His heart is affected by these good Samaritan actions and he takes his deliverer walking in the garden. She admits that if he kisses her, he won't have to beg her pardon. Stern Auntie happens along and the Marquis learns that the girl who has assisted him was she whom his aunt wanted him to marry. He remarks he always did like peaches and that the episode is just like a motion picture play. And they were married, soon divorced and then lived happily ever after.

ZIGOTO DRIVES A LOCOMOTIVE (Dec. 26).—The employees of a railroad go on strike and the distracted station master, unable to run his train, engages Zigoto. Zigoto's many arts do not contain that of an engineer, but he goes ahead valiantly. Taking liberties with the lever, he starts at express speed and the locomotive leaves the straight and narrow path of its rails and runs through the village, getting over various impediments in its path, leaving a wake of destruction. After doing a good day's damage, Zigoto is finally confronted by the station master and the repentant employees, who then resume their labors, after having vented their anger upon Zigoto.

THE MAN WITH THE PULL (Dec. 26).—Calino and his sweetheart coo in a lonely wood. Calino walks through the forest looking for an advertisement for bank president's wanted. He is caught by horrid brigands, shut up in a tower and held for ransom. He writes to his father, asking that the latter send him $1.69 and a union suit, otherwise he, Calino, will die in captivity. The father replies, saying that he is just out of ransom money, that "art is long and I am short" and advises Calino to give an imitation of a man escaping from jail. Calino, much incarcerated, wishes that he was a musician so that he could run through the bars. He decides to hide in a mattress and hits the hay most effectively, keeping tabs on the time by the ticking of the mattress. Feigning death by suicide, he almost catches cold in his tongue when he is doused with water. To relieve his loneliness, a snake pays him a visit. Calino shows that he has more pull than an Alderman, the snake finally arriving, by the stretching process to the length of a rope. Calino descends upon the improvised rope. He returns to where he had left his sweetheart four years ago and finds that she is still waiting for him.

COUSINS OF SHERLOCK HOLMES (Jan. 1).—The police are on the lookout for Jim Spike, alias Jim Nail, a dangerous highway robber, who has been working with more or less success without being apprehended. The chief of the detective bureau puts two new detectives on the case and enjoins them to be very careful in their investigations, and not to come back without landing the prisoner. The three detectives soon come upon Edgar Carroll, in whom they immediately see a striking resemblance to Spike, the crook. They shadow Edgar from place to place, and soon his life becomes one long game of hide and seek with the detectives. Finally Edgar consults his friend and they both decide to give the detectives a merry chase. Edgar and his friend dress as women and parade the streets in their ludicrous feminine attire. They flirt with the detectives and entice them away from their duty. They do not discover the real identity of their charming feminine companions until they accidentally come upon them one evening and see them leisurely, and with enjoyment, smoking clear Havana cigars. This shocking and unfeminine spectacle arouses their suspicions, but the boys are too clever for these cousins of Sherlock Holmes and, with the aid of an automobile, give them the slip, but the detectives eventually turn up again and arrest the masqueraders. However, they do not remain long in the police station, for the real Jim Spike turns up soon as the crook who tried to snatch Jane Ellery's purse on the ferryboat. Jane is Edgar Carroll's sweetheart, and she recognizes him. A few more complications arise, however, until Edgar and the crook are seen side by side and their likeness discovered, and the cousins of Sherlock Holmes see they have been misguided in their investigations.

CANINE RIVALS (Jan. 3).—Harry and his wife, Mary, are young newlyweds and live in unalloyed bliss until Mary increases the family by adding to it a little pomeranian pup—one similar to that of her friend. Soon Mary transfers her affections from Harry to the new addition to the family, much to the chagrin and discomfort of Harry. He is denied the companionship of his wife, and instead of engaging him in morning and evening conversations she entertains her pup. When Harry sees that the little pomeranian has entirely alienated his wife's affections he decides to get some canine rivals and install them in the house. A war of jealousy ensues. There are scenes with Mary trying to feed her pet, and Harry endeavoring to feed his. Life in the house eventually becomes unendurable, and a compromise is soon effected wherein it is agreed that while Mary can keep her pet, she must not neglect her husband—that is, she is to treat him better than a dog.

FIRES OF CONSCIENCE (2 reels) (Dec. 16).—Mabel Winter, engaged to Howard Wallis, is admired very much by Count de Gironde, who also admires her father's millions. Elizabeth Deacon is in love with Howard, and she and the Count get their heads together to devise some way in which they can separate the lovers. Their chance comes when Howard is called away from a ball to attend his mother who is quite ill. He leaves a note for Mabel which is stolen and destroyed by the Count. Elizabeth tells Mabel that Howard has been paying her attention, and the girl, hurt by her sweetheart's apparent neglect, believes her. Howard writes repeatedly to Mabel, but his letters are all secured by the Count who bribes the butler to attend to his end. Mabel, thinking Howard has fallen in love with Elizabeth, accepts the Count's proposal and they are married.

Meanwhile Howard, grieved over not hearing from Mabel, reads of her marriage in the society columns of the papers and is heartbroken. He turns for consolation to the gambling tables. Sometime later, Mabel's father loses his fortune in Wall street, and the Count, tired of his wife now that her money is gone, taunts her. In a quarrel between the Count and Elizabeth, Mabel learns the truth about her estrangement from Howard and is bitterly grieved. She parts from her husband.

Five years later Mabel lives with her little son Bobby in a small tenement. The boy sells papers on the streets sometimes to help his mother. On a cold night, the little chap starts out. He is not able to make a penny, and tired out and discouraged he sinks down on the steps of a large church and falls asleep. A woman sees the little lad and drops a ten dollar gold piece in his hand.

Howard who has been playing roulette at a nearby gambling house, is refused further credit and leaves the place angrily. As he passes the church he sees the child and notes the money in his hand. As he picks up the gold piece he hears the church clock chiming the hour. It is ten o'clock—the tenth of the month—and this oddly bestowed money is a ten dollar piece. He will borrow it from the boy for a while and play it on number ten. He takes the money to the gambling house and flings it down on ten. Ten wins and wins again! But the man's conscience troubles him—he sees the little lad starving and dying on the street. Breaking the bank he pockets a small fortune and rushes back to the church. Bobby lies still and cold. Howard gathers him into his arms and carries him into the church where he is given over to the care of a kindly priest. Before the beautiful Easter altar, Howard confesses his sin to the priest, and taking out his money he scatters it upon the altar. It is tainted gold and he does not want it, it has cost the little boy's life. But Bobby is not dead, he has merely fainted from hunger. Howard takes the little fellow into his arms. Bobby tells his address and a taxi is called. It stops before the poor tenement and Howard carries the child in to its anxious mother who has been nearly crazed at his long absence. But when he sees that it is Mabel his joy knows no bounds. Mabel shows him an old paper telling of the Count's death, by duel, in Paris, and Howard knows that he has come into his own at last.

BRONCHO.

THE BURNING BRAND (2 reels) (Jan. 1).—Lieut Cole is a prime favorite at the fortress, and his love is reciprocated by Vera, the daughter of the Colonel. He asks for her hand in marriage, and the Colonel gives his consent, but when the chaplain is called in he tells them the wedding cannot take place, and, sending the girl from the room he tells them of a secret he has regarding Cole's birth.

The story as told is pictured in the film, showing Cole's father wooing and winning an Indian maid, secretly, being married by the chaplain who tells the story. At the birth of their child—Lieut. Cole—the chaplain acted as godfather and placed about the neck of the infant a gold chain.

Prior to the birth of the boy the Indians, resenting her marriage to a white man, had branded the Indian girl's forehead with a cross, and the child was born with a birthmark in the shape of a cross on its forehead.

The father was killed, and to prevent its being harmed, the Indian girl left the baby at the gate of the fort one night. The chaplain knew the parents of the infant from the gold chain about its neck. The baby was cared for by the chaplain, and as it grew up became the mascot of the fort. The chaplain had guarded the secret, and the boy became a stalwart man, enlisted as a soldier and won a lieutenancy.

The kindly old chaplain in telling his story had endeavored to be as tender and gentle as possible. Lieut. Cole, however, raged at the hand of fate which had intervened to darken his life at this time. All the wild blood of his Indian ancestors, which had lain dormant all his life, surged riotously through his veins, and he ran to his room cursing his birth and the white race. He tore the buttons and epaulets frillom his uniform and dashes them to the floor, and without a farewell to any of the people who had raised him he went to the Indian village.

His knowledge of war commanded the respect of the redskins and they made him chief, and with a fierce desire for vengeance burning in his heart he drilled the Indians until they were as perfect as the soldiers at the fort.

When the Indians went on the warpath a detachment of soldiers is sent out to check them, and instead of meeting a disorganized body of redskins they are amazed to find their opponents being led by an able chief, who maneuvers them into an ambush and slaughters them in a terrific fight.

The victorious Indians march on to the fort, and the frightened settlers hurry to the fort for protection. A messenger is despatched to the next fort for aid, as the Colonel realizes the seriousness of the situation.

The battle rages with tremendous fury, and the Colonel realizes that it is but a matter of a few hours before the fort will be taken. He sends up a flag of truce and mounts the stockade. To his astonishment, Cole comes up to speak with him, dressed in war paint and feathers. Cole agrees to withdraw the Indians if the Colonel will give him his daughter. The soldiers, lashed to fury by this request, shout their determination to fight to the death, and the Colonel draws his revolver and holding it at the head of his daughter tells Cole that he will kill her with his own hand before he will permit her to fall into Cole's hands.

The danger to the woman he really loves brings Cole to his senses, and as the angry Indians renew the attack he tries to stop them. Infuriated, the Indians turn upon him and he goes down beneath a rain of blows.

The soldiers from the next fort have received the message for help, and are coming to the rescue as fast as their horses can carry them. The Indians are surprised by the cavalry which swoops down upon them, and are soon routed. The body of the dying Cole is brought into the fort, and, forgiven for his acts, he passes away with the old chaplain's arms about him.

AMERICAN.

LONELINESS OF NEGLECT (Dec. 30).—Ralph Higgins and his wife had been married but a short time when the young husband, ambitious to better himself, moved with his bride to a deserted grant of land in the lonely hills. There was no human person near them, save an aged hermit of whom they quickly made a friend by giving him a much needed blanket.

But crops failed and the love begun so blithely faded in the everlasting glare of hopeless sunshine, and, at the hopeless word of the hermit that no crops could prosper in that alkali deadened soil, the husband left to find a new home alone. He promised to send for her.

A home he found and a land of promise. Crops grew and his stock multiplied, but he ever postponed sending for that lonesome wife back in the hills. Loneliness enveloped her and neglect ate deeply into her soul. One day a stranger came. He was nice to her and she begged him to remain. Temptation whispered and she came near answering. And then warned by the hermit, came the husband, proud and happy in his victory and joyous in thought of her innocent surprise when she could hear of it. He came—just at the right time to save her and his own happiness.

LOVE AND THE LAW (Jan. 2).—John Allen is in love with pretty Mabel Trude and the honor conferred upon Allen by the community, electing him sheriff, aids him in pressing his suit. The engagement is announced. Tom Trude, the brother of Mabel, is a sort of shiftless fellow and is exceedingly unlucky at cards. It requires but little argument on the part of the acknowledged best man of the community to win Tom over to his gang, as he hopes to make good his losses at cards in some manner other than actual labor. The postoffice is held up and the sheriff called upon to bring the perpetrators to justice. A lively encounter is followed by the escape and pursuit of one of the men. The sheriff himself takes up the chase and successfully runs down the man. To his consternation, it proves to be Mabel's brother. He passes their home with the prisoner in tow. Mabel argues and pleads, but to no avail, and she finally plays her largest card—her love, against her brother's liberty. The mental struggle of the sheriff is intense, but he wins, and as he pockets the engagement ring returned to him by Mabel, he marches his prisoner off to jail.

THE FRAUD THAT FAILED (Jan. 4).—Mrs. Wren and her pretty daughter, Mabel, lived alone on a desolate ranch. Few neighbors they had and the nearest were Ricketts and his wife. Ricketts had long coveted the fine ranch owned by Mrs. Wren and went one day to see how he might defraud her out of it. In a spirit of fake friendship, he commented on the condition of the ranch. He finally offered to buy and the lonesome woman readily agreed.

Home went Ricketts and soon returned with a fake deed, not calculating on the handsome young man who had ridden in and chatted with the two women. With that fine instinct which unconsciously suspects foul play, the ranger, after being informed the reason for the deed, asked permission to examine it. This he did with curious eyes and soon discovered the joker in the contract. Instantly animosity sprang up between them.

Off they went on horseback, down the mountainside, firing shot after shot. The ranger's horse, being the faster of the two, soon overhauled that of Ricketts. They engaged in a deadly embrace, swinging treacherously to and fro over the backs of their galloping horses. With a death grip on Rickett's throat, the ranger bore him over the side and they both fell into the dust of the road. Returning to the desolate ranch, the eyes of the ranger swept the graceful form of Mabel. He visited a few days and decided, with Mabel's permission, that he would stay forever and a day.

KEYSTONE.

THE DUEL (Dec. 30).—This film shows the adventures of Mabel in Paris. Among her numerous admirers are a count and a duke. The duke is entrusted with the care of Fido, Mabel's pet dog, and the count steals the dog when he isn't looking and sets it adrift on a plank in the ocean. The count then accuses the duke of the dastardly deed, and the men fight a comical duel, in which the duke is the victor. Among other things he proudly displays swimming medals. When the dog is sighted, however, and Mabel distractedly calls for a volunteer to rescue the pup, it develops that the duke cannot swim. He makes an effort, however, sustained by an inflated life preserver. The contrivance collapses and he is in danger of drowning, when the count plunges into the water and rescues man and dog.

MABEL'S STRATEGEM (Dec. 30).—Mabel is a stenographer, employed by Jones, who proves too attentive. Mrs. Jones walks in unexpectedly one day and interrupts her husband as he is dictating letters in a rather affectionate manner, and she insists on Mabel's discharge. She then orders him to advertise for a male stenographer. Mabel needs the job, so she dresses as a boy and gets the position. Mrs. Jones becomes very fond of the new stenographer and takes him (?) out to lunch. Jones becomes suspicious and follows her, and is so angered at the flirtation that he has his lawyers bring suit for divorce. The papers are served on Mrs. Jones, and Mabel lets her hair down, to the dismay of the husband and wife, who have been making fools of themselves, and who recognize her as the demure stenographer who first held the job.

PUNCH.

HER MISCHIEVOUS BROTHER (Jan. 2).—Count "No Account" borrows enough money to come to the land of heiresses and meets the "Queen of the Human Race" who is struggling along on a few paltry million dollars a year. The "Queen" falls for the Count's accent and her poor sweetheart finds himself relegated to the side lines with the rest of the substitutes. But the "Queen" has a kid brother who is a throw back to the ancestor who collected the change. The kid knows a "bunk" Count by instinct and sides with the rejected sweetheart. He helps him secrete himself in a suit of armor where he can watch the Count and the Queen say sweet nothings to each other, and incidently make things unpleasant for his foreign rival. With the Kid's active aid—made more active by the promise of a ten dollar bill, the "No Account" Count counts for very little, especially in the police station where the last act but one is enacted. The last act shows little Herbert Rice trying to put ten pounds of candy into a two pound capacity stomach.

MAJESTIC

WONDERS OF SURGERY (Dec. 17).—Little Bobby Ashley, after meeting with a serious accident, lies in a critical condition at a big hospital. The doctors after further examining him decide that only skin grafted from another can help him. His parents willingly offer theirs, but the professor refuses the sacrifice, telling them that it will be necessary to have the skin of a child about the boy's own age. He suggests that they place an "ad." in the papers. This is done and it calls forth an assortment of children of all kinds and ages.

Little Alma Ashley hears the talk about skin grafting and gets her nurse to explain all about it. When she realises what is to be done she begs permission to give her own skin to save her little brother. Her parents will not permit this. They finally select a healthy little girl of Alma's age and for a consideration of $100, she promises to be at the hospital int the morning. Alma decides to outwit them, so before little Mary Murphy arrives, Alma goes to the doctors and says that she is the little girl who is selling her skin. She is believed and placed in the boy's room. The operation takes place and when the parents are permitted to see the boy, their surprise at finding Alma there is great. They are worried at first but the doctor soon convinces them that bothe children are alright and that Bobby, owing to Alma's sacrifice will soon be well.

ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A BANANA (Dec. 24).—A young Italian, Tony, lands in New York with his young wife and purchases a new push cart and a supply of bananas. He kisses his wife and baby goodbye and starts out to do his first day's buiness. Jim, the young policeman who patrols the beat upon which Tony takes his stand, makes love to Nora who is Judge Nolan's cook. He then helps himself to one of Tony's bananas and an argument is started which lands Tony in the station house before Judge Nolan. Tony sends word to his wife, who in order to pay his fine, goes to a pawn shop to pawn her wedding ring. The policeman, in bad temper, calls upon the Judge's cook and when about to ask her to marry him gets into a quarrel with her and goes to the same pawn shop to pawn the engagement ring. He sees the Italian's wife and begins to repent of his ill temper. The cook, all upset over her quarrel with the cop, spoils the Judge's dinner and he quarrels with his wife who leaves him and goes to a lawyer to arrange for a separation. Tony's wife pays his fine and they are mourning the loss of his stock of bananas when the automobile in which the Judge's wife is riding to her lawyer's strikes Tony and injures him slightly. Mrs. Nolan faints and is carried into a drug store with the Italian. The Judge arrives on the scene with the cook where they meet Jim the cop. Nora forgives him, the Judge and his wife are reconciled and Tony is made the recipient of a large sum of money to celebrate the glad reunions.

A MILITANT SUFFRAGETTE (Dec. 29).—The course of true love was running very smoothly until the girl became interested in the cause of votes for women. Her fiance did not approve of it. There was a quarrel, and the engagement ring was haughtily returned.

The young woman not only stubbornly refused to make up, but decided to become a really truly militant suffragette. One of the Amazon leaders from England was in New York at the time, preparing for the kind of revolution that is so popular in London. Under her banner the girl enrolled, pledging herself to "annoy, harass and intimidate tyrant men, until we are permitted to vote." In pursuance of this purpose the militants went out on a little window smashing expedition one day. The girl was arrested, but the others escaped. One of the fugitives met the ex-fiance and told him th horrible details. He went to the rescue in a taxicab, became peevish when held up for speeding, attacked a policeman and was arrested.

In the police court the former lovers met and were reconciled. Even handed justice gave them equal rights, ten days in jail each. They did not want their friends to know the facts, so before being led to their respective cells, they were hastily married, and the girl's father received word that they were on their honeymoon and would return in ten days. He had planned a big church wedding and was naturally upset, but, as he said, "It is hard to understand young folks these days." And the truth of this most peculiar honeymoon never came out.

WITH THE MOUNTED POLICE (Dec. 31).—The aqueduct police had many duties to perform, and continual vigilance was the price of order, owing to the fact that many dangerous aliens were in the territory they guarded.

On one occasion the captain receives an anonymous warning that the men in a certain section of the works were planning violence because certain concessions they demanded had been refused. The captain called upon one of his brightest young men to find out if there was any truth in the statement. The patrolman disguised himself, secured work as a laborer and soon became on friendly and confidential terms with his associates. He learned that the warning was true, communicated with his captain by phone, and agreed to meet a party of police that night at a certain spot in the road and lead them to the conspirators.

One of the criminals, however, was suspicious, and had secretly trailed the patrolman, learning that he was a spy. That evening a number of the men attacked the detective while he was walking along the road, overpowered, bound and gagged him, and then threw him into a newly completed reservoir which was empty. They then turned on the water, insuring a slow but certain death.

Before the young man started out on his detective work, he had taken his pet dog and consigned him to his sweetheart, a country girl who lived near the aqueduct. On the night he was overpowered, the dog ran away from his new mistress, being lonesome without his master. Along the rough roads and through the woods he traced his owner, finally locating him in the slowly filling aqueduct.

The girl was in the cottage when the dog returned, and the animal's excitement led her to believe that something was wrong. She followed the dog, and he led her to the aqueduct where she arrived just in time to save the policeman's life. The bluecoat, although unstrung by his terrible experience, was in time to meet the detachment of his comrades, and guide them to where the conspirators were. The dangerous gang were placed behind the bars, and the girl whose bravery saver a life later became the bride of the policeman.

A POOR RELATION (Jan. 3).—When the young widow's period of official mourning was over, she immediately began to take renewed interest in society. Her husband had left her plenty of money. So she carefully looked over her friends to see which she would permit to lead her to the altar, and her choice fell upon a popular physician,

To be one of his patients was almost to have social standing, so the widow found that her health was in a most deplorable state, and visited the doctor's reception parlor almost daily. He told her there was nothing the matter with her, but she insisted.

The doctor was a guest at a dinner party given by the young widow one night, and there he met a girl to whom he was at once attracted. She was a timid, shabby little creature ,a poor relation of the widow. The widow had a little girl, of whom she was gushingly fond in public, and more or less mean to, in private. The child had been banished to bed while the dinner party was on, and finding a box of matches, proceeded to amuse herself with them. A few moments later, her dress aflame, she rushed into the reception room where the ladies were congregated. All of them shrank from her in alarm, except the poor relation, who pluckily grabbed her, and saved the child's life at the risk of her own. The men were still in the dining roor, chatting over their cigars, and when they ran into the other room there was no need of their assistance. The doctor, however, saw the picture, the mother shrinking back in terror, while the poor relation was beating out the flames that enveloped the other woman's child. The physician found that the screeming little girl was only slightly injured. As he completed his examination he turned from the child to the "poor relation" who had not uttered a cry. His practiced eyes noted how white she had turned, and he jumped forward just in time to catch her in his arms, as she toppled over in a faint. Guided by one of the servants he carried her to her room, and noted with surprise and indignation how shabbily she was housed in the home of wealth. Their acquaintance soon ripened into love, and in a very short time the doctor announced to the widow that he and her plucky relation were to be married.

HER VISITOR (Dec. 29).—Mr. Burnham, going out of town for a few days, leaves his daughter Pearl in charge of the house. His friend, Claude Belmont, who received a letter inviting him to call on the old gentleman, starts on his visit. On his way he is waylaid by Gentleman George, a very versatile highwayman. George in a lively scuffle with Claude, steals his letter and leaves Claude a sorry-looking person, having rolled him around in the mud before overcoming him. George goes to the Burnham's house and is very cordially received by Pearl, who believes him to be Belmont. They chat a while and then Pearl leaving the room for a moment, George steals her purse and flees, meanwhile Claude arrives and enters the parlor where George and Pearl were. Pearl returning, sees Claude and in his sorrowful condition, mistakes him for a tramp. She misses her purse and thinks that he stole it. She sends her maid out for a policeman and the policeman is just about to remove Claude to the lock-up, when Pearl's father returns and prevents this sad calamity. Explanations are in order and all is serene, where a few moments before tumult reigned.

THE ELOPEMENT (Dec. 29).—Bessie is in love with Jack. Bessie's father dislikes Jack. Bessie and Jack plan to elope. Jack calls for Bessie with a ladder, which he places against the side of the house leading to her room. Father has locked Bessie in her room and taken her clothes from her. Father walks in the garden and sees Jack at the foot of the ladder. He mistakes him for a burglar. He gets his revolver and chases him away. They run and Jack tries to climb a fence and father shoots at him, hitting him in the arm. Father, coming back, determines to disguise himself as Bessie and elope with Jack in her stead. Jack sends his friend Tom to bring Bessie to the minister's and father goes with him. They arrive at the minister's and have to wait for Jack who has gone to a doctor to have his arm treated. They get ready to go through with the ceremony, when father throws off his outer raiment, and standing in his true light, throws consternation into the entire party.

HER KID SISTER (Jan. 5).—Chester always thought that he was Jessie's steady, until Alphonse de Belmont began paying her attentions and she seemed to be taken up with him. Chester was very popular with Jessie's little sister Pearl, while Belmont was just the opposite. Alphonse and Jessie go for a ride in the park, and Pearl and her boy friend go along, unknown to the loving twain. The youngsters play all sorts of pranks on Jessie and Alphonse and they return home in an unpleasant frame of mind. Pearl continues her teasing and joshing of Alphonse, and he, losing his patience, slaps her face. She pulls his hair, and much to her surprise, she is precipitated to the floor, his hair going with her. Jessie sees this also, and indignant at Alphonse's deception in not telling her that his beautiful locks were but a toupee, orders him from the house. Pearl then writes Chester that Jessie is very much in love with him and anxious to see him. He calls and they soon make up and all misunderstandings are at an end.

JONES RESURRECTED (Jan. 5).—Jones is a traveling salesman. He is sent on a trip by his firm. Having a few minutes to spare before the train leaves, he adjourned to a nearby café for something to drink. He stays longer than he expected and the train leaves, carrying his grip with it. He goes back to the café and stays quite a few hours. His firm receives a telegram that the train carrying Jones' grip has been wrecked and that the grip with some of the firm's cards in it was found next to the dead body of the man. The firm wires instructions to send the body back to Jones' home and plans are made to give him decent burial. Meanwhile, Jones returns home and goes to sleep. His friends arrive, bearing funeral offerings and prepare for his interment. In the midst of these lamentings and wailings Jones awakens, and, after some of his friends have regained consciousness, explains that he missed the ill-fated train. Congratulations are in order and the funeral services being adjourned until Jones is more in need of them, all is serene, with Jones thinking of his narrow escape.

THE REDEMPTION OF WHITE HAWK (Dec. 31).—An extended review of this two-reel subject is published elsewhere in this week's issue.

REGIMENTAL PALS (Jan. 4).—Jack and Dan are young soldier boys and inseparable friends. Both love Elizabeth. She is fond of both of them, but her real love goes to Jack. Although Jack does not know it, Dan is soon aware of the fact and nurses his grief. Troop A, of which they are members, is deputed to ten days' scouting duty on the desert. The troop splits into fours. Jack and Dan leave their companions, arranging to meet them later. They dismount to investigate the remains of a campfire, and their horses, becoming restless, run off. The boys believe that their companions will find them, but the latter thinking that Jack and Dan have preceded them, they return to camp.

Both boys suffer terribly from thirst; Jack the worst. He falls exhausted. Dan spies a water hole through his field glasses. He is too weak to carry his pal and Jack cannot walk. Dan is at his wits' end and conceives a plan. Taking Elizabeth's portrait and his watch and chain from Jack, he taunts him and tells him that he, Dan, will claim and marry Elizabeth. Love and jealousy do the work and Dan gradually leads his comrade near the water hole by taunts and showing him his sweetheart's picture. Dan finally staggers to the waterhole and revives Jack and himself.

They are rescued by the anxious troopers and eventually return home, where Dan is rewarded by hearing Jack tell of the trick played upon him and by receiving the caress from Elizabeth. He goes, bearing a sore heart, but comforted by the knowledge that his two best friends love him well.

THE HEROINE OF THE PLAINS (2 reels) (Dec. 24).—Joe, a young trapper, is nearly caught in the oncoming swirl of flames from a prairie fire. He further imperils his chances by rescuing an Indian squaw, Blue Bird. He carries her to safety. In her gratitude she gives him her most treasured possession, a long bead necklace, fastened by a barbaric ornament. Joe hurries to the settlement. He gives the necklace of beads to his sweetheart, Elizabeth.

The trappers leave to inspect the traps and Elizabeth takes two children with her and goes berry picking. They are captured by Indians and taken to their camp. On the way Elizabeth starts to break twigs, but the Indians threaten to club her if she does not stop. She works her brain as to how to blaze the trail, and finally thinks of the bead necklace. She breaks it and drops a bead now and again.

It so happens that Elizabeth and the children are turned over to Blue Bird, who sees the barbaric clasp she gave to her paleface rescuer. Hhe learns that Elizabeth loves Joe and promises to help her when the opportunity arrives.

Joe and the trappers return to the settlement and Joe rides off to the fort to get assistance. In the meantime, the Indians have ridden near the fort to steal some steers. The sentry on guard sees a hog rooting for nuts, and as he passes it the hog, which is an Indian in a skin, springs up and kills him. The Indians run on and drive off the steers.

Colonel Graham rides out with his troopers to find Elizabeth, to recapture the steers and punish the Indians. Joe accompanies them. He finds a bead and recognizes it. They follow the trail. An Indian scout sees them coming and the Indians take the war trail. A battle ensues, during which several braves enter the tepee where Elizabeth is guarded and drag her out, tie her on the horns of a steer and start it down the mountainside. Blue Bird follows, secures a horse and rides out to rescue Elizabeth. She shoots the steer and releases Elizabeth and they ride back to the fort just after the cavalry has returned, and find Joe distracted. Blue Bird is happy to have paid her debt of gratitude, and they swear eternal friendship.

THE LAND GRABBER (Dec. 28).—The proud Senora is approached by Lieutenant Farnsworth and is given a blank record to sign and record in order to make good her landed property. The Senora tells him that the land was granted to her by her king, and that she will recognize no other authority. She throws the blank document into a drawer. Farnsworth meets the Senora's daughter, Tonia, and tells her that land grabbers are abroad, and impressing upon her the importance of immediate action. The land grabbers arrive and their leader, one Tierney, stakes the property, and sending the document to be recorded by an accomplice, Kane, he installs his band of ruffians in the hacienda.

Tonia gets away and tells one of her servants, Felipe, to delay Kane, and this he does by means of offering him a drink, then another one. Tonia fills out the blank entry and rides to the fort, where Farnsworth tells her they must beat Kane to the recorder's. Kane, half drunk, suddenly realizes the trick being played upon him, and after a struggle with Felipe, he gets away, mounts and rides to the recorder's. He gets there just a little ahead of Farnsworth and Tonia, but his drunken condition impedes him and Farnsworth beats him in a fight whilst Tonia gets her document of possession filed. They proceed home and find that Tierney and his associates have terrorized the men and women and have put them to indignities. Farnsworth has ordered troopers to meet him at the hacienda and the ruffians, unable to produce any authority, are soon disposed of. The Senora, humbled by the experiences she has gone through, is glad to install Farnsworth as their protector, by granting him the hand of Tonia.

POWERS.

WHO'S THE BOSS (Dec. 25).—Hobbs is middle aged and frivolous. Mrs. Hobbs receives a letter at breakfast from a friend, inviting her to spend two weeks in the country. She is delighted. So is Hobbs. Hobbs goes to the office with a box of candy for Margaret, his charming little stenographer. He and Margaret proceed to enjoy themselves, but are rudely interrupted by Mrs. Hobbs, who finds she has not enough money and decides to commandeer her hubby for more. Margaret makes a hasty exit, ostensibly for good, and Mrs. Hobbs telephones to an exchange for another typewriting clerk. Two arrive, but are considered too pretty and go. They meet Margaret and the three of them concoct a plot.

GREAT NORTHERN FILM CO. - 7 East 14th St., New York

Margaret makes up as an extremely plain person and promptly gets the job. Mrs. Hobbs departs to catch her train and Hobbs pulls himself together to face the terrible apparition wished on him. Margaret keeps up the deception for a time and then reveals herself and joy once more reigns. Mrs. Hobbs misses the train and again catches hubby and "that minx" laughing over the imposition. Margaret again makes a hurried exit and Mrs. Hobbs determines to take no more chances and announces to Mr. Hobbs that although she is badly out of practice, she will act as his stenographer herself. Mr. Hobbs has ample time to regret his undue rejoicing and the answering of his letters takes the best part of his business day.

THEIR CHRISTMAS TURKEY (Dec. 25).—Hannah is busy at the washtub. Rastus is busy sleeping. He is rudely brought from a pleasant dream and sent off to buy a turkey. He is waylaid by Slim and Bud who inveigle him into a game and take his money by such questionable means as passing cards between the toes of Slim and the hands of Bud.

The climax arrives when Bud holds four Kings and an ace and Rastus gets five aces. Rastus departs by the foot and door route. His little boy, with a precocious knowledge of his Pappy, meets him outside and rather than return empty handed the rascals visit a turkey yard and borrow a fat turkey.

Arriving home Rastus is frightened to death by a terrible ghost, and he kneels and confesses. The ghost is Mammy's sister and all is explained and forgiven at the sight of the "lent" and doomed turkey.

THE STORY OF A KISS (Dec. 24).—A house-party was taking place at the Shermans' country home. Hector Richards is in love with the daughter of his hostess and has every reason to believe that his affection is returned until he attempts to steal a kiss from the girl and is rewarded by a slap in the face—and she tells him that she will never, never marry him until he is able to secure a kiss from her to be given to him of her own free will.

Hector tries in many ways to win a kiss from the fair Alice—even going so far as to kidnap the young man who is to play Romeo to Alice's Juliet in an amateur performance that they are to appear in. Alice discovers the wily Hector and frustrates his plans. Again, at a charity bazaar he inveigles her into selling a kiss, and once more she escapes the trap. Finally, as a reward for his perseverance, she yields and kisses the young man of her own free will—and from the manner in which the kiss is given, we should say it is indeed a loving one—and with that kiss our story ends.

A DRY TOWN (Dec. 26).—Will B. Wilde, a traveling salesman, arrives in a temperance town, of course, when he learns that the sale of liquor is prohibited, he immediately craves a drink. The hotel clerk, the bell boy and the porter all inform him that there is nothing doing in the liquor line, but when he is comfortably settled in his room, they each, in turn, bring him a flask; yet, with liquor all around him, he takes a drink of ice-water and goes to bed for the night.

While he is dreaming of lobster palaces and pretty girls, two second-story workers quietly enter through the window, relieve him of his jewelry, his money, his dress suit case, and take with them, also the collection of flasks with their contents.

Wilde discovers his loss early in the morning and immediately reports the theft to the police. While wandering disconsolately around the town, he meets two rough and suspicious-looking characters, who are beautifully intoxicated. Where did they get the liquor—is the question that at once comes to him. Surmising the truth, he follows the two to their destination and then promptly notifies the police. The arrests are made, and the local Justice, besides holding the men for theft, charges Widle with having liquor in his possession and paroles him for trial at three o'clock that afternoon. Three o'clock arrives—and so does Wilde—but at the Justice's office the evidence has disappeared from the flasks and Wilde is discharged.

INSECT HUNTING (Dec. 29).—A synopsis of this scientific subject was printed on page 812 of the issue dated November 23.

GONTRAN, A KIDNAPPER (Dec. 23).—On this day it seems certain that our friend Gontran is unlucky. At a street corner he amuses himself by watching two women who are quarreling over an enormous head of cabbage. One of them carries a child. She abruptly puts it into Gontran's arms, who does not know what to do and holds it. The women quarrel until the policeman takes them to the police station and Gontran of course remains with the child on his hands. He does not know what to do with it. He tries to leave it in the entrance of a house but the janitor forces him to take it back. He endeavors to leave it at the foot of a wall but the shouts of a policeman warn him that it is forbidden to deposit anything at that place. Perceiving a group of policemen he wishes to give the child to them but they merely take his name and return to him his embarrassing burden.

Gontran discouraged goes home. He is debarred from entering the house by the janitor who tells him "No children in this house." Finally, he reaches his apartment and his wife becomes furious because he has dared to bring home a strange child. Meantime, the infant's mother is released by the police department and begins a search for the little one. She reaches Gontran's home just in time to add her beating to that of his wife. And poor Gontran, of course, protests in vain. What can he do against two women?

NESTOR.

JONES' VACATION (Dec. 23).—Poor Jones is sick—too much ledger and cash book. When the boss notices it, he gives him a week's vacation. Jones buys a costly outfit, the nether portion of which consists of white duck. He hies himself to the beach, and not having any incumbrances, he proceeds to see life, and finds several damsels perfectly willing to help him have a good time.

The boss decides to take a day or two off himself, and chance takes him to the same beach upon which Jones is fast setting a premium. Jones is far too busy to see the boss, but the latter sees Jones and his appetite for peaches grows. He determines to do a little in the adonis way himself, but no sooner does he get some lovely damsel interested when Jones shows up and is immediately surrounded by every girl in sight.

No self-respecting boss could possibly stand such treatment, he he instructs his office to wire Jones, in his name, to return immediately, and poor Jones wondering what has hit him, goes. The boss then proceeds to enjoy life.

THE BIG WHITE CHIEF (Dec. 25).—Ranchman Davies is unable to find out which of his cowboys his daughter Eunice appears to be in love with. Foreman Osborne suggested that the ranchman disguise himself as an Indian, come to the ranch, where the foreman would engage him, and then being with the boys, he could quickly find out who is in love with his daughter and discharge him. Acting upon the suggestion, Davies hurried to the store, secured the best outfit he could, painted his face and started for the ranch, but in the meanwhile, Tom, her favorite cowboy, closely followed by Dick, his rival, had watched the old man put on his disguise, and hurried to the Indian encampment, where he bribed the Chief to capture the ranchman and hold him there until he could elope with Eunice. As soon as he had gone, Dick appeared, and, thinking to make himself a hero in Davies' eyes, he bribed the Chief to let him rescue the ranchman. On his way home, the Chief captured the old man and led him to the encampment. Tom in the meantime hurried to the ranch to advise Eunice to get ready to fly with him. The Chief then faithfully went through his part of the agreement to Dick, a mock war-dance around the ranchman frightened the ranchman nearly to death, then at a given signal, the Chief drew his braves away, and Dick crept up to release the old man. Away they ran, but upon Dick's firing his blank cartridges, not one brave as had been agreed at camp dropped dead, but every one including the Chief. Instantly Davies seized the gun to learn its magic, and Dick, knowing that he would now be found out, ran for his life. The Chief and braves saw him run and, thinking only of the money promised them, jumped up and hurried after him, soon catching him, securing the money and sending him on his way. In the meanwhile, the ranchman, disgusted and angry at his own fright, made his way to the ranch, arriving in time to send the waiting Tom running for his life, and take his daughter over his knee.

THE PADRE'S GIFT (Dec. 27).—The Padre Caleros, a Catholic Father, attends a dying woman and takes her little four-year old boy home with him. The boy, Romera, grows into a poetic and handsome fellow and returns the old man's love with reverence and deep affection. Chance brings Romera and Dolores, the daughter of Garcia together.

Garcia has other ideas regarding his daughter, and when the haughty and wealthy Don Carlos asks for Dolores' hand, he is permitted to pay his court. Romera is not permitted to see Dolores.

The old Padre's heart is torn for the boy and he knows not what to do. He remembers an old parchment which he has treasured. He removes a stone above the mantel and reads the document and studies the chart. It sets forth that the treasure entrusted to a Padre Juanipero is buried at the place indicated.

Romera's despair changes to hope as the Padre tells of his plan. They set forth on mules and eventually recover jewels and old coins of great value. The day arrives when Don Carlos decides to make his proposal. He pleads with passion and is surprised when the girl in turn pleads with him not to force her to marry him and tells him she loves Romera. Her earnestness and beauty appeal to his finer nature and he leaves her.

The Padre and Romera call later and Garcia's greedy nature is satisfied at the sight of the wealth owned by Romera. The young lovers are united.

ARABELLA'S ANKLE (Dec. 30).—Anton Dauber is in despair. He has finished his masterpiece, all but the ankle, and alas! the ankle of the fair Dolly, a professional model, is not modeled to suit Dauber. He says so and Dolly, enraged and but half-clad, defends her ankle and assails Dauber's ability to paint a barn, much less an ankle. Mrs. Dauber and her two friends, Helen and Margaret, hear the argument and the ladies are shocked at what they see and hear through the door crack.

Dauber is discouraged. He goes to the seashore for a rest and to seek inspiration and possibly an ankle. He sees he latter. It belongs to Arabella, who, together with her friends Margaret and Helen, are not aware that a gentleman is sketching behind a boat. Anton sketches furiously, but not quickly enough.

Another chance arrives when Arabella reads in unconscious ease on the pier. Anton tries again but a silly idiot knocks the sketch into the water just as it is completed. However, Anton gets acquainted and while getting a photograph of the perfect ankle, is discovered by Helen, Margaret and their two young men.

Such proceedings must be reported to Mrs. Dauber over the telephone and the outraged lady takes the first car and meets her friends and sees her erring hubby and Arabella departing from a soda water emporium to the rocks, where Arabella has demurely submitted to have her ankle sketched.

All is ready for the sketch when Anton is interrupted, this time by a hat pin and a masculine proportioned lady. Arabella shrieks. The ladies face each other—"Arabella!" "Laura!" The two old school chums fly to each other's arms. Explanations ensue, Margaret and Helen are ashamed of themselves after having been told that they ought to be, and Arabella accepts an invitation to the Dauber's and the perfect ankle is immortalized.

THE FIGHT FOR RIGHT (Jan. 1).—Old Ben Johnson had taken to drink. Parson Jones rode into town to silence the jeering of his companions when Nina Johnson came to her father and took him home, much to the joy of his wife and daughter. Slim Jim, however, thinking the Parson entirely too meddlesome, promised the boys that he would handle the Parson, and accordingly they set out to meet him on his way back to town. Jim had seen that the other could handle a gun, so taking off his coat, he told the Parson that he would whip him with nature's weapons. Again he was fooled, for his friends were forced to confess that he was no match for the Parson.

The following Wednesday, while the Parson was holding a revival meeting, Jim and his boon companion, Joe, decided upon a plan of revenge, which was to write the following letter—"Dear Bill:—Your disguise as the Parson, is great. They'll never suspect you are a horse thief, so you should make a good clean up where you are. Let us hear from you. Bub." They slipped it into the Parson's pocket. Fortunately Nina saw them place it there and warned the Minister, so that when the boys brought the sheriff telling him that the Parson had received such a letter, which they had seen him reading, the letter was in Nina's hands and she quickly explained its origin to the sheriff. As a result both Jim and Joe were led away to await punishment, while Ben, now thoroughly ashamed at having kept such company, straightened up and once more became a credit to his family.

THE BLACKMAILER (Jan. 3).—Ralph is an underpaid clerk. He is kept in check by a sick sister. The doctor says that she must go to a dry western climate if her life is to be spared. Ralph tells his troubles to a fellow clerk, Jason, who writes out a check and makes Ralph forge the signature of his employer, Mr. Howard. Ralph cashes the check, gives Jason half and hurrying home, he escapes with Grace to the West, where he gets work on a ranch.

The forgery is discovered and Jason's part in the transaction is forced from him and he is tried and sentenced. He comes from jail more evily than he was before. He traces Ralph and Grace to the West, sees Ralph out riding with Rose, the ranchman's daughter, to whom he is bethrothed. Ralph has become the trusted employee of the ranchman and he is horrified when confronted by Jason in the corral. He gives Jason all the money he possesses and begs him to leave him alone.

The old terror takes hold of Ralph and Rose wonders what ails him, while Grace, now completely recovered, has a nameless dread she cannot define. One evening the boss leaves Ralph in the office making up the payroll. Jason enters the window and demands the money, threatening exposure. Ralph attacks Jason and there is a fight, which is interrupted by the boss, Rose and Grace, who rush in. Jason accuses Ralph and Ralph has no answer. Grace guesses the truth and Ralph admits he did it to save his sister's life. His sweetheart is staunch and tell him to go back and face the charge. Ralph does this, accompanied by Grace, his sister.

He explains and confesses to the merchant and as Mr. Howard goes to the phone to call the police, Grace makes her appeal to Mrs. Howard, who pleads for Ralph with her husband. She uses a successful method, by showing him a portrait of their dead son. Mr. Howard tells Ralph to go and sin no more, and Ralph returns to find Rose waiting to help his better self through life. The ranch boss tells Grace he has found another daughter, and she is well content.

to the poor little child, the nurse says, "No." The father coming on the scene allows her to do so. Just before the party is to be given, little Dorothy falls ill and is to be taken to the hospital. The children come to the party but the nurse sends them away, saying that poor Dorothy is sick. The poor child also comes but is snubbed by the rich little children and is also sent home. In her delirium the nurse overbears Dorothy murmur in her sleep about the party. The father is consulted and brings the children to the hospital, where the feast is prepared. Dorothy gets up but does not see the poor little girl among the guests. One of the nurses is despatched for the little girl, who is brought to the party, which makes Dorothy's recovery and happiness complete.

THE AMULET (Dec. 24).—Three centuries ago among the prehistoric Indians of Northern Canada, a young chief and a brave fought in their primitive fashion for the hand of a young squaw, the brave seeking to possess her by force, but she is rescued in time by the chief, whom she really wants. The old medicine man of the tribe unites them and gives them each an amulet which has the magic properties of keeping them both from harm and bringing them both together in some future life.

The same four souls are reincarnated in the present day inhabitants of the East side of New York. The medicine man as a settlement worker, the chief as a factory hand, the squaw as a factory girl and the villainous brave as an east side gangster. Again the villain seeks to possess the girl after the manner of his kind, but she is saved by the factory hand with the assistance of the settlement worker. The two souls discover their former identity by the possession of the amulets have been handed down to them as heirlooms, and remember again their former incarnation as they are reunited. In this life the villain is regenerated by the efforts of the settlement worker.

THE OLD FOLKS' CHRISTMAS (Dec. 23).—It was the day before Christmas, and little Helen's brother, Bobby, had broken the head of her old bisque doll. Going to her daddy, she asked him if he wouldn't get her a new doll for Christmas. But daddy had just been laid off, and there was no money.

That night the little girl could not sleep, for she decided to write God a letter. Climbing out of bed, she found a pencil and a dirty piece of paper and commenced to write. The letter finished, and not having a stamp, she, with the assistance of Bobby, raised the window and with a prayer tossed the letter out. The slamming of the window startled the mother and father and they came rushing into the room. Daddy asked for an explanation, and Bobby was about to tell, but the little girl warned him to silence, so the children were kissed and again put to bed.

The old folks were a very wealthy couple, who had lost their first and only child. The old lady had come across a baby's stocking; the old man had picked up the baby's shoe. Both met in the library; each saw what the other held. He took her in his arms; the old lips met in a kiss. He took her out in the bracing air, so they both could forget. It was cold and windy and a piece of paper blew on his chest. He was about to throw it away, but writing on it caught his eye. It was the little girl's note to God, and this was his delivery. He told her the contents and was about to throw it away, but she stayed his hand. They walked off, deciding to make a child happy on Christmas.

That night the Bradleys were surprised by a knock on the door, for no one ever called but the landlord. Bradley answered the knock. The old folks came in, followed by men carrying a Christmas tree and all kinds of toys and food. The finding of the note was explained. Preparations were made for the dressing of the tree. A few hours later the little girl was awakened by the beating of a drum. Hopping out of bed, she ran to the door and, peeping through the keyhole, she jumped with a cry to her brother. Pulling him out of bed, she dragged him into the other room. She looked over the presents and not seeing anything for daddy or mother she asked the one she thought was God how about daddy and mother. He lifted her and kisser, and as he put her down handed her a roll of bills. She kneeled to pray, looked up, found her brother standing. Catching him by the coat, she pulled him to his knees. Bradley attempted to thank the old folks but the old man pulled off the Santa wig and beard and with a tear-dimmed eye raised his hand to heaven. Then he took the old lady in his arms and passed through the doorway.

THE NEW MAGDALEN (Dec. 26).—A review of this two-reel subject is published elsewhere in this issue.

JONES' WEDDING DAY (Dec. 30). — Johnnie Jones, arrayed in his best clothes, hurries to the train that is going to bear him to his fiancee, who is awaiting him in a suburban village. He is happy, for it is his wedding day; his thoughts are of his blushing bride, and he forgets to bring his purse. This means a fight with the cabman, and he almost misses his train, for he loses a lot of time trying to make the ticket seller take his watch for a ticket. Finally he gets aboard, and as soon as the train has left a stout lady asks him to hold her baby. He obliges her and she goes to the baggage car to see if her trunks are safe. The train arrives at a station, and Jones, to his wild horror, thinks he sees the baby's mother leave the train and walk away. He rushes after the woman and puts the baby in her arms and jumps on the moving train. When they are well out in the country he almost faints when the infant's mother returns to the car and asks for her child. Johnnie almost faints, for he understands that he has given the baby to a lady who is now far behind them. He cannot explain to the hysterical mother and he is placed under arrest by a detective who is on the train, which soon arrives at its destination. The prospective bride, who is gladly waiting, with her parents and some swell friends, is dumbfounded when the groom is limply dragged from the incoming train and bundled upon one returning to the city, followed by a furious lady who is wildly screaming for her child.

In the meantime the lady upon whom the baby was foisted had turned it over to the baggage man, who had placed it in an orphan asylum. The detective and Jones sadly hurry there, but the baby is mixed with another, so Jones takes them both. The mother claims her child, and Jones, who has explained all to his puzzled sweetheart, does not know what to do with the child, so he and his fiancee decide to adopt it.

IT DESN'T PAY (Jan. 6).—John Langdon, a prosperous young business man is seen in his happy home with his wife and four-year old daughter. On his way to business he meets an old college friend, who shows him a telegram from a horse owner saying that a certain horse cannot lose and for him to go the limit. John is not interested, and tells his friend so. His friend, Dick Ralston, is next seen in a gambling house, where he wins a twenty to one chance. At John's house that night he produces a large roll of bills saying the tip was good and the horse won. Next day Dick calls at John's office and shows him another telegram similar to the first one. This time John is persuaded to accompany Dick to the poolroom, where they both win on a long shot.

John becomes a frequent visitor at the poolroom and neglects his business. Soon he becomes bankrupt, and mortgages his home. He takes one last chance and loses everything. Shortly after we find the family living in a miserable attic, poverty-stricken, the wife very ill and John a drunken wreck. The wife dies and John, filled with remorse, sinks on the table in the wretched room, with his child beside him.

AN ILL WIND (Dec. 29).—Tom Moore and Margaret Smith are fellow employees in a big department store. She is being pursued by one of the junior partners of the concern, who gains the hatred of Tom and they engage in a fight, from which the partner comes out second best, swearing vengeance.

The boys and girls in the store arrange for a Hallowe'en party, to be given at the home of one of them. After the party, Tom sees Margaret home, and on the way pops the question. She does not give him his answer.

At the store the next day, the partner notices the increased friendship between Tom and Margaret, and when Tom's back is turned, he takes from a pile of documents on his desk a check, and then circulates the report that Tom is short in his accounts. Poor Tom is railroaded to jail and although Margaret tries to write him, her letters are intercepted, and he, not hearing from her, thinks she has forgotten him.

A year passes, Margaret falls heir to wealth and departs for the Metropolis. She engages in society pursuits. Five years have elapsed and Hallowe'en night comes around again. She is asked out that evening to a smart society function, where she receives proposals from a few men, all of which she declines.

Tom's release has been anticipated by his conduct, so that he is out again in the world before the five years are up. In vain he seeks work, but always as he obtains it, the sleuth hounds of the law inform his employers of his past incarceration and he loses the work. He meets an old comrade of his prison days, who informs him that it is no use for him to try and find work and that a life of crime is the only way open for him. He also shows him Margaret's apartment, which he says is empty of its owner. Tom enters the place while Margaret is away, and in going round the room with his flash-light, he encounters her photograph. He hears her carriage drive up and hides behind the curtains. She enters the room, and he, fascinated by her beauty, comes behind her. She shrieks in dismay, but as she hears his voice begging her to let him go, as this was his first attempt, she lifts the mask off his face.

THE PROFESSOR'S DILEMMA (Dec. 27).—Professor Philippe is overworked and unable to proceed further with a scientific work which he has in preparation. Roberts, the athletic trainer of the college, visits him, and, realising his condition, kick his secretary out of the room and tells him he needs a rest. Obtaining leave of absence, they go up into the mountains on a shooting trip, the professor going, however, unwillingly.

Arriving at their destination, they meet Diana Deane. The professor, who is very modest, is shocked at seeing a woman going about with a gun, and refuses to form her acquaintance.

Having received lessons in shooting from Roberts, the professor sallies forth one morning, filled with high hopes. Seeing what he supposes to be a wild animal, he aims and fires and shoots off Diana's Tam O'Shanter cap. The unfortunate professor lays all the blame upon his spectacles, and taking them off, he throws them down and tramps upon them, swearing never to wear them again. This action appeals to the humorous side of Diana's nature and she forgives him.

Once home again the professor mopes and mourns and is filled only with thoughts of her. Roberts again noticing his condition, finally hits upon a plan to cheer up his friend; he returns to the mountain hotel and writes a love letter to the professor, signing Diana's name to it. The professor receives it, is overwhelmed with joy and sits down and answers it, writing a most sentimental and effusive epistle, a thing which Roberts had not counted upon. Visiting him, Roberts is told by the professor of the letter he received and his answer, and the worthy athletic trainer is so overcome with laughter that he has great trouble in explaining the joke he has played upon him.

Horror-stricken, the poor professor begs Roberts to undo the damage he has done, by going after and regaining the letter before she receives it. Roberts refuses and the professor starts off on the mission himself.

His many false moves and the various scrapes he finds himself in before he regains his letter wear him almost to a frazzle, and when at last he is compelled, through force of circumstances to surrender the awful missive to Diana, he is ready to faint away. But when he discovers, to his amazement, that Diana likes the tone of his letter, and that she really loves him, his joy cannot be described, it being unlimited, and his method of expressing it inimitable.

MILANO.

HER INSPIRATION (Dec. 28).—Leila, a young English girl, is studying music in Naples under Prof. Perez. He has been commissioned by the London Opera Company to furnish a new production for the opening bill of the season. Overworked and forced for time, the young musician is at his wits' end for the theme of a big vocal number which will be the keynote to his whole work.

Leila is secretly in love with the professor, and mistaking his interest in her studies for a deeper feeling, cherishes the thought that he returns her affection. This is not so, however, for the master is too intent upon his life mission to give thought to such emotions, and the young girl's health fades with her secret suffering. During a lesson in the conservatory Leila faints and a complete rest is advised for her at the mountain villa. The professor writes his hopes for her speedy return to health, and at the same time expresses his fears of failure to finish his beloved opera in time.

Several nights later, Leila strikes upon an air which she feels must be the one so long sought. Sending for the professor, she presents him with her composition, and he, after playing it, becomes very enthusiastic, claiming it will mean certain success for his opera. He leaves for London, and there, wrapped up in rehearsals of the singers, has little time or thought for those who have worked for his success at home. A friend in London writes to Leila telling that her professor has had his opera accepted and that a great success is looked for upon its opening night, two weeks hence.

Leila prevails upon her mother to accompany her back to London in time for the opera. The mother is glad to see her daughter's returning good spirits and arranges for their return trip.

The much anticipated moment arrives: Leila witnesses and joins in the ovation accorded the prima donna on the rendition of her song, and mother and daughter are ushered back on the stage to meet the professor and the great singer. Here a blow falls upon the unwarned girl. Her gaze rests upon the professor and the prima donna in an impromptu love scene, and she falls back. They go the singer's dressing room, and Leila, gaining courage, follows him, but with faltering heart as her hopes fade. Opening the door she finds the composer kissing he prima donna. He is saried a her entrance, but coldly greets her and then leaves the room in company with the singer. The weak little maiden can stand no more; her delusion of happiness vanished, she is crushed and stunned, and seeking her mother, gives vent to her pent-up agony of soul in a wild burst of tears on that faithful breast.

KAY-BEE.

THE GREAT SACRIFICE (2 reels) (Jan. 3).—Jim Ward, a southerner, is engaged to Edith Blake, and escorts her to a dance on Christmas eve. His brother, Jack, hangs a sprig of mistletoe on the veranda and entices the girls underneath it, when he kisses them. Edith has just fallen a victim to Jack's trap and he has clasped her in his arms, when Jim, ignorant of the true state of things, looks out. Angry and hurt, he goes home without a word and thereafter avoids Edith, who is puzzled at his actions, but too proud to ask an explanation. She accepts the attentions of Jack, who falls in love with her.

The war breaks out and Jim is among the first to answer the call for men, being made a lieutenant. Thrilling scenes of battle are shown in which Jim takes part. Jack marries Edith and stays at home, and, the family fortunes having dwindled on account of the war, he is unable to meet a mortgage held by Silas Green. Green makes a demand for payment, and as he leaves Jack's home he is captured by northern soldiers, who draft him into the service. His cowardly heart revolts at the prospect of risking his life, and he offers to purchase a substitute. Accordingly, he persuades Jack to take his place, agreeing to cancel the mortgage. It thus happens that Jack is seen fighting under the stars and stripes, while Jim is battling under the confederate emblem. In a sensational charge the federals capture a number of prisoners, among them Jack, who is brought before his own brother.

Jack is placed in a hencoop, which has been improvised into a jail, and overpowers his guard. He escapes by changing uniforms with the confederate, and making his exit in the midst of tremendous excitement during a crushing attack by the federals. A bomb drops onto the hencoop and in bursting destroys it, killing the confederate guard whom Jack had locked in, and mangling his features into an unrecognizable mass. Jim sees the body and believing it to be his brother, is greatly affected by the pitiful sight. The bruised and battered corpse is sent home for burial, and Jim regrets his enmity, forgetting the great wrong he thought his brother had done him. Clad in the confederate uniform, Jack is captured by the federals and placed in prison. The war ends and Jim goes home, where he effects a reconciliation with Edith, who is the mother of his brother's child, and marries her.

The release of prisoners occupies considerable time, and Jack, with long, unkempt hair and beard, anxiously awaits the day of freedom. When he is finally set at liberty, he makes his way home and sees his little girl, accompanied by the old negro mammy, going to the graveyard. They do not recognize him, and he learns that they are laying flowers on the grave they think is his. Questioning them he is horrified to learn of Edith's marriage to his brother, and for the first time he understands his brother's animosity toward himself. As night falls he peers into the window and notes with sinking heart the love existing between the trio—his wife and child and his brother. To reveal himself would cast desolation upon three lives; to remain silent would hurt but himself. He resolves to make the sacrifice.

Going to the tavern he learns that Silas Green is foreclosing the mortgage on the home, taking advantage of Jack's supposed death. He determines to save the property, but is in a quandary as to how to do it without divulging the fact that he is alive. He resolves to secure possession of the mortgage, and effecting an entrance into Green's house finds the document. Green, awakening, rushes at the intruder with a pistol and fires. Jack and Green engage in a desperate struggle. A stableman, hearing the shot, grabs a rifle and runs to the house, just as Jack throws his antagonist from him and hurls him through the window. The startled stable-man fires at the form, which he thinks is that of a burglar, and Silas Green receives the charge. Jack makes his escape, and the picture closes with him standing in the road, loking longingly back toward the little town sheltering the woman he loves, and for whom he has made such a great sacrifice.

GRAND RAPIDS.

SINCE the Superba has been rebuilding, business down at the Apollo has been exceptionally heavy. Features well advertised are a policy which Mr. Fred Nichols finds pays well.

Miss Hoteling, pianist for so long a time at the Idle Hour has been on the sick list for some three weeks.

Mr. Roy Teevin, musical director at the Columbia, had a very severe illness and has just resumed duties. Mr. Banks took his place while Roy was away.

Work on the new Superba is being rapidly completed. The seating is being arranged and the decorating is finished. Mr. Geo. Nichols states the house will open about Christmas. It is certainly one of the handsomest small theaters in this section and the front is going to be a big surprise. The huge electric sign for the front is ready.

Roy Patchen, a local young man, has taken the advertising agency for the Columbia. Mr. Patchen was formerly with Barnum & Bailey and Forepaughs. He knows the business thoroughly and will undoubtedly make good.

At the Idea, Mr. Vogelsang, formerly in the motion picture business in Allegan and Benton Harbor, has assumed charge as manager. Mr. Baumbach, the former manager, has left to arrange the schedules for the Central Ball League of which he is secretary.

The new policy of Mr. Breen in publishing the full list of all licensed films for the week, in the newspapers has scored strongly—it is very convenient and makes a splendid publicity stunt.

HUGH KING HARRIS.

MEMPHIS.

ANTHONY Jannus, the aviator, passed here in his Benoist Hydroaeroplane. He had with him as a passenger, Mr. William Tresta, a St. Louis newspaper man, who was taking motion pictures as the flight progressed down the river.

Kleinschmidt and Lane's Alaska-Siberia motion pictures are being exhibited here at the Lyceum theater, the largest and most popular theater in the city. They have been received with applause and enthusiasm by large audiences.

New Majestic No. 2, which was opened here about two months ago, is said to be the largest and most elaborate exclusive photoplay house in the South. It seats comfortably about 1200 people. Every modern appliance known to the industry has been installed, including a mirror screen, the indirect lighting system and three projecting machines in a modern fireproof booth. The show runs four reels of pictures and two illustrated songs. It is a worthy addition to the photoplay houses of this city and with able management, excellent projection, music and effects, it cannot fail to impress upon anyone the fact that the motion picture is a serious contender for high honors in the amusement world.

TURN EM' AWAY ON YOUR OFF NIGHTS

and matinees as well by presenting to your audience A REAL GIFT. AS A SOUVENIR, OUR PHOTOPLAYERS PHOTOGRAPH POST CARDS are of such fine quality that the public are enthused into making complete and uniform collections of all the PLAYERS. We learn from many exhibitors that their patrons look forward to souvenir nights. The public are collecting these cards because they want a full set of the players for their albums or for framing and bear in mind it's the QUALITY that has created the large interest and at an actual valuation you are giving away a 5 CENT ARTICLE. If the cards were inferior and a base imitation they would not come back for another. The strength of the drawing power lies in the genuineness of the card.

Do not consider for a moment that "any old thing is good enough," IT'S THE GOODS that will draw the business.

50 Association Players

40 Mutual Players 30 Universal Players

WISHES YOU

A Most Merry Christmas and A Happy and Prosperous New Year

BE SURE AND BOOK THIS NEW YEAR WEEK PROGRAM

Dec. 30th. OUR LADY OF THE PEARLS

A dramatic romance of the South Sea Island pearl fisheries. In order to satisfy his sweetheart's passion for pearls, a young man is driven to steal the votive offerings from the cathedral shrine. Later he is brought to a reckoning. About 1,000 ft.

Dec. 31st.

A ROUGH RIDE WITH NITROGLYCERINE

An unusual western drama, telling the thrilling story of a daring ride through oil fields with a load of high explosives. Beside this thrilling ride the story contains a good, wholesome love story with plenty of comedy features. About 1,000 ft.

Jan. 1st, 1913. A LOYAL DESERTER

SPECIAL NEW YEAR DAY WAR DRAMA

A visualized incident taken from the pages of civil war history. Full of excitement and thrilling situations. Abounding in big, absorbing scenes of battle and warfare. A feature. About 1,000 ft.

Jan. 2nd. GREATER WEALTH

A human interest story of the prosperity that comes from happy and human affection. A drama of everyday life. Hobart Bosworth, Thomas Santschi, "Baby" Lillian Wade, and Bessie Eyton, are among the popular Selig players appearing in this one. About 1,000 ft.

Jan. 3rd. THE CURIOUS FAMILY

A comedy of our country relations. Plenty of wholesome fun and not a little human nature is employed in the clever working out of this delightful laugh producer. On the same reel with—

STEAK AND ONIONS

Another clever comedy of the sea-shore and city, describing the experiences of two bachelor girls who attempt light housekeeping. Combined length about 1,000 ft.

$2.50 WILL START YOU WITH THE MOST COMPLETE BUSINESS FORM YOU COULD POSSIBLY INSTALL.

Start the New Year Right by Using a Business "SYSTEM"

The Theatre Record Ledger

Will convince any wide-awake Manager that $2.50 invested in our NEWLY-REVISED THEATRE RECORD LEDGER is positively the best money ever invested. Think of a system which will check your box office with every ticket sold—even the starting and closing numbers of each price ticket—separating the matinee and night receipts; also recording additional sundry receipts (slide and curtain advertising, candy machines, etc.)

For separating and recording expenses, our system is absolutely perfect. Under the headings "Particulars, Total, Advertising, Vaudeville, Salaries, Freight, Express, House Payroll, Rent, Miscellaneous, Light, Supplies and Other Expenses," etc., a careful and saving manager can quickly locate every dollar spent, recording each special day's "Feature Attractions," together with spacing for the weather.

So complete and accurate is the THEATRE RECORD LEDGER that you can quickly turn back from week to week and locate every day's transaction.

Printed on heavy bank ruled, three-colored column ledger paper, size 17 x 21 inches, of 52 complete pages for one complete year's business, neatly bound. The Theatre Record Ledger will be sent to any address upon receipt of $2.50, fully "Guaranteed" as represented or money refunded. Start the new year right by ordering today. Address all orders direct to

Peace on Earth, Good Will Toward Men:

At this season of the year when the above spirit permeates the atmosphere, and makes the joys and pleasures of life intensely sweet, we urge you, MR. EXHIBITOR, to treat your patrons with the greatest consideration.

Now, when moving pictures are making such rapid strides toward perfection, you must not ask them to sit through a performance of indistinct inanimate pictures, which are robbed of all their beauty and interest by being shown on old and worn-out curtains

When we see some of the most realistic films destroyed by this means, we feel inclined to cry aloud in rebellion at a policy where managers will curtail this expense and spend most lavishly on all other comforts.

Now, MR. EXHIBITOR, let your foresight and thoughtfulness for your patrons permit you to send in your order for a RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN, thereby giving the most acceptable Christmas gift to those who assure your success.

Let us have your order—we not only guarantee you the most perfect picture surface obtainable, but the service which we so willingly give to our customers is always at your command.

I Was First As Usual!

I was the first exchange man who recognized the fact that the only way to protect the independent exhibitor from spending all his real profits on "state rights" feature films was to give him

All Universal Feature Films Without Extra Cost

I have been fearfully criticised for starting such a thing, but I seem to thrive on criticism. And every Laemmle Film Service customer is thriving, too. Some of you are skeptical. That's why you don't make more profit! Look back over my record and you'll find that I've more than made good every promise. That's what I'm still doing.
